Mr. RUSSELL. I was sure that the Senator would not argue that the bill is not an uncontroversial one. When the majority leader of the Senate opposes consideration of a bill, that fact in itself makes it a controversial matter. Mr. President, some Senators are more prone to commit themselves about measures than are others, and it may be that the majority of the members of the committee are committed to this bill. I have heard it so stated, and I am not in position to deny it. But I know that there are other Senators who are opposed to the measure being enacted into law, and are opposed to it being considered and being made the unfinished business of the Senate. I apprehend that before final action is taken on the bill it will be clearly established that the measure is a controversial one.

Not only has the measure been the subject of controversy in the committee, but it has been widely discussed throughout the country. It has been the subject of editorial comment in some of the great daily newspapers of the United States. Undoubtedly, some of the newspaper reporters had a much better opportunity to follow the hearings before the committee than did the Members of the Senate who are not members of the Interstate Commerce Committee. All of us know our time is so consumed with attendance at committee hearings and meetings that it is next to impossible for Senators to find time to attend hearings of committees on which they do not hold membership, regardless of their interest in the subject matter of the legislation which may be under consideration.

Mr. President, I have in my hand an editorial from a great newspaper published in the Middle West, the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, an editorial which came to my attention a few weeks ago, and impressed me so much that I laid it aside for further reference. I shall read the editorial to show, if there is any doubt remaining, that this is a very controversial bill. The editorial is entitled "A Breach of Antitrust," and I now read from it:

A BREACH OF ANTITRUST

In a few days the Senate will decide whether the antitrust laws, the very heart of American economic policy, remain active or are opened up to repeal by progressive nullification. The Senate will either approve or kill the Bulwinkle bill, which gives common carrier transportation companies the right to fix rates jointly under certificates of exemption issued by the Interstate Commerce Commission. The measure long ago passed the House and was approved this month by the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee.

As was told in the Post-Dispatch yesterday, it is the sordid story of the tidelands oil quit-claim resolution all over again. The Bulwinkle bill was introduced to stave off the Supreme Court's decision in a suit brought by the State of Georgia, in which the Court's special master is currently hearing testimony. It is an affront to the Court's constitutional integrity; it is also, in a genuine sense, a way to abridge the rights of a State. The railroads are also fearful of the Federal Government's similar pending law suit.

It would be vicious legislation in any circumstances. A mass of evidence shows that the railroads have conspired to hold their own rates high and to reduce truck competition and eliminate barge competition. The ICC—which could have attacked such practices, has condoned, defended and even, on occasion, issued orders to support them. Hence the proviso requiring ICC approval for the antitrust exemption is of little or no worth.

I interpolate, Mr. President, to say that opinion is shared by a great many people in the United States. There are many who do not place great faith and credit in the proviso which takes the railroads from under the antitrust law, if they are to be placed merely under the Interstate Commerce Commission, and required only to secure the approval of that body. Whether there is any merit in that belief or not is beside the point. The fact that the charge is so boldly made in this newspaper shows that is a belief which is very widely shared.

I now resume reading the editorial:

The railroads (and more lately the motor carriers) have long employed such conspiratorial practices under the friendly eye of the ICC, and they plead now that the bill only honors what time has honored. Does time make virtue of evil? Commissioner Aitchison of the ICC (who recently referred to the railroads as "our clients and customers")——

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have been out of the Chamber. Will the distinguished Senator from Georgia tell me from what he is reading?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes. I stated before I started reading that I would read from an editorial appearing in the St. Louis Post Dispatch under date of June 24, 1946.

Mr. REED. I apologize to the Senator from Georgia for interrupting him.

Mr. RUSSELL. That is quite all right. I am always glad to accommodate my good friend, the Senator from Kansas. I shall be glad to furnish him any information at my disposal during the discussion of the question before us, and I am sure the Senator from Kansas will also be glad to reveal to the Senator from Georgia anything that happens to be at his hand.

Mr. REED. I fully reciprocate the good feeling of the Senator from Georgia, as he knows.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I was reading a sentence which contained a rather remarkable statement made by Commissioner Aitchison, who recently referred to the railroads as "our clients and customers." I repeat:

Commissioner Aitchison of the ICC (who recently referred to the railroads as "our clients and customers") argues that the practices has relieved the ICC from a burden of administrative work. Can the ICC's work be legally delegated? If it could, should it be delegated to the very agencies which the ICC is supposed to regulate? Other than the vanity which makes the Commissioners want to ape the Supreme Court instead of carrying out the administrative duties implied in the Interstate Commerce Act, is there any reason that the ICC's work should be delegated?

Proponents of the bill have said much about how little opposition there is from shippers. Does that mean what they say? Or does it show that shippers are ignorant of the issue and that their professional traffic counsel fear reprisals by the conspiring carriers and even by the ICC itself? And even if every shipper in the country did actually favor the bill, does it follow by any means that a bill to uphold and raise rates does not work against larger public interests?

Like the fire insurance companies before them, the railroads seek from Congress a vast special privilege under which they can dictate terms. That is bad enough in itself. And, as Senator WHEELER pointed in dissent, "We may now have other corporations coming here and getting approval of some bureau to their acts, and no longer be subject to the antitrust laws."

Granted, the Congress must somehow resolve the conflict between antitrust policy and the necessity of controlling competition among the carriers. Granted, too, since they are interconnected, that a degree of joint action by the carriers is indispensable. These needs, however, can be filled only after the Supreme Court has taken their exact measure in the pending litigation. And before a tolerable solution can be reached, the ICC, which is also on trial for past conduct, will need a clearer policy instruction from Congress than it now has.

The Bulwinkle bill would resolve the conflict, true enough, but it would do so only by making conspiracy legal and by blessing the questionable past course and present policy of the ICC. The Senate should therefor vote it down. If the Senate does not, President Truman should veto it in a message so plainly stated that there will be no temptation to override.

Mr. President, that editorial sums up the fears of some of us with respect to the bill proposed to be taken up for consideration by the Senate. It certainly buttresses and supports the contention of Senators who have doubts about the proposed legislation that they are entitled to have an opportunity to read the hearings before the committee in order that they may arrive at an informed conclusion.

I say, Mr. President, that a measure in this position should not be considered here in the closing hours of the Congress, when there is no emergency which requires us to depart from the customs which have obtained in the Senate for many years.

I have a great deal of faith in some of the Senators who are supporting the proposed legislation. I know how well schooled is the Senator from Kansas in all transportation matters. I understood from a question propounded by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HAWKES] this morning that he is supporting the Bulwinkle bill: I have not, during the years I have been a Member of the Senate, ever served with a man who has more political courage and more determination to do that which his judgment tells him to do than the distinguished Senator from New Jersey. This measure is also supported by the able Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HOEY], who is a member of the committee I have a great deal of respect for his opinion. But, Mr. President, in the last analysis, Senators are supposed to vote upon their own judgment which is formed after the best study they can find time to give to pending legislation, and not upon the opinions of those who are supporting any piece of legislation.

This measure, in my opinion, is most far-reaching in its consequences. I apprehend that if we set a pattern here of suspending the antitrust laws in the case of the railroads the Congress will then be confronted with a flood of legislation to suspend or modify the antitrust laws in the case of almost every other great combination of business in this country. What answer could we make in the case of radio stations or radio chains, for example, if they were to present a measure which would enable them in effect to determine who should hold licenses to operate radio stations in the several towns, or to relieve them from the consequences of the antitrust laws, and to freeze out all the little independent operators who have filed applications for licenses to erect radio stations?

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. HILL. In line with what the Senator from Georgia has just said, I call his attention to the language in the minority views, page 3, as follows:

Thus, not only would combinations of carriers participating in agreements for joint and concerted action be immunized from the antitrust laws, but their bankers and financiers—

I pause long enough to say that Senators may recall something of the history of the financing and banking of the railroad empire; they may recall the investigations and findings of the Pujo committee some years ago, and the findings of the so-called Pecora committee—I believe the Senator from Georgia was a Member of the Senate at the time—which was presided over by the then distinguished senior Senator from Florida, the late Senator Fletcher. Mr. Pecora of New York was the counsel for the committee. We recall the exposures made by those two committees. We recall at a later date the exposures by the Wheeler investigating committee. Incidentally, the present President of the United States, as I recall, sat as a member of that investigating committee and did yeoman service. We know the story of the financing of the railroads, and what it has resulted in, what it has meant in the way of loss of millions and billions of dollars to honest people. The railroads have largely been owned and controlled by two great banking houses, the House of Morgan, and Kuhn, Loeb & Co.

I read further from the minority views:

Thus not only would combinations of carriers participating in agreements for joint and concerted action be immunized from antitrust laws but their bankers and financiers, manufacturers of railroad and other carrier equipment, and powerful shippers, taking joint or concerted action pursuant to and in conformity with the carriers' agreement, would be immunized from the antitrust laws.

The bill in question would not only take out from under the antitrust laws the railroads, but bankers and financiers, manufacturers of railroad and other equipment, and powerful shippers might work themselves in or come in under these agreements. They might get out from under the antitrust laws. I ask the Senator from Georgia whether that is not true?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the Senator from Alabama has well stated that the railroads are largely controlled by a few individuals. Whoever controls the transportation in the United States controls all the course of industry and of business in the United States. He who controls the freight rates of the railroads can determine the competitive power of almost any enterprise in this land. A certain section of the country will have an advantageous freight rate, but the South or the West may be doomed to an agricultural economy. Such control will mean that there will be no opportunity to have a flourishing industrial movement in some sections that will compete with industry in other sections.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. HILL. In other words, the fight which the Senator from Georgia is leading on the floor today is a fight to preserve and maintain in the United States a free economy and the American free enterprise system. Is that not true?

Mr. RUSSELL. We are attempting to make sure that every section of the country shall have an opportunity to share in industrial development, and not permit, through the monopolistic workings of freight rates, one section to retain an advantage which it has maintained so long, to the disadvantage of other sections. It is proposed by this bill to take the railroads out from under the antitrust laws, and, at a time when we can see the hope of victory on the far horizon, to turn us back to the tender mercies of J. P. Morgan and Wall Street.

Mr. HILL. Is it not also true that this proposed legislation is not really to the advantage of those who are in what are considered to be the favored sections of the country, because the great consuming masses in those sections, the rank and file of people should have the right to buy the goods they need, the products they need, at the most favorable prices they can. This bill would make for scarcity, for high prices, and would deny to the great masses of the people the products they need to buy at the most favorable prices.

Mr. RUSSELL. I agree with the Senator from Alabama, and I know that every citizen of the United States, wherever is his place of residence, has a vital stake in preventing any whittling away of the antitrust laws, in preventing any private enterprise to be choked to death or swallowed up by vast financial combines, against whom the antitrust laws are their only protection.

Mr. President, there can be no question that the economic disparity between the several sections of the United States has been largely accentuated through the control which is exercised by those who dominate the railroads of the country. They have been enabled, through the power to fix rates, through the power to combine and conspire, to say which sections should be blessed with industrial development and which should be relegated to a purely agricultural economy. Areas in the far West and areas in the Southern States have for a long time been conscious of this unholy and undemocratic power which affects the life of every citizen of those States and sections. They have cried out for equality. For many years a fight has been waged by the Southern States, through their governors, in the effort to secure fair treatment in the fixing of transportation rates. The distinguished Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HOEY], while he was Governor of his State, was one of those who filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission the three original complaints which gave us for the first time any semblance of parity or equality with the "Official territory" or the other sections of the country in respect to having equal freight rates. They did at least secure equality of treatment with respect to commodity rates. We are still being discriminated against in respect to other classifications.

The able Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON], as Governor of his State, and the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK] participated in this struggle, which we have waged against fearful odds, to be admitted to equality with the other sections of the country, to have the same opportunity to develop, the same opportunity to earn a livelihood, the same opportunity to enjoy the blessings of our modern-day civilization that are enjoyed by the people who live in other sections.

More recently, Mr. President, the State of Georgia, proceeding under the clause of the Constitution which permits a State to sue in the Supreme Court as a court of original jurisdiction, has brought suit against a large number of railroad companies and common carriers, seeking to enjoin the conspiracy, which this bill, the Bulwinkle bill, will sanctify and validate, if it is enacted into law, and seeking to protect the citizens of that State, and of other States similarly situated, against discrimination.

I shall not read all of this action, nor all the Supreme Court's decision thereon; but I wish to advert briefly to some of the allegations which are contained in the proceedings or motion and complaint which were filed with the Supreme Court:

> 3. First count: The State of Georgia, suing in its capacity as a sovereign, is charged with the government of its citizens, the maintenance of law and order within its domain, and the promotion of the general welfare of its people.
> (a) The very purpose for which it exists, as set forth in the preamble to the State constitution, is "to perpetuate the principles of free government, insure justice to all, preserve peace, promote the interest and happiness of the citizen, and transmit to posterity the enjoyment of liberty."

The first count proceeds to set forth that the State of Georgia, like any other State, has the duty to—> formulate, revise, and administer policies designed to foster its agriculture, promote its manufacture, encourage its commerce, advance the progress of its useful arts, bring into use its wealth and natural resources, secure to its people opportunity, full employment, and an advancing standard of living, shape the policy of its State economy toward a more abundant life, and link its industrial system into a truly national economy.

In the second count the State appeared in its capacity as a quasi sovereign or as agent and protector of its people against the continuing wrong done to the people of Georgia as an organized community in their liberties, properties, and estates.

The third count was brought by the State in its proprietary capacity. It is founded upon the fact that the State is the owner of a railroad and operates various institutions, and thereby the State itself suffers a direct injury through discriminatory rates. In the third count also sets forth an illustration to show the way in which the people of the State of Georgia and the State itself are penalized by the unfair rate structure which this suit seeks to remedy. I quote now from the pleadings:

> Illustrative of the damages suffered by the State of Georgia as a result of excessive and illegal freight rates is a shipment from Bucyrus, Ohio, to East Point, Ga., under date of May 22, 1944, in which the State of Georgia paid the freight on two road graders purchased by and shipped to the State at the freight rate of 79 cents per 100 pounds of weight. The weight of these machines was 4,800 pounds, and at the rate of 79 cents per 100 pounds charged by the defendant, the freight amounted to $379.20, which amount was paid by the State of Georgia. The Official rate for transporting the same road grades a like distance in Official Territory was and is 56 cents per 100 pounds. At the Official rate—> the State of Georgia would have paid the sum of $268.80 rather than the sum of $379.20.

So, Mr. President, in the case of only two road graders we find a discrimination amounting to around $110 in respect to a shipment from a town in the great State of Ohio to the city of Atlanta, Ga.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. In connection with the matter now under discussion, I desire to read a telegram. The telegram is dated today, and was sent at Cincinnati, Ohio. It is addressed to me, and reads as follows:

> We urge enactment Bulwinkle bill, H. R. 2536.
> GEORGE M. HARRISON,
> Grand President, Brotherhood of Railway and Steamship Clerks, Freight Handlers, Express and Station Employees.

Mr. President, I may say that the reason why Mr. Harrison, an employee of the railroads, and representing the employees of the railroads, wants this bill passed is to furnish more employment for the railroad men who need employment.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I am somewhat at a loss to know how they expect a bill of this kind to increase employment. I am quite certain that Mr. Harrison has been sold a bill of goods by a smart attorney for the railroad lines, just as I am certain that some Senators were sold a bill of goods, because if the antitrust laws, insofar as they apply to the railroads, are to be repealed, the railroads would be permitted to determine which of them should survive and which of them should not survive, and in a short time only a few railroads would be operating, and the others would go into a decline.

Of course, Mr. President, this bill might help the railroads, because of the unusual power it would give them over the barge lines and the bus lines. I have heard it stated that under the conspiracy which would be carried on under the terms of this measure, water transportation would almost be eliminated in the United States, and the bus lines would be hit a staggering blow. That would contribute to the welfare of the railroad lines, but certainly it would not contribute to the happiness and welfare of the people of the United States, who need a balanced transportation system and water and bus lines over the entire country.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield to me?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. George Harrison is one of the ablest and brightest of the men who represent the railroad employees. Of course, Mr. Harrison knows that the bill does not provide for any of the things the Senator from Georgia states it does provide for. Mr. Harrison knows that unless legislation of this kind is enacted, if the Department of Justice proceeds to prosecute the public-regulated utilities to the extent that the Department of Justice threatens to do in connection with the suits which have been referred to, the railroads are not going to operate and are not going to be able to operate; and when the railroads go out of business, of course the employees will lose their jobs.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield for a question?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. I should like to have the Senator state his conception of the Interstate Commerce Commission. We have such a Commission because it is conceded that public utilities are monopolies. If that Commission is not functioning properly, we should know it.

But I can see no reason to take its jurisdiction away from it at this time, on the ground that we now want to try to keep the railroads from getting together. Inherently they must get together, and the Commission is there to prevent abuse resulting from their getting together.

All the evils the Senator from Georgia is referring to are supposed to be taken care of by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. RUSSELL. I should like to have the distinguished Senator from New Jersey, who of course knows more about the Interstate Commerce Commission than I do, point out where there is anything in the Interstate Commerce Act which allows the Commission to prevent a conspiracy between carriers. Such a conspiracy is prevented by the antitrust laws.

The purpose of this bill is to deny the citizens the right to have such a conspiracy prevented.

Mr. SMITH. I must say to the Senator from Georgia that I think it is obvious that the Interstate Commerce Commission is established for the purpose of handling such matters as this.

Mr. President, allow me to read from the minority views.

> Approval of agreements permitting the industry to organize into combinations and by joint action to make determinations of such wide scope would constitute a delegation to private groups completely to cartelize transportation.

But it cannot be done unless the Interstate Commerce Commission is a party to it. I am only wondering whether the distinguished Senator is suggesting that the Interstatae Commerce Commission has fallen down on its job.

Mr. RUSSELL. If the Senator had done me the honor to listen to my remarks when I read the editorial from the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, he would have heard me say that there are many persons in this country who do not believe that the Interstate Commerce Commission has fully discharged its responsibilities in dealing with many of the matters which come before it.

Mr. SMITH. I am wondering if the Senator is aligning himself with those who are now criticizing the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I have been criticizing the Interstate Commerce Commission for 20 years.

Mr. SMITH. Then; that is really the issue before us.

Mr. RUSSELL. I have been criticizing the Interstate Commerce Commission for 20 years. They have created a situation in connection with the rate structure which gives the Senator's State, which is in the "official territory," an unquestioned advantage over other sections which are not within the "official territory." The Interstate Commerce Commission has approved rates in some sections which are detrimental to other sections. I have criticized the Interstate Commerce Commission ever since I have had knowledge of the unfair system which it follows. I do not believe any State would ever have received any measure of equality in connection with freight rates had it not been for the constant prodding of the Congress of the United States, and also that great man, Franklin D. Roosevelt, who did all he could reasonably do to encourage and to force the Interstate Commerce Commission to recognize that there are parts of the United States other than those contained within the "official territory," in which the Senator from New Jersey resides.

Mr. SMITH. Will the Senator start with this premise? Public utilities are, by their nature, monopolies. We are not attacking monopolies. We are saying that they are equalized under our Interstate Commerce Act and our public utilities acts. The way in which we try to control them is to give the commission power to prevent abuses.

The Senator is apparently not attacking that principle, but is attacking what he believes to be abuse on the part of the Interstate Commerce Commission of its authority. Am I correct?

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator has not stated exactly my position. I believe that the Interstate Commerce Commission has failed in its duty. But, not only that, I do not believe that any economic segment of the Nation, whether it be a monopoly such as the railroads, or any other monopoly, should be exempted from the antitrust laws and prosecution thereunder, and placed under an agency of government which has no power to impose any penal provisions upon them.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. In connection with what the Senator from New Jersey has said, I should like to state that recently the Interstate Commerce Commission ruled that rates in the "southern territory" should be reduced 10 percent and in the "official territory" they should be increased 10 percent. The rate which was to be changed had been in effect for years. It has been shown by the ruling that rates in the "official territory" had been too low and in another section of the country they had been too high. That was demonstrated by the ruling of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The ruling was appealed to the courts and the courts sustained the ruling. I cannot say that the Commission has been entirely right in the past. We must bear in mind that the Interstate Commerce Commission, when it is confronted with the necessity of passing on various and sundry rates and tariffs which are submitted to it, if the proposals are not contested, as a usual thing the Commission gives its approval. In many instances the Commission does not know what took place behind closed doors. That being the fact, if this bill should be enacted into law and it were found that an illegal rate had been fixed, no court in the land could consider it, could it?

Mr. SMITH. My reply is that none of us would favor discrimination against territories. Let us not imply that the Interstate Commerce Commission is to blame for all the alleged difficulties. I should like to get at the issue. If it is contended by some that their States are being discriminated against, let us make that the issue. The argument which is being made implies that the railroads are not monopolies. They must be monopolies. The reason we have an Interstate Commerce Commission is to prevent them from abusing their powers.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. But the rate structure has grown up through the years and it was approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. REED. The Senator from Kansas does not desire to get into any argument about discrimination, but my silence in connection with the Southern rate case is not to be taken as an indication of an agreement with the Senator from Georgia. I think the Senator from Georgia did not correctly state the purport of this bill. I know he will pardon me for interrupting him in order to deal with that point only.

Mr. RUSSELL. I shall be glad to have the Senator from Kansas state his version of the bill. I have been endeavoring to obtain a copy of the hearings so that I would be in position to draw a clear construction of the bill, but I have not been able to do so thus far.

Mr. REED. The Senator from Georgia spoke of the inability of the Interstate Commerce Commission to correct some of these alleged abuses because they might be things over which the Commission did not have jurisdiction.

Mr. RUSSELL. What I intended to say was that if the Interstate Commerce Commission approved the agreement entered into between the carriers, they would be silenced without regard to whether there was a conspiracy or not. But if we take the railroads out from under the antitrust laws and place them under this bill, they are given immunity from prosecution in the courts.

Mr. REED. The Interstate Commerce Commission's authority to grant any exemptions is confined to those matters over which the Commission has jurisdiction. Is the Senator from Georgia familiar with that part of the bill?

Mr. RUSSELL. I thought the language was very sweeping with reference to equipment, rates, the departure of trains, the fares to be charged the passengers, and so forth. Certainly the bill confers important powers to rate-making bureaus in dealing with almost everything concerning public transportation.

Mr. REED. The Interstate Commerce Commission Act, in its present form, gives jurisdiction to the Commission over all matters relating to rates, fares, and so forth. In this bill the Commission would be given power only to issue a certificate of approval in connection with all matters over which the Commission has full jurisdiction. Does the Senator from Georgia agree with that statement?

Mr. RUSSELL. I think it is a fair statement.

Mr. REED. The Senator from Kansas makes a distinction as to the class of cases which might be brought to the attention of the Commission. Allow me to give an illustration of what the Senator from Kansas has in mind. Suppose the railroads got together and agreed to buy all the steel mills so that they could obtain their required steel, of which they are large consumers, perhaps at a lower price than they have been paying. The Interstate Commerce Commission would have no jurisdiction over that situation, would it?

Mr. RUSSELL. I am not an expert on Interstate Commerce Commission law, but I should not think that the Interstate Commerce Commission would have jurisdiction. However, I do not know.

Mr. REED. The Commission does not have jurisdiction, so the approval of the Commission in that case would have no possible weight. The only way to handle a case of that kind is under the antitrust laws, or some other statute.

Allow me to read section (9), on page 6, of the bill:

> No agreement approved by the Commission under this section, and no conference or joint or concerted action pursuant to and in conformity with such agreement as the same may be conditioned by the Commission, shall be deemed to be a contract, combination, conspiracy, or monopoly in restraint of trade or commerce within the meaning of the antitrust laws: Provided, however, That this paragraph shall not apply to agreements, or parts thereof, dealing with matters over which the Commission has no jurisdiction.

In other words, if the subject matter is one with reference to which there is an allegation of wrong having been committed, the Interstate Commerce Commission has no power to grant any immunity unless the particular subject is within the jurisdiction of the Commission. If it is within the jurisdiction of the Commission, there is no place for a citizen to go for relief except to the Commission.

Mr. President, if the Senator from Georgia will permit me to interrupt him further, when this bill left the House of Representatives there was doubt about some of the limitations on the subjects to which consideration might be given. In the Senate committee the bill was amended so as to limit the subjects on which the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission would be requested to the matters which are specifically imposed upon the carriers by the national transportation policy in the Interstate Commerce Act. With the permission of the Senator from Georgia, I should like to read the subjects, and the only subjects, which might be considered in these conferences, and be submitted to the Interstate Commerce Commission for approval. I read from page 2:

> Any carrier, party to an agreement between or among two or more carriers concerning, or providing rules or regulations pertaining to or procedures for the consideration, initiation, or—

Now we come to the matters with which the Commission may deal and which it may approve—> establishment of, rates, fares, charges (including charges as between carriers), classifications, divisions, allowances, time schedules, routes, the interchange of facilities, the settlement of claims, the promotion of safety, or the promotion of adequacy, economy, or efficiency of operation or service.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, if the Senator from Georgia will permit me, I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas a question. As I listened to the language read, the Commission would have the power to approve any agreements on rates. Is that true?

Mr. REED. That is correct.

Mr. McMAHON. There is provision for a hearing on the rates after they are agreed to?

Mr. REED. After the rates are filed, no matter whether they are filed by an individual railroad, or by a publishing agent, or by a rate bureau, any party, shipper, or any other, may always ask that those rates be suspended.

Mr. McMAHON. How many individual rates are there, in the Senator's opinion, in the railroad schedules of the country?

Mr. REED. The number of individual rates contained in the tariffs filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission run into the billions.

Mr. McMAHON. Into the billions?

Mr. REED. Billions.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. In a moment. This morning the Senator from Kansas referred to the fact that in a given year, for which we had a report, the Interstate Commerce Commission was estimated to have 500,000 tariffs on file, and the number of individual changes filed annually ran, on an average, from 79,000, as the Senator from Kansas recalls, to 135,000 or 140,000. That is the number of changes which are annually made, and the total number of tariffs in the year to which reference was made was 500,000. A tariff may contain one rate, it may contain 100,000 rates, depending on its character and scope.

Mr. McMAHON. These agreements obviously have to be handled administratively then. They cannot be the subject of a trial on their reasonableness before a jury.

Mr. REED. Indeed not.

Mr. McMAHON. There would be the absurd result of a jury sitting and hearing evidence on the reasonableness of a rate in a criminal prosecution, would there not?

Mr. REED. That result might be produced. If the division of authority were made, such a result might follow.

Mr. McMAHON. In other words, the Senator from Kansas is pointing out that it is not possible to try the reasonableness of a couple of billion separate rates before juries all over the United States to test their reasonableness?

Mr. REED. That is correct.

Mr. McMAHON. The Interstate Commerce Commission is the body which has been created by the Congress of the United States to protect the public against rate dodging by the railroads?

Mr. REED. That is correct.

Mr. McMAHON. The procedure which has been established from time immemorial is not interfered with by this bill. Am I correct in that?

Mr. REED. That is absolutely correct.

Mr. McMAHON. Let us take the other agreements which are provided for in the proposed legislation, which are to be within the sole province of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Does the proposed legislation enable the railroads of the United States to go into cahoots and into conspiracy, we will say, to keep air conditioning off the railroads? Does that come within the comprehension of the legislation?

Mr. REED. If the railroads had a conference and entered into such an agreement, under the law that agreement would be submitted to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. McMAHON. Let me interrupt the Senator. If that agreement were not submitted to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the roads attempted to carry it out, they would not be protected by the provisions of the bill?

Mr. REED. That is correct.

Mr. McMAHON. Let us assume they made such an agreement and filed it with the Commission. What would their protection be?

Mr. REED. With the permission of the Senator from Georgia, who has been very kind and generous with his time——

Mr. McMAHON. I realize I am trespassing on it, too.

Mr. RUSSELL. I find the colloquy between the distinguished Senators very illuminating.

Mr. REED. The bill provides that the object of the agreement must be appropriate to the proper performance of a carrier's service to the public, that the agreement will not unduly restrain competition, and that it is consistent with the public interest, as declared by Congress in the national transportation policy set forth in the act.

Mr. McMAHON. If the Commission, acting under that kind of authority, as laid down in the National Transportation Act, were to say that it was in the public interest that the railroads should deprive the people of the United States of air conditioning on the railroads, the thing to do would be to get a new Interstate Commerce Commission, would it not?

Mr. REED. That is correct.

Mr. McMAHON. I feel that we are going rather far afield in the time of the Senator from Georgia, not far afield so far as the subject of debate is concerned, but in the length of time we are taking.

Mr. RUSSELL. I am glad to have the Senator discuss the subject. I was preparing to launch into a discussion of the case of the State of Georgia pending in the Supreme Court, and I did not know but that the acting majority leader, the distinguished Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], might have thought we had almost reached the usual hour of adjustment.

Mr. HILL. Does the Senator desire to conclude this part of his speech at this time?

Mr. RUSSELL. I am perfectly willing to yield to the other Senators to finish their discussion, but if we are to go into the case of the State of Georgia pending in the Supreme Court, it will take me some little time to discuss it.

Mr. HILL. I had not interrupted the distinguished Senator up to now, but a good many Senators have suggested to me that they thought that when the hour of 5 o'clock arrived this afternoon, in view of the long and tedious sessions the Senate has had this week, and this being Saturday afternoon, we might well agree to take a recess.

If the Senator does not desire to conclude at this time this phase or part of his speech, I shall be delighted to move an executive session.

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield further to the Senator from Connecticut to let him complete his statement.

Mr. McMAHON. I have a good deal more to say on this subject, which I had intended to say at a later time, but I was wondering, because I have had to be absent from the floor, whether or not Commissioner Eastman's statement on the general subject had been referred to and read into the RECORD.

Mr. REED. It is part of the report of the committee. The Senator from Kansas opened the discussion this morning with a rather brief outline of the general purposes of the bill, because at that time the question was whether or not the Senate would proceed to the consideration of the bill by adopting the motion. The Senator from Kansas later expected to discuss the bill in considerable detail, but that time has not arrived, and it seems a trifle uncertain when it will.

Mr. McMAHON. Then, in view of the intention of the acting majority leader, I think I shall take a cease-and-desist order and sit down, and thank the Senator from Georgia, and we will return on Monday to see if we cannot develop the subject further.

Mr. HILL. The Senator from Connecticut is always most gracious and accommodating.

Mr. REED. I also thank the Senator from Georgia for his generosity.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I have a matter which will take about 15 minutes, but I do not care to interfere with the intention of the distinguished acting leader, and I shall let it go over until Monday if that is desired.

Mr. HILL. Is it agreeable to the Senator from Montana to let it go over until Monday?

Mr. MURRAY. Yes; it is.

OLD-AGE VARIABLE GRANTS

During the delivery of Mr. RUSSELL'S speech,

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield to me?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I just learned a moment ago that the Committee on Finance has ordered to be reported out House bill 7037, a bill to amend the Social Security Act and the Internal Revenue Code, and for other purposes, and has adopted to that bill an amendment, the substance of the bill which I introduced last December 4 in the form of Senate bill 1653.

I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD an explanation by me of Senate bill 1653, which is applicable to the amendment to the bill (H. R. 7037), which has been ordered to be reported by the Committee on Finance. I also ask that immediately following the explanation there may be printed in the RECORD a letter from the Chairman of the Social Security Board, of date April 10, 1946, which also explains the purpose of the amendment, and that there also may be printed in the RECORD two letters—one from the Honorable Robert S. Kerr, Governor of the State of Oklahoma, and one from the Honorable Jim McCord, Governor of the State of Tennessee—giving what I think are typical statements by many governors regarding this bill. In fact, I have 23 or 24 letters similar to these, but I see no reason to have them all inserted in the RECORD at this time.

There being no objection, the statement and letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OLD-AGE VARIABLE GRANTS

(Statement by Senator J. W. FULBRIGHT, of Arkansas, in behalf of an amendment to H. R. 7037, to provide for more equitable Federal contributions to States for old-age assistance based on the per-capita income in each State in proportion to the national income)

The amendment I have introduced and which has been approved by the Committee on Finance is designed to relieve existing inequalities in the application of Federal old-age assistance to citizens residing in States where local governments are unable to meet the Federal contributions available in more wealthy States.

There should be no penalty on the aged needy because they happen to reside in a section of the Nation where the per capita income will not permit the State and local governments to meet Federal contributions. The cost of living is practically the same, and in many sections of our country these old people do not now receive an amount sufficient to provide the bare necessities of life. In these communities the local taxpayers already pay mare in proportion to those residing in more wealthy sections, and it is beyond their ability to meet the increased taxes required to provide actual needs. If provision is made so they may take advantage of the Federal contributions available, it will go a long way to relieve this deplorable condition.

Under present laws, with the Federal Government contributing an amount equal to that appropriated or authorized by the State in which a claimant happens to live without regard to the cost of living or what the pensioner needs for a minimum standard of living, persons residing in the poorer States are denied the essentals of life. For the entire Nation, the average monthly payment to needy old people is $31.32 per month, but in 9 of the 12 lowest-income States the average, in spite of substantial increases in recent years which has cost the local taxpayer a far greater percentage of their income than in the wealthier States, the average is less than $20; and in 5 of those 9 States it is less than $15. In my own State the average is only $16.87.

Cost of living studies do not show large or clearly defined differences among the States and regions in the costs of identical essential needs in food, clothing, and housing. Yet, when the need is as great and the fiscal ability is low, local officials have no recourse but to reduce the payment of old-age assistance below the actual minimum cost of living. Because the welfare of each section of the country is of concern to all sections, it is believed that in meeting the actual welfare needs of our aged needy, no matter where they happen to live, the general public welfare of all the people will be improved.

The principle of granting more State aid to poorer localities has already been well established in Federal aid to education, and it would seem that, admitting the importance of aid to education, our aged poor, no matter where they live, should be given the same consideration, to enable them to secure food, clothing, and housing that is essential to human needs.

This principle has been endorsed by the Council of State Governments, the American Public Welfare Association, and other interested and informed groups. The Social Security Board has recommended to Congress that the Federal Government provide special aid for public assistance to States with low economic capacity on an objective basis.

The Chairman of the Social Security Board, in commenting on this proposal, stated that it was "in essential agreement with recommendations made by the Social Security Board for amendment of the Federal matching provisions of the Social Security Act, not only for old-age assistance but also for aid to dependent children and aid to the blind."

The Ninth Annual Report of the Social Security Board for the fiscal year 1943–44 included the following statement regarding the basis of Federal grants to States:

"Under the Social Security Act, the Federal Government matches, dollar for dollar up to a given amount a month, the assistance payment made to a needy old or blind person or a dependent child under a State plan approved by the Social Security Board. Within the limits on Federal matching, the amount of the Federal grant to the State for any of these assistance programs, therefore, is fixed by the amount provided by the State, or the State and its localities. States differ greatly in income and therefore in potential capacity to finance adequate assistance programs. In 1943 per capita income ranged from $1,452 in the high State to $484 in the State where average income was least. Average income increased in 1943 in all but one State, where it already was high, but the range and ranking remained about the same as in 1943. States with a high level of income can make relatively large appropriations for public assistance and thus qualify for relatively large Federal grants, though the extent of need among their people may be less than it is in States which can afford only small amounts and get only small Federal grants.

"Studies of the Board have led to the conclusion that differences in the economic and fiscal capacity of States are the greatest single cause of the even wider variations in levels of assistance. Among States administering public assistance under the Social Security Act, average payments for each of the three special types of assistance in June 1944 were about four times as much in the highest State as in the State where the average was lowest. In general assistance, financed wholly from State and local funds, differences were even greater, and the average in the highest State was more than six times that in the lowest.

"The average assistance payment in each State is made up, of course, of differing individual amounts, since the payment to a recipient supplements what resources he himself may have: individual assistance payments under these four programs range from a few dollars a month to—in a very few States—more than $100 for an occasional recipient in exceptional circumstances. A low average for a State might be due to the fact that the recipients on the rolls needed only small amounts to supplement what they themselves had. Actually, however, the low averages occur almost without exception in States where per capita income and fiscal resources are low. The low averages result, in general, from the meagerness of payments to persons who have little or nothing but their payments. In such States, moreover, some needy persons eligible under the State law may get no aid whatever because funds are lacking.

"The Social Security Board reaffirms a recommendation made in earlier reports that special Federal aid for public assistance be provided on an objective basis to States with low economic and fiscal capacity. Such provision is essential if standards of assistance are to be equitable and more nearly adequate in all States. Just as the Board believes that the Federal share should vary with economic capacity of the States, it believes that Federal and State funds should be distributed to localities in relation to their needs and, where the localities participate in financing, also in relation to their financial ability."

When this bill was before the House of Representatives it was pointed out by Representative COOLEY, of North Carolina, that those States which are unable to increase their appropriations for assistance to the aged residing in such States would receive no benefits whatever from the authorization in this bill; in order to qualify, they must match the Federal contributions dollar for dollar, which is simply impossible, so far as some of our poorer States are concerned. My amendment would correct this inequality.

Representative GORE, of Tennessee, in speaking in the House on this phase of the bill, commented:

"The fundamental fact stands—and the committee in their report of July 1 gave eloquent recognition of the fact—that in many States the program is operating inequitably, unjustly, and unfairly, for the simple reason that many States cannot match Federal funds already available, though the record shows that the poor States are making a relatively greater effort than the rich States. How does it operate? The proof of the pudding is in the eating. The Federal Government is now paying more than three times as much to a needy old man or woman or a blind person in one State as in another, and this bill would but worsen that inequity. Need cannot be measured by State lines."

Representative JOHN M. ROBSION, of Kentucky, stated that:

"Only a very limited number of States under the present law have been able to match the $20 of the Federal Government. Very few States pay as much as $40 for the needy aged. Kentucky, under its laws, cannot pay more than $30. It can be seen at once that Kentucky does not come up to the requirements of the present law, and this law increasing the Federal matching to $25 would not benefit the needy aged of Kentucky at all.

"I wish also to point out that under this amendment there would be approximately $27,000,000 of benefits go to the needy aged of the various States. However, the State of California would get approximately one-half of this $27,000,000, and only a very limited number of rich States would receive any benefits. An overwhelming majority of the States would be cut out entirely. I regret to say that Kentucky, on an average, pays only about $11 to the needy aged. I have stated many times that this sum is totally inadequate and there should be a substantial increase. For a real needy old person should not receive less than $30 a month, and, under the present law, they could receive $40 a month if the State of Kentucky would put up $20 a month to match the Federal funds."

The able Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCFARLAND], speaking in the Senate last January in behalf of increased aid to the aged, blind, and dependent children, said:

"What has happened in this country is that several million people—adults and children—are forced to live on an amount which in these days, of higher prices is insufficient to provide the bare necessities of life. Even supposing that every aged person or every blind person who depends upon social security payments for a living receives the maximum amount of $40 a month, will anyone contend that one can live on $40 a month in these days. Where can one buy 30 days' supply of food for $40, with staples costing what they do now? And where are rent, clothing, and the many other necessities to come from?

"Because they are not represented nationally by a union or a chamber of commerce or a trade association, we in Congress have been blind to their plight.

"I believe that when Congress passed the social-security legislation it meant what it said—social security. Certainly, the present scale of payments—even the maximum payments—do not mean social security to millions of people in this country.

"If it was social security 10 years ago, it certainly is not social security today. That much is perfectly obvious to anyone who knows anything at all about the cost of living today.

"I, for one, will not sit idly by, silently and unprotesting, while American citizens—honest, decent, worthy Americans who have worked all their lives and have reached old age without the means to live decently—are permitted to starve in a genteel manner. That is what is happening to many of them today."

I agree entirely with the observations of the Senator from Arizona, and feel that, as much as I am in favor of this Nation giving aid to starving peoples all over the world, wherever there is hunger and need, I, nevertheless, believe that such aid should be granted on a basis of actual need and not because of their geographical homes. It is only logical, therefore, that the same principle should apply in our own Nation, and that our own people who need food, clothing and other essentials should have our first consideration.

The formula for additional Federal aid to the aged needy contained in my amendment is essentially the same as that in the Hospital Survey and Construction Act recently approved by the Senate. I submit herewith, for the information of the Senate, a letter from the Chairman of the Social Security Board explaining the proposal, and also a chart showing the application of the amendment to the various States. This table shows that at present 17 States would have an income that is above the average national income, and would receive no additional benefits under such a formula, but the remainder of the States would qualify for increased Federal contributions, running up to as high as 75 percent, in the case of the State of Mississippi. My own State of Arkansas would receive 74 percent Federal contributions instead of the present 50 percent.

This is not, however, a sectional issue, since Vermont and New Hampshire, New England States, are confronted with the same discrimination, qualifying for 57 and 60 percent contribution, respectively, under this amendment, as are some of the Western States, such as Arizona, South Dakota (59 percent) and others where there is the same essential need as in the Southern States. I believe that Members of the Senate who take the time to study this problem and its ramifications will agree that it is unfair that States with a higher per capita income should receive a greater amount from the Federal Government for the benefit of its needy citizens than other States which are less able to take care of the residents of these particular States—they are all citizens of the United States and entitled to equal consideration and treatment under the law.

The present discrimination against citizens who happen to reside in agricultural States, as against those who live in industrial areas where the income is higher, is not in accordance with the accepted American traditions. If these people who have devoted their lives to supplying the Nation with food and raw materials for their essential requirements have been underpaid and received less than a fair return for their labors during a lifetime, certainly our Nation should not continue to deny them the adjustments to which they have long been entitled, or be so callous as to deprive them of the very necessities of life when they are no longer able to work the long hours at hard labor to which they have been accustomed all their lives. We have always given an ear and a helping hand to the needy, no matter from whence they came; it is time we acted to help our own.

If the amendment, providing for old-age variable grants, is approved by the Congress, I shall then endeavor to procure the enactment of similar amendments to the Social Security Act for the blind, and for dependent children, to bring about a more equitable system of Federal aid to these groups as well as to our aged needy.

FEDERAL SECURITY AGENCY,
SOCIAL SECURITY BOARD,
Washington, D. C., April 10, 1946.

Hon. J. W. FULBRIGHT,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR FULBRIGHT: This is in reply to your letter of March 14. The particular formula for Federal grants to the States used in the bill which you introduced (S. 1653) is the same for all low-income States as that used in S. 191, the Hospital Survey and Construction Act, recently passed by the Senate. I am attaching a copy of the Senate committee report which shows on page 16 in the column headed "Federal percentage" that Arkansas would receive from the Federal Government 74 percent of its total expenditures. Under your bill, of course, no State would receive less than 50 percent from the Federal Government while under S. 191 the minimum is 33⅓ percent.

It is my personal opinion that the particular formula included in your bill is the best of all the various formulas I have seen which use per capita income as a basis of varying the Federal Government's contribution. Of course, the question as to the minimum and maximum amounts of the Federal contribution is a question of broad policy which the Congress must decide in the light of various considerations, such as the relation to other Federal-State programs, and cost to the Federal Treasury.

Sincerely yours,

A. J. ALTMEYER,
Chairman.

STATE OF OKLAHOMA,
OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR,
Oklahoma City, Okla., December 17, 1945.

Hon. J. W. FULBRIGHT,
United States Senator,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR FULBRIGHT: I want to thank you for your letter of December 7 with which you sent me a copy of a bill (S. 1653) which you have introduced in the United States Senate, together with your statement—the bill and your statement relating to the matter of computing the amounts of grants to States for old-age assistance on the basis of the financial resources of the several States.

You are to be commended for introducing this bill. Such legislation, making provision for a substantial increase in old-age assistance allowances, through additional Federal computation and without further cost to the States, will be appropriately helpful.

I will indeed be glad to go over the matter of your bill with our Oklahoma delegation.

With all good wishes, I am,

Sincerely yours,

ROBT. S. KERR.

TENNESSEE EXECUTIVE OFFICE,
Nashville, December 14, 1945.

Hon. J. W. FULBRIGHT,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR BILL: I have your letter and copy of bill S. 1653 and the very interesting statement.

I have gone over this bill with the Commissioner of the department of public welfare and we feel that there is a world of merit in it. There is to be a meeting of welfare commissioners of several Southern States in Birmingham in the near future and at this meeting most serious consideration will be given to the endorsement of your bill. I appreciate very much your thoughtfulness in sending me this copy and I am glad to tell you that the welfare department of my State is pleased with it.

Thank you for the personal note, and while I am glad I am not in Washington at this time, I must admit there is a lot going on around here all the time. I hope that you can drop in sometime and have a little visit with us.

With sincere good wishes for a happy holiday season, I am

Sincerely,

JIM (Jim McCord).

GOVERNMENT-OWNED INDUSTRIAL ALCOHOL PLANTS

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield to me?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of calendar 1776, Senate Joint Resolution 166, to amend section 3126 of the Internal Revenue Code, as amended, and for other purposes. The reason I ask for the present consideration of the joint resolution is that the measure has not passed the House, and I am informed that unless we can get it through today and get it over to the House, so that the House Ways and Means Committee can consider it, it will probably be too late to have action on it at this session.

The joint resolution is a very simple one. I have discussed it, I think, with every Senator on the Republican side who is interested in the matter. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER] was one of the original sponsors of a bill similar to this which was passed by the Senate.

The joint resolution pertains particularly to an alcohol plant in Nebraska, one in Iowa, and one in Kansas City. There is none in the State of Arkansas. It also relates to plants producing rubber. The only purpose of this measure is to hold up the disposition of these plants pending the working out of a complete program for them. It does not propose to dispose of them. It would merely delay their disposal. Under the law, as I understand, unless the measure can be passed the contract with the plant in Omaha, Nebr., requires its disposal, that is the offering of it for sale on September 26, and I think it is exceedingly important to all agriculture that the Government be given an opportunity to work out a plan to retain one of these plants for the experimentation with and disposal of surplus agricultural products. That is the only reason why I feel it is very important that it be called up and disposed of now, so that the House will have an opportunity to act upon it next week.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I wish to thank the distinguished Senator from Arkansas for the interest he has shown in the joint resolution. I deeply regret that the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER] is not present, because he has taken an interest in this development in Nebraska since it began. I am in total agreement with the distinguished Senator from Arkansas of the need for having the measure passed this afternoon. If it is not passed this afternoon it is my opinion that it will be almost impossible to have it passed by the House before the adjournment of the Congress.

It does exactly what the distinguished Senator says it does relative to the needs of the community. I believe that otherwise the plant at Omaha would have to close in 30 days.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I think the date is September 26. I believe I have a letter to that effect.

Mr. WHERRY. I have read the bill, and I attended some of the hearings. I am just as much interested as is the senior Senator from Nebraska. The joint resolution provides that the plants mentioned shall not be disposed of until a definite policy is laid down relative to their disposal.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. The joint resolution would protect the plants and enable them to continue in operation without interference until the policy is laid down.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I happen to know about this particular plant. It has already processed 5,000 carloads of surplus potatoes this year, which the Government had to take anyway. No other disposition was possible. Sirup has been made in the plant from wet corn. At this moment sugar is in exceedingly short supply. The plant is doing an important work, as it did during the war, and it should be enabled to continue for another year.

Mr. WHERRY. I am glad to hear the Senator mention the subject of wet corn. That is one of the things which I wish to emphasize. In the event we have an early frost, a method for processing corn sirup is certainly needed. That is how we obtain a large part of our sugar. There should be nothing to hold up the operation of that plant until the policy for its final disposition is determined. I hope there will be no objection to the joint resolution. I know that it is badly needed, and that it ought to be passed. I am quite satisfied that no Senator on this side of the aisle will object.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 166) to amend section 3126 of the Internal Revenue Code, as amended, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 2, on page 2, line 6, after the word "and", it is proposed to insert "one of."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That section 3126 (a) of the Internal Revenue Code, as amended (relating to emergency production of sugars and sirups in industrial-alcohol plants), is amended by striking out "July 1, 1946" and inserting in lieu thereof "December 31, 1947."

SEC. 2. Pending establishment of a permanent rubber policy and a structure for national rubber supervision along with administrative methods by which a minimum use of general-purpose synthetic rubber can best be assured, and until further plans for disposal of industrial-alcohol and alcohol-butadiene plants have been perfected, no disposition shall be made of the Government-owned industrial-alcohol plants located at Omaha, Nebr.; Kansas City, Mo.; Muscatine, Iowa; and one of the alcohol-butadiene plants located at Kobuta, Pa.; Louisville, Ky.; and Institute, W. Va.

HOWARD A. YEAGER

Mr. CARVILLE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. CARVILLE. Mr. President, at the conclusion of the consideration of the bill which I shall ask to have considered, I expect to ask unanimous consent to be excused from the Senate for an indefinite period.

I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 2147, Calendar No. 1827, a bill for the relief of Howard A. Yeager. It is a private-claim bill. It refers to a trip made by Captain Yeager to Nevada to present to our State the flag of the U. S. S. Nevada, which was taken from the ship after it was sunk at Pearl Harbor. The bill involves an appropriation of $255.76.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, as I understand, this is a relief bill?

Mr. CARVILLE. It is a relief bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 2147) for the relief of Howard A. Yeager was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Howard A. Yeager, captain, United States Navy, the sum of $255.76, which sum is to be in full settlement of all claims against the United States for travel performed by the said Howard A. Yeager under orders during the period from June 17, 1945, to June 23, 1945, from Salina, Kans., to Carson City, Nev., in order to present the Nevada State flag which was on board the U. S. S. Nevada on Pearl Harbor Day to the people of the State of Nevada so that said flag might be preserved by them in the Nevada State Museum, and thence to Washington, D. C.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

RIO GRANDE BRIDGE, DEL RIO, TEX.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 6406, Calendar No. 1792. It is a bridge bill, and will require only half a minute.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I object.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I am not trying to kill time I may have to leave the city next week.

Mr. REED. The Senator from Kansas appreciates the situation of the Senator from Texas——

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator did not object to other requests.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. GURNEY. Let me say that during the absence from the Chamber during the last few minutes of the Senator from Kansas one or two small noncontroversial bills were passed. In view of that fact, and in view of the importance of this bill to the Senator from Texas, I hope the Senator from Kansas will withdraw his objection, because I am sure that the consideration of the bill will require only a moment.

Mr. REED. I withdraw the objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 6406) authorizing the State of Texas, acting through the State Highway Commission of Texas, or the successors thereof, to acquire, construct, maintain, and operate a free bridge across the Rio Grande at or near Del Rio, Tex.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

VETERANS' CANTEEN SERVICE IN THE VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield to me?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I do not know what the purpose of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] is. I wish to be generous with my colleagues. But if any technical points are to be raised, I do not wish to lose my right to the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to submit a request without taking the Senator from Georgia from the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. At the last call of the calendar House bill 6836 was passed. I do not know what the calendar number is. The bill is not now on the calendar. It was on the calendar when the calendar was last called. The bill was passed by unanimous consent. After it was passed, General Bradley personally stated that a brief amendment which was inserted in the bill on the floor of the House had made the bill inoperative. The purpose of the bill is to establish and provide for the maintenance and operation of a veterans' canteen service in the Veterans' Administration, and for other purposes. It is quite an important bill, and a very worthy one. It is desired to establish a canteen service in the hospitals for the benefit of veterans.

Therefore, upon the request of General Bradley, who also talked with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], chairman of our committee, I entered a motion for the reconsideration of the bill. I now wish to call up the motion, amend the bill, and pass it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Colorado that the vote by which House bill 6836 was passed, as well as the votes by which the amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time, be reconsidered.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, line 23, after the word "Act," it is proposed to insert a period and strike out "and to maintain the operation of the service on a self-sustaining basis."

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, it will be impossible for the canteen service to be instituted in the first instance if that clause remains in the bill. It will be operated on a self-sustaining basis after it is started, but it cannot be started with that proviso in the bill, so I ask that the amendment striking out that language be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I thank the Senator from Georgia.

After the conclusion of Mr. RUSSELL'S speech,

There being no objection, the report was considered and agreed to.

ATOMIC ENERGY ACT OF 1946

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD Senate bill 1717 as it went to the President for signature. I do so upon request of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN] who is of the opinion that the bill should be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection the bill (S. 1717) for the development and control of atomic energy, was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.—

DECLARATION OF POLICY

SECTION 1. (a) Findings and declaration: Research and experimentation in the field of nuclear chain reaction have attained the stage at which the release of atomic energy on a large scale is practical. The significance of the atomic bomb for military purposes is evident. The effect of the use of atomic energy for civilian purposes upon the social, economic, and political structures of today cannot now be determined. It is a field in which unknown factors are involved. Therefore, any legislation will necessarily be subject to revision from time to time. It is reasonable to anticipate, however, that tapping this new source of energy will cause profound changes in our present way of life. Accordingly, it is hereby declared to be the policy of the people of the United States that, subject at all times to the paramount objective of assuring the common defense and security, the development and utilization of atomic energy shall, so far as practicable, be directed toward improving the public welfare, increasing the standard of living, strengthening free competition in private enterprise, and promoting world peace.

(b) Purpose of act: It is the purpose of this act to effectuate the policies set out in section 1 (a) by providing, among others, for the following major programs relating to atomic energy:

(1) A program of assisting and fostering private research and development to encourage maximum scientific progress;

(2) A program for the control of scientific and technical information which will permit the dissemination of such information to encourage scientific progress, and for the sharing on a reciprocal basis of information concerning the practical industrial application of atomic energy as soon as effective and enforceable safeguards against its use for destructive purposes can be devised;

(3) A program of federally conducted research and development to assure the Government of adequate scientific and technical accomplishment;

(4) A program for Government control of the production, ownership, and use of fissionable material to assure the common defense and security and to insure the broadest possible exploitation of the fields; and

(5) A program of administration which will be consistent with the foregoing policies and with international arrangements made by the United States, and which will enable the Congress to be currently informed so as to take further legislative action as may hereafter be appropriate.

ORGANIZATION

SEC. 2. (a) Atomic Energy Commission:

(1) There is hereby established an Atomic Energy Commission (herein called the Commission), which shall be composed of five a quorum of the Commission. The President members. Three members shall constitute shall designate one member as chairman of the Commission.

(2) Members of the Commission shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. In submitting any nomination to the Senate, the President shall set forth the experience and the qualifications of the nominee. The term of office of each member of the Commission taking office prior to the expiration of 2 years after the date of enactment of this act shall expire upon the expiration of such 2 years. The terms of office of each member of the Commission taking office after the expiration of 2 years from the date of enactment of this act shall be 5 years, except that (A) the terms of office of the members first taking office after the expiration of 2 years from the date of enactment of this act shall expire, as designated by the President at the time of appointment, one at the end of 3 years, one at the end of 4 years, one at the end of 5 years, one at the end of 6 years, and one at the end of 7 years, after the date of enactment of this act; and (B) any member appointed to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed, shall be appointed for the remainder of such term. Any member of the Commission may be removed by the President for inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office. Each member, except the chairman, shall receive compensation at the rate of $15,000 per annum; and the chairman shall receive compensation at the rate of $17,500 per annum. No member of the Commission shall engage in any other business, vocation, or employment than that of serving as a member of the Commission.

(3) The principal office of the Commission shall be in the District of Columbia, but the Commission or any duly authorized representative may exercise any or all of its powers in any place. The Commission shall hold such meetings, conduct such hearings, and receive such reports as may be necessary to enable it to carry out the provisions of this act.

(4) There are hereby established within the Commission—

(A) a General Manager, who shall discharge such of the administrative and executive functions of the Commission as the Commission may direct. The General Manager shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall receive compensation at the rate of $15,000 per annum. The Commission may make recommendations to the President with respect to the appointment or removal of the General Manager.

(B) a Division of Research, a Division of Production, a Division of Engineering, and a Division of Military Application. Each division shall be under the direction of a Director who shall be appointed by the Commission, and shall receive compensation at the rate of $14,000 per annum. The Director of the Division of Military Application shall be a member of the armed forces. The Commission shall require each such division to exercise such of the Commission's powers under this act as the Commission may determine, except that the authority granted under section 3 (a) of this act shall not be exercised by the Division of Research.

(b) General Advisory Committee: There shall be a General Advisory Committee to advise the Commission on scientific and technical matters relating to materials, production, and research and development, to be composed of nine members, who shall be appointed from civilian life by the President. Each member shall hold office for a term of 6 years, except that (1) any member appointed to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed, shall be appointed for the remainder of such term; and (2) the terms of office of the members first taking office after the date of the enactment of this act shall expire, as designated by the President at the time of appointment, three at the end of 2 years, three at the end of 4 years, and three at the end of 6 years, after the date of the enactment of this act. The committee shall designate one of its own members as chairman. The committee shall meet at least four times in every calendar year. The members of the committee shall receive a per diem compensation of $50 for each day spent in meetings or conferences, and all members shall receive their necessary traveling or other expenses while engaged in the work of the committee.

(c) Military Liaison Committee: There shall be a Military Liaison Committee consisting of representatives of the Departments of War and Navy, detailed or assigned thereto, without additional compensation, by the Secretaries of War and Navy in such number as they may determine. The Commission shall advise and consult with the committee on all atomic energy matters which the committees deems to relate to military applications, including the development, manufacture, use, and storage of bombs, the allocation of fissionable material for military research, and the control of information relating to the manufacture or utilization of atomic weapons. The Commission shall keep the Committee fully informed of all such matters before it and the Committee shall keep the Commission fully informed of all atomic energy activities of the War and Navy Departments. The Committee shall have authority to make written recommendations to the Commission on matters relating to military applications from time to time as it may deem appropriate. If the Committee at any time concludes that any action, proposed action, or failure to act of the Commission on such matters is adverse to the responsibilities of the Departments of War or Navy, derived from the Constitution, laws, and treaties, the Committee may refer such action, proposed action, or failure to act to the Secretaries of War and Navy. If either Secretary concurs, he may refer the matter to the President, whose decision shall be final.

(d) Appointment of Army and Navy officers: Notwithstanding the provisions of section 1222 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., 1940 edition, title 10, sec. 576), section 212 of the act entitled "An Act making appropriations for the Legislative Branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1932, as amended (U. S. C., 1940 edition, title 5, sec. 59a) section 2 of the act entitled "An Act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes," approved July 31, 1894, as amended (U. S. C., 1940 edition, title 5 sec. 62) or any other law, any active or retired officer of the Army or the Navy may serve as Director of the Division of Military Application established by subsection (a) (4) (B) of this section, without prejudice to his commissioned status as such officer. Any such officer serving as Director of the Division of Military Application shall receive, in addition to his pay from the United States as such officer, an amount equal to the difference between such pay and the compensation prescribed in subsection (a) (4) (B) of this section.

RESEARCH

SEC. 3. (a) Research assistance: The Commission is directed to exercise its powers in such manner as to insure the continued conduct of research and development activities in the fields specified below by private or public institutions or persons and to assist in the acquisition of an ever-expanding fund of theoretical and practical knowledge in such fields. To this end the Commission is authorized and directed to make arrangements (including contracts, agreements, and loans) for the conduct of research and development activities relating to—

(1) nuclear processes;

(2) the theory and production of atomic energy, including processes, materials, and devices related to such production;

(3) utilization of fissionable and radioactive materials for medical, biological, health, or military purposes;

(4) utilization of fissionable and radioactive materials and processes entailed in the production of such materials for all other purposes, including industrial uses; and

(5) the protection of health during research and production activities.

The Commission may make such arrangements without regard to the provisions of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5) upon certification by the Commission that such action is necessary in the interest of the common defense and security, or upon a showing that advertising is not reasonably practicable, and may make partial and advance payments under such arrangements, and may make available for use in connection therewith such of its equipment and facilities as it may deem desirable. Such arrangements shall contain such provisions to protect health, to minimize danger from explosion and other hazards to life or property, and to require the reporting and to permit the inspection of work performed thereunder, as the Commission may determine; but shall not contain any provisions or conditions which prevent the dissemination of scientific or technical information, except to the extent such dissemination is prohibited by law.

(b) Research by the Commission: The Commission is authorized and directed to conduct, through its own facilities, activities and studies of the types specified in subsection (a) above.

PRODUCTION OF FISSIONABLE MATERIAL

SEC. 4. (a) Definition: As used in this act, the term "produce", when used in relation to fissionable material means to manufacture, produce, or refine fissionable material, as distinguished from source materials as defined in section 5 (b) (1), or to separate fissionable material from other substances in which such material may be contained or to produce new fissionable material.

(b) Prohibition: It shall be unlawful for any person to own any facilities for the production of fissionable material or for any person to produce fissionable material, except to the extent authorized by subsection (c).

(c) Ownership and operation of production facilities:

(1) Ownership of production facilities: The Commission, as agent of and on behalf of the United States, shall be the exclusive owner of all facilities for the production of fissionable material other than facilities which (A) are useful in the conduct of research and development activities in the fields specified in section 3, and (B) do not, in the opinion of the Commission, have a potential production rate adequate to enable the operator of such facilities to produce within a reasonable period of time a sufficient quantity of fissionable material to produce an atomic bomb or any other atomic weapon.

(2) Operation of the Commission's production facilities: The Commission is authorized and directed to produce or to provide for the production of fissionable material in its own facilities. To the extent deemed necessary, the Commission is authorized to make, or to continue in effect, contracts with persons obligating them to produce fissionable material in facilities owned by the Commission. The Commission is also authorized to enter into research and development contracts authorizing the contractor to produce fissionable material in facilities owned by the Commission to the extent that the production of such fissionable material may be incident to the conduct of research and development activities under such contracts. Any contract entered into under this section shall contain provisions (A) prohibiting the contractor with the Commission from subcontracting any part of the work he is obligated to perform under the contract, except as authorized by the Commission, and (B) obligating the contractor to make such reports to the Commission as it may deem appropriate with respect to his activities under the contract, to submit to frequent inspection by employees of the Commission of all such activities, and to comply with all safety and security regulations which may be prescribed by the Commission. Any contract made under the provisions of this paragraph may be made without regard to the provisions of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5) upon certification by the Commission that such action is necessary in the interest of the common defense and security, or upon a showing that advertising is not reasonably practicable, and partial and advance payments may be made under such contracts. The President shall determine at least once each year the quantities of fissionable material to be produced under this paragraph.

(3) Operation of other production facilities: Fissionable material may be produced in the conduct of research and development activities in facilities which, under paragraph (1) above, are not required to be owned by the Commission.

(d) Irradiation of materials: For the purpose of increasing the supply of radioactive materials, the Commission and persons lawfully producing or utilizing fissionable material are authorized to expose materials of any kind to the radiation incident to the processes of producing or utilizing fissionable material.

(e) Manufacture of production facilities: Unless authorized by a license issued by the Commission, no person may manufacture, produce, transfer, or acquire any facilities for the production of fissionable material. Licenses shall be issued in accordance with such procedures as the Commission may by regulation establish and shall be issued in accordance with such standards and upon such conditions as will restrict the production and distribution of such facilities to effectuate the policies and purposes of this act. Nothing in this section shall be deemed to require a license for such manufacture, production, transfer, or acquisition incident to or for the conduct of research or development activities in the United States of the types specified in section 3, or to prohibit the Commission from manufacturing or producing such facilities for its own use.

CONTROL OF MATERIALS

SEC. 5. (a) Fissionable materials:

(1) Definition: As used in this act, the term "fissionable material" means plutonium, uranium enriched in the isotope 235, any other material which the Commission determines to be capable of releasing substantial quantities of energy through nuclear chain reaction of the material, or any material artificially enriched by any of the foregoing; but does not include source materials, as defined in section 5 (b) (1).

(2) Government ownership of all fissionable material: All right, title, and interest within or under the jurisdiction of the United States, in or to any fissionable material, now or hereafter produced, shall be the property of the Commission, and shall be deemed to be vested in the Commission by virtue of this act. Any person owning any interest in any fissionable material at the time of the enactment of this act, or owning any interest in any material at the time when such material is hereafter determined to be a fissionable material, or who lawfully produces any fissionable material incident to privately financed research or development activities, shall be paid just compensation therefor. The Commission may, by action consistent with the provisions of paragraph (4) below, authorize any such person to retain possession of such fissionable material, but no person shall have any title in or to any fissionable material.

(3) Prohibition: It shall be unlawful for any person, after 60 days from the effective date of this act to (A) possess or transfer any fissionable material, except as authorized by the Commission, or (B) export from or import into the United States any fissionable material, or (C) directly or indirectly engage in the production of any fissionable material outside of the United States.

(4) Distribution of fissionable material: Without prejudice to its continued ownership thereof, the Commission is authorized to distribute fissionable material owned by it, with or without charge, to applicants requesting such material (A) for the conduct of research or development activities either independently or under contract or other arrangement with the Commission, (B) for use in medical therapy, or (C) for use pursuant to a license issued under the authority of section 7. Such material shall be distributed in such quantities and on such terms that no applicant will be enabled to obtain an amount sufficient to construct a bomb or other military weapon. The Commission is directed to distribute sufficient fissionable material to permit the conduct of widespread independent research and development activity, to the maximum extent practicable. In determining the quantities of fissionable material to be distributed, the Commission shall make such provisions for its own needs and for the conservation of fissionable material as it may determine to be necessary in the national interest for the future development of atomic energy. The Commission shall not distribute any material to any applicant, and shall recall any distributed material from any applicant, who is not equipped to observe or who fails to observe such safety standards to protect health and to minimize danger from explosion or other hazard to life or property as may be established by the Commission, or who uses such material in violation of law or regulation of the Commission or in a manner other than as disclosed in the application therefor.

(5) The Commission is authorized to purchase or otherwise acquire any fissionable material or any interest therein outside the United States, or any interest in facilities for the production of fissionable material, or in real property on which such facilities are located, without regard to the provisions of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5) upon certification by the Commission that such action is necessary in the interest of the common defense and security, or upon a showing that advertising is not reasonably practicable, and partial and advance payments may be made under contracts for such purposes. The Commission is further authorized to take, requisition, or condemn, or otherwise acquire any interest in such facilities or real property, and just compensation shall be made therefor.

(b) Source materials:

(1) Definition: As used in this act, the term "source material" means uranium, thorium, or any other material which is determined by the Commission, with the approval of the President, to be peculiarly essential to the production of fissionable materials; but includes ores only if they contain one or more of the foregoing materials in such concentration as the Commission may by regulation determine from time to time.

(2) License for transfers required: Unless authorized by a license issued by the Commission, no person may transfer or deliver, receive possession of or title to, or export from the United States any source material after removal from its place of deposit in nature, except that licenses shall not be required for quantities of source materials which, in the opinion of the Commission, are unimportant.

(3) Issuance of licenses: The Commission shall establish such standards for the issuance, refusal, or revocation of licenses as it may deem necessary to assure adequate source materials for production, research, or development activities pursuant to this act or to prevent the use of such materials in a manner inconsistent with the national welfare. Licenses shall be issued in accordance with such procedures as the Commission may by regulation establish.

(4) Reporting: The Commission is authorized to issue such regulations or orders requiring reports of ownership, possession, extraction, refining, shipment, or other handling of source materials as it may deem necessary, except that such reports shall not be required with respect to (A) any source material prior to removal from its place of deposit in nature, or (b) quantities of source materials which in the opinion of the Commission are unimportant or the reporting of which will discourage independent prospecting for new deposits.

(5) Acquisition: The Commission is authorized and directed to purchase, take, requisition, condemn, or otherwise acquire, supplies of source materials or any interest in real property containing deposits of source materials to the extent it deems necessary to effectuate the provisions of this act. Any purchase made under this paragraph may be made without regard to the provisions of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5) upon certification by the Commission that such action is necessary in the interest of the common defense and security, or upon a showing that advertising is not reasonably practicable, and partial and advance payments may be made thereunder. The Commission may establish guaranteed prices for all source materials delivered to it within a specified time. Just compensation shall be made for any property taken, requisitioned, or condemned under this paragraph.

(6) Exploration: The Commission is authorized to conduct and enter into contracts for the conduct of exploratory operations, investigations, and inspections to determine the location, extent, mode of occurrence, use, or conditions of deposits or supplies of source materials, making just compensation for any damage or injury occasioned thereby. Such exploratory operations may be conducted only with the consent of the owner, but such investigations and inspections may be conducted with or without such consent.

(7) Public lands: All uranium, thorium, and all other materials determined pursuant to paragraph (1) of this subsection to be peculiarly essential in the production of fissionable material, contained, in whatever concentration, in deposits in the public lands are hereby reserved for the use of the United States subject to valid claims, rights, or privileges existing on the date of the enactment of this act: Provided, however, That no individual, corporation, partnership, or association, which had any part, directly or indirectly, in the development of the atomic-bomb project, may benefit by any location, entry, or settlement upon the public domain made after such individual, corporation, partnership, or association took part in such project, if such individual, corporation, partnership, or association, by reason of having had such part in the development of the atomic-bomb project, acquired confidential official information as to the existence of deposits of such uranium, thorium, or other materials in the specific lands upon which such location, entry, or settlement is made, and subsequent to the date of the enactment of this act made such location, entry, or settlement or caused the same to be made for his, its, or their benefit. The Secretary of the Interior shall cause to be inserted in every patent, conveyance, lease, permit, or other authorization hereafter granted to use the public lands or their mineral resources, under any of which there might result the extraction of any materials so reserved, a reservation to the United States of all such materials, whether or not of commercial value, together with the right of the United States through its authorized agents or representatives at any time to enter upon the land and prospect for, mine, and remove the same, making just compensation for any damage or injury occasioned thereby. Any land so patented, conveyed, leased, or otherwise disposed of may be used, and any rights under any such permit or authorization may be exercised, as if no reservation of such materials has been made under this subsection; except that, when such use results in the extraction of any such material from the land in quantities which may not be transferred or delivered without a license under this subsection, such material shall be the property of the Commission and the Commission may require delivery of such material to it by any possessor thereof after such material has been separated as such from the ores in which it was contained. If the Commission requires the delivery of such material to it, it shall pay to the person mining or extracting the same, or to such other person as the Commission determines to be entitled thereto, such sums, including profits, as the Commission deems fair and reasonable for the discovery, mining, development, production, extraction, and other services performed with respect to such material prior to such delivery, but such payment shall not include any amount on account of the value of such material before removal from its place of deposit in nature. If the Commission does not require delivery of such material to it, the reservation made pursuant to this paragraph shall be of no further force or effect.

(c) Byproduct materials:

(1) Definition: As used in this act, the term "byproduct material" means any radioactive material (except fissionable material) yielded in or made radioactive by exposure to the radiation incident to the processes of producing or utilizing fissionable material.

(2) Distribution: The Commission is authorized to distribute, with or without charge, byproduct materials to applicants seeking such materials for research or development activity, medical therapy, industrial uses, or such other useful applications as may be developed. In distributing such materials, the Commission shall give preference to applicants proposing to use such materials in the conduct of research and development activity or medical therapy. The Commission shall not distribute any byproduct materials to any applicant, and shall recall any distributed materials from any applicant who is not equipped to observe or who fails to observe such safety standards to protect health as may be established by the Commission or who uses such materials in violation of law or regulation of the Commission or in a manner other than as disclosed in the application therefor.

(d) General provisions: The Commission shall not—

(1) distribute any fissionable material to (A) any person for a use which is not under or within the jurisdiction of the United States, (B) any foreign government, or (C) any person within the United States if, in the opinion of the Commission, the distribution of such fissionable material to such person would be inimical to the common defense and security; and

(2) license any person to transfer or deliver, receive possession of or title to, or export from the United States any source material if, in the opinion of the Commission, the issuance of a license to such person for such purpose would be inimical to the common defense and security.

MILITARY APPLICATIONS OF ATOMIC ENERGY

SEC. 6. (a) Authority: The Commission is authorized to—

(1) conduct experiments and do research and development work in the military application of atomic energy; and

(2) engage in the production of atomic bombs, atomic-bomb parts, or other military weapons utilizing fissionable materials; except that such activities shall be carried on only to the extent that the express consent and direction of the President of the United States has been obtained, which consent and direction shall be obtained at least once each year.

The President from time to time may direct the Commission (1) to deliver such quantities of fissionable materials or weapons to the armed forces for such use as he deems necessary in the interest of national defense or (2) to authorize the armed forces to manufacture, produce, or acquire any equipment or device utilizing fissionable material or atomic energy as a military weapon.

(b) Prohibition: It shall be unlawful for any person to manufacture, produce, transfer, or acquire any equipment or device utilizing fissionable material or atomic energy as a military weapon, except as may be authorized by the Commission. Nothing in this subsection shall be deemed to modify the provisions of section 4 of this act, or to prohibit research activities in respect of military weapons, or to permit the export of any such equipment or device.

UTILIZATION OF ATOMIC ENERGY

SEC. 7. (a) License required: It shall be unlawful, except as provided in sections 5 (a) (4) (A) or (B) or 6 (a), for any person to manufacture, produce, or export any equipment or device utilizing fissionable material or atomic energy or to utilize fissionable material or atomic energy with or without such equipment or device, except under and in accordance with a license issued by the Commission authorizing such manufacture, production, export, or utilization. No license may permit any such activity if fissionable material is produced incident to such activity, except as provided in sections 3 and 4. Nothing in this section shall be deemed to require a license for the conduct of research or development activities relating to the manufacture of such equipment or devices or the utilization of fissionable material or atomic energy, or for the manufacture or use of equipment or devices for medical therapy.

(b) Report to Congress: Whenever in its opinion any industrial, commercial, or other nonmilitary use of fissionable material or atomic energy has been sufficiently developed to be of practical value, the Commission shall prepare a report to the President stating all the facts with respect to such use, the Commission's estimate of the social, political, economic, and international effects of such use and the Commission's recommendations for necessary or desirable supplemental legislation. The President shall then transmit this report to the Congress, together with his recommendations. No license for any manufacture, production, export, or use shall be issued by the Commission under this section until after (1) a report with respect to such manufacture, production, export, or use has been filed with the Congress; and (2) a period of 90 days in which the Congress was in session has elapsed after the report has been so filed. In computing such period of 90 days, there shall be excluded the days on which either House is not in session because of an adjournment of more than 3 days.

(c) Issuance of licenses: After such 90-day period, unless hereafter prohibited by law, the Commission may license such manufacture, production, export, or use in accordance with such procedures and subject to such conditions as it may by regulation establish to effectuate the provisions of this act. The Commission is authorized and directed to issue licenses on a nonexclusive basis and to supply to the extent available appropriate quantities of fissionable material to licensees (1) whose proposed activities will serve some useful purpose proportionate to the quantities of fissionable material to be consumed; (2) who are equipped to observe such safety standards to protect health and to minimize danger from explosion or other hazard to life or property as the Commission may establish; and (3) who agree to make available to the Commission such technical information and data concerning their activities pursuant to such licenses as the Commission may determine necessary to encourage similar activities by as many licensees as possible. Each such license shall be issued for a specified period, shall be revocable at any time by the Commission in accordance with such procedures as the Commission may establish, and may be renewed upon the expiration of such period. Where activities under any license might serve to maintain or to foster the growth of monopoly, restraint of trade, unlawful competition, or other trade position inimical to the entry of new, freely competitive enterprises in the field, the Commission is authorized and directed to refuse to issue such license or to establish such conditions to prevent these results, as the Commission, in consultation with the Attorney General, may determine. The Commission shall report promptly to the Attorney General any information it may have with respect to any utilization of fissionable material or atomic energy which appears to have these results. No license may be given to any persons for activities which are not under or within the jurisdiction of the United States, to any foreign government, or to any person within the United States if, in the opinion of the Commission, the issuance of a license to such person would be inimical to the common defense and security.

(d) Byproduct power: If energy which may be utilized is produced in the production of fissionable material, such energy may be used by the Commission, transferred to other Government agencies, or sold to public or private utilities under contracts providing for reasonable resale prices.

INTERNATIONAL ARRANGEMENTS

SEC. 8. (a) Definition: As used in this act, the term "international arrangement" shall mean any treaty approved by the Senate or international agreement hereafter approved by the Congress, during the time such treaty or agreement is in full force and effect.

(b) Effect of international arrangements: Any provision of this act or any action of the Commission to the extent that it conflicts with the provisions of any international arrangement made after the date of enactment of this act shall be deemed to be of no further force or effect.

(c) Policies contained in international arrangements: In the performance of its functions under this act, the Commission shall give maximum effect to the policies contained in any such international arrangement.

PROPERTY OF THE COMMISSION

SEC. 9. (a) The President shall direct the transfer to the Commission of all interests owned by the United States or any Government agency in the following property:

(1) All fissionable material; all atomic weapons and parts thereof; all facilities, equipment, and materials for the processing, production, or utilization of fissionable material or atomic energy; all processes and technical information of any kind, and the source thereof (including data, drawings, specifications, patents, patent applications, and other sources (relating to the processing, production, or utilization of fissionable material or atomic energy; and all contracts, agreements, leases, patents, applications for patents, inventions, and discoveries (whether patented or unpatented), and other rights of any kind concerning any such items;

(2) All facilities, equipment, and materials devoted primarily to atomic-energy research and development; and

(3) Such other property owned by or in the custody or control of the Manhattan engineer district or other Government agencies as the President may determine.

(b) In order to render financial assistance to those States and localities in which the activities of the Commission are carried on and in which the Commission has acquired property previously subject to State and local taxation, the Commission is authorized to make payments to State and local governments in lieu of property taxes. Such payments may be in the amounts, at the times, and upon the terms the Commission deems appropriate, but the Commission shall be guided by the policy of not making payments in excess of the taxes which would have been payable for such property in the condition in which it was acquired, except in cases where special burdens have been cast upon the State or local government by activities of the Commission, the Manhattan engineer district or their agents. In any such case, any benefit accruing to the State or local government by reason of such activities shall be considered in determining the amount of the payment. The Commission, and the property, activities, and income of the Commission, are hereby expressly exempted from taxation in any manner or form by any State, county, municipality, or any subdivision thereof.

CONTROL OF INFORMATION

SEC. 10. (a) Policy: It shall be the policy of the Commission to control the dissemination of restricted data in such a manner as to assure the common defense and security. Consistent with such policy the Commission shall be guided by the following principles:

(1) That until Congress declares by joint resolution that effective and enforceable international safeguards against the use of atomic energy for destructive purposes have been established, there shall be no exchange of information with other nations with respect to the use of atomic energy for industrial purposes; and

(2) That the dissemination of scientific and technical information relating to atomic energy should be permitted and encouraged so as to provide that free interchange of ideas and criticisms which is essential to scientific progress.

(b) Restrictions:

(1) The term "restricted data" as used in this section means all data concerning the manufacture or utilization of atomic weapons, the production of fissionable material, or the use of fissionable material in the production of power, but shall not include any data which the Commission from time to time determines may be published without adversely affecting the common defense and security.

(2) Whoever, lawfully or unlawfully, having possession of, access to, control over, or being entrusted with, any document, writing, sketch, photograph, plan, model, instrument, appliance, note or information involving or incorporating restricted data—

(A) communicates, transmits, or discloses the same to any individual or person, or attempts or conspires to do any of the foregoing, with intent to injure the United States or with intent to secure an advantage to any foreign nation, upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by death or imprisonment for life (but the penalty of death or imprisonment for life may be imposed only upon recommendation of the jury and only in cases where the offense was committed with intent to injure the United States); or by a fine of not more than $20,000 or imprisonment for not more than 20 years, or both;

(B) communicates, transmits, or discloses the same to any individual or person, or attempts or conspires to do any of the foregoing, with reason to believe such data will be utilized to injure the United States or to secure an advantage to any foreign nation, shall, upon conviction, be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than 10 years, or both.

(3) Whoever, with intent to injure the United States or with intent to secure an advantage to any foreign nation, acquires or attempts or conspires to acquire any document, writing, sketch, photograph, plan, model, instrument, appliance, note or information involving or incorporating restricted data shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by death or imprisonment for life (but the penalty of death or imprisonment for life may be imposed only upon recommendation of the jury and only in cases where the offense was committed with intent to injure the United States); or by a fine of not more than $20,000 or imprisonment for not more than 20 years, or both.

(4) Whoever, with intent to injure the United States or with intent to secure an advantage to any foreign nation, removes, conceals, tampers with, alters, mutilates, or destroys any document, writing, sketch, photograph, plan, model, instrument, appliance or note involving or incorporating restricted data and used by any individual or person in connection with the production of fissionable material, or research or development relating to atomic energy, conducted by the United States, or financed in whole or in part by Federal funds, or conducted with the aid of fissionable material, shall be punished by death or imprisonment for life (but the penalty of death or imprisonment for life may be imposed only upon recommendation of the jury and only in cases where the offense was committed with intent to injure the United States); or by a fine of not more than $20,000 or imprisonment for not more than 20 years or both.

(5) (A) No person shall be prosecuted for any violation under this section unless and until the Attorney General of the United States has advised the Commission with respect to such prosecution and no such prosecution shall be commenced except upon the express direction of the Attorney General of the United States.

(B) (i) No arrangement shall be made under seciton 3, no contract shall be made or continued in effect under section 4, and no license shall be issued under section 4 (e) or 7, unless the person with whom such arrangement is made, the contractor or prospective contractor, or the prospective licensee agrees in writing not to permit any individual to have access to restricted data until the Federal Bureau of Investigation shall have made an investigation and report to the Commission on the character, associations, and loyalty of such individual and the Commission shall have determined that permitting such person to have access to restricted data will not endanger the common defense or security.

(ii) Except as authorized by the Commission in case of emergency, no individual shall be employed by the Commission until the Federal Bureau of Investigation shall have made an investigation and report to the Commission on the character, associations, and loyalty of such individuals.

(iii) Notwithstanding the provisions of subparagraphs (i) and (ii), during such period of time after the enactment of this act as may be necessary to make the investigation, report, and determination required by such paragraphs, (a) any individual who was permitted access to restricted data by the Manhattan engineer district may be permitted access to restricted data and (b) the Commission may employ any individual who was employed by the Manhattan engineer district.

(iv) To protect against the unlawful dissemination of restricted data and to safeguard facilities, equipment, materials, and other property of the Commission, the President shall have authority to utilize the services of any Government agency to the extent he may deem necessary or desirable.

(C) All violations of this act shall be investigated by the Federal Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice.

(6) This section shall not exclude the applicable provisions of any other laws, except that no Government agency shall take any action under such other laws inconsistent with the provisions of this section.

(c) Inspections, records, and reports.—The Commission is—

(1) authorized by regulation or order to require such reports and the keeping of such records with respect to, and to provide for such inspections of, activities and studies of types specified in section 3 and of activities under licenses issued pursuant to section 7 as may be necessary to effectuate the purposes of this act;

(2) authorize and direct by regulation or order to require regular reports and records with respect to, and to provide for frequent inspections of, the production of fissionable material in the conduct of research and development activities.

PATENTS AND INVENTIONS

SEC. 11. (a) Production and military utilization:

(2) No patent hereafter granted shall confer any rights with respect to any invention or discovery to the extent that such invention or discovery is used in the production of fissionable material or in the utilization of fissionable material or atomic energy for a military weapon. Any rights conferred by any patent heretofore granted for any invention or discovery are hereby revoked to the extent that such invention or discovery is so used, and just compensation shall be made therefor.

(3) Any person who has made or hereafter makes any invention or discovery useful in the production of fissionable material or in the utilization of fissionable material or atomic energy for a military weapon shall file with the Commission a report containing a complete description thereof, unless such invention or discovery is described in an application for a patent filed in the Patent Office by such person within the time required for the filing of such report. The report covering any such invention or discovery shall be filed on or before whichever of the following is the latest: (A) The sixtieth day after the date of enactment of this act; (B) the sixtieth day after the completion of such invention or discovery; or (C) the sixtieth day after such person first discovers or first has reason to believe that such invention or discovery is useful in such production or utilization.

(b) Use of inventions for research: No patent hereafter granted shall confer any rights with respect to any invention or discovery to the extent that such invention or discovery is used in the conduct of research or development activities in the fields specified in section 3. Any rights conferred by any patent heretofore granted for any invention or discovery are hereby revoked to the extent that such invention or discovery is so used, and just compensation shall be made therefor.

(c) Nonmilitary utilization:

(1) It shall be the duty of the Commission to declare any patent to be affected with the public interest if (A) the invention or discovery covered by the patent utilizes or is essential in the utilization of fissionable material or atomic energy; and (B) the licensing of such invention or discovery under this subsection is necessary to effectuate the policies and purposes of this act.

(2) Whenever any patent has been declared, pursuant to paragraph (1), to be affected with the public interest—

(A) The Commission is hereby licensed to use the invention or discovery covered by such patent in performing any of its powers under this act; and

(B) Any person to whom a license has been issued under section 7 is hereby licensed to use the invention or discovery covered by such patent to the extent such invention or discovery is used by him in carrying on the activities authorized by his license under section 7.

The owner of the patent shall be entitled to a reasonable royalty fee for any use of an invention or discovery licensed by this subsection. Such royalty fee may be agreed upon by such owner and the licensee, or in the absence of such agreement shall be determined by the Commission.

(3) No court shall have jurisdiction or power to stay, restrain, or otherwise enjoin the use of any invention or discovery by a licensee, to the extent that such use is licensed by paragraph (2) above, on the ground of infringement of any patent. If in any action for infringement against such licensee the court shall determine that the defendant is exercising such license, the measure of damages shall be the royalty fee determined pursuant to this section, together with such costs, interest, and reasonable attorney's fees as may be fixed by the court. If no royalty fee has been determined, the court shall stay the proceeding until the royalty fee is determined pursuant to this section. If any such licensee shall fail to pay such royalty fee, the patentee may bring an action in any court of competent jurisdiction for such royalty fee, together with such costs, interest, and reasonable attorney's fees as may be fixed by the court.

(d) Acquisition of patents: The Commission is authorized to purchase, or to take, requisition, or condemn, and make just compensation for, (1) any invention or discovery which is useful in the production of fissionable material or in the utilization of fissionable material or atomic energy for a military weapon, or which utilizes or is essential in the utilization of fissionable material or atomic energy, or (2) any patent or patent application covering any such invention or discovery. The Commissioner of Patents shall notify the Commission of all applications for patents heretofore or hereafter filed which in his opinion disclose such inventions or discoveries and shall provide the Commission access to all such applications.

(e) Compensation awards, and royalties:

(1) Patent Compensation Board: The Commission shall designate a Patent Compensation Board, consisting of two or more employees of the Commission, to consider applications under this subsection.

(2) Eligibility:

(A) Any owner of a patent licensed under subsection (c) (2) or any licensee thereunder may make application to the Commission for the determination of a reasonable royalty fee in accordance with such procedures as it by regulation may establish.

(B) Any person seeking to obtain the just compensation provided in subsections (a), (b), or (d) shall make application therefor to the Commission in accordance with such procedures as it may by regulation establish.

(c) Any person making any invention or discovery useful in the production of fissionable material or in the utilization of fissionable material or atomic energy for a military weapon who is not entitled to compensation therefor under subsection (a) and who has complied with subsection (a) (3) above may make application to the Commission for, and the Commission may grant, an award.

(D) Any person making application under this subsection shall have the right to be represented by counsel.

(3) Standards:

(A) In determining such reasonable royalty fee, the Commission shall take into consideration any defense, general or special, that might be pleaded by a defendant in an action for infringement, the extent to which, if any, such patent was developed through federally financed research, the degree of utility, novelty, and importance of the invention or discovery, and may consider the cost to the owner of the patent of developing such invention or discovery or acquiring such patent.

(B) In determining what constitutes just compensation under subsection (a), (b), or (d) above, the Commission shall take into account the considerations set forth in paragraph (A) above, and the actual use of such invention or discovery, and may determine that such compensation be paid in periodic payments or in a lump sum.

(C) In determining the amount of any award under paragraph (2) (C) of this subsection, the Commission shall take into account the considerations set forth in paragraph (A) above, and the actual use of such invention or discovery. Awards so made may be paid by the Commission in periodic payments or in a lump sum.

(4) Judicial review: Any person aggrieved by any determination of the Commission of an award or of a reasonable royalty fee may obtain a review of such determination in the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia by filing in such court, within 30 days after notice of such determination, a written petition praying that such determination be set aside. A copy of such petition shall be forthwith served upon the Commission and thereupon the Commission shall file with the court a certified transcript of the entire record in the proceeding, including the findings and conclusions upon which the determination was based. Upon the filing of such transcript the court shall have exclusive jurisdiction upon the record certified to it to affirm the determination in its entirety or set it aside and remand it to the Commission for further proceedings. The findings of the Commission as to the facts, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive. The court's judgment shall be final, subject, however, to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon writ of certiorari on petition therefor under section 240 of the Judicial Code (U. S. C., title 28, sec. 347), by the Commission or any party to the court proceeding.

GENERAL AUTHORITY

SEC. 12. (a) In the performance of its functions the Commission is authorized to—

(1) establish advisory boards to advise with and make recommendations to the Commission on legislation, policies, administration, research, and other matters;

(2) establish by regulation or order such standards and instructions to govern the possession and use of fissionable and by-product material as the Commission may deem necessary or desirable to protect health or to minimize danger from explosions and other hazards to life or property;

(3) make such studies and investigations, obtain such information, and hold such hearings as the Commission may deem necessary or proper to assist it in exercising any authority provided in this act, or in the administration or enforcement of this act, or any regulations or orders issued thereunder. For such purposes the Commission is authorized to administer oaths and affirmations, and by subpena to require any person to appear and testify, or to appear and produce documents, or both, at any designated place. No person shall be excused from complying with any requirement under this paragraph because of his privilege against self-incrimination, but the immunity provisions of the Compulsory Testimony Act of February 11, 1893 (U. S. C., title 49, sec. 46), shall apply with respect to any individual who specifically claims such privilege. Witnesses subpenaed under this subsection shall be paid the same fees and mileage as are paid witnesses in the district courts of the United States;

(4) appoint and fix the compensation of such officers and employees as may be necessary to carry out the functions of the Commission. Such officers and employees shall be appointed in accordance with the civil-service laws and their compensation fixed in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, except that to the extent the Commission deems such action necessary to the discharge of its responsibilities, personnel may be employed and their compensation fixed without regard to such laws. The Commission shall make adequate provision for administrative review of any determination to dismiss any employee;

(5) acquire such materials, property, equipment, and facilities, establish or construct such buildings and facilities, and modify such buildings and facilities from time to time as it may deem necessary, and construct, acquire, provide, or arrange for such facilities and services (at project sites where such facilities and services are not available) for the housing, health, safety, welfare, and recreation of personnel employed by the Commission as it may deem necessary;

(6) with the consent of the agency concerned, utilize or employ the services or personnel of any Government agency or any State or local government, or voluntary or uncompensated personnel, to perform such functions on its behalf as may appear desirable;

(7) acquire, purchase, lease, and hold real and personal property as agent of and on behalf of the United States and to sell, lease, grant, and dispose of such real and personal property as provided in this act; and

(8) without regard to the provisions of the Surplus Property Act of 1944 or any other law, make such disposition as it may deem desirable of (A) radioactive materials, and (B) any other property the special disposition of which is, in the opinion of the Commission, in the interest of the national security.

(b) Security: The President may, in advance, exempt any specific action of the Commission in a particular matter from the provisions of law relating to contracts whenever he determines that such action is essential in the interest of the common defense and security.

(c) Advisory committees: The members of the General Advisory Committee established pursuant to section 2 (b) and the members of advisory boards established pursuant to subsection (a) (1) of this section may serve as such without regard to the provisions of sections 109 and 113 of the Criminal Code (18 U. S. C., secs. 198 and 203) or section 19 (e) of the Contract Settlement Act of 1944, except insofar as such sections may prohibit any such member from receiving compensation in respect of any particular matter which directly involves the Commission or in which the Commission is directly interested.

COMPENSATION FOR PRIVATE PROPERTY ACQUIRED

SEC. 13. (a) The United States shall make just compensation for any property or interests therein taken or requisitioned pursuant to sections 5 and 11. The Commission shall determine such compensation. If the compensation so determined is unsatisfactory to the person entitled thereto, such person shall be paid 50 percent of the amount so determined, and shall be entitled to sue the United States in the Court of Claims or in any district court of the United States in the manner provided by sections 24 (20) and 145 of the Judicial Code to recover such further sum as added to said 50 percent will make up such amount as will be just compensation.

(b) In the exercise of the rights of eminent domain and condemnation, proceedings may be instituted under the act of August 1, 1888 (U. S. C., title 40, sec. 257), or any other applicable Federal statute. Upon or after the filing of the condemnation petition, immediate possession may be taken and the property may be occupied, used, and improved for the purposes of this act, notwithstanding any other law. Real property acquired by purchase, donation, or other means of transfer may also be occupied, used, and improved for the purposes of this act, prior to approval of title by the Attorney General.

JUDICIAL REVIEW AND ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEDURE

SEC. 14. (a) Notwithstanding the provisions of section 12 of the Administrative Procedure Act (Public Law 404, 79th Cong., approved June 11, 1946) which provide when such act shall take effect, section 10 of such act (relating to judicial review) shall be applicable, upon the enactment of this act, to any agency action under the authority of this act or by any agency created by or under the provisions of this act.

(b) Except as provided in subsection (a), no provision of this act shall be held to supersede or modify the provisions of the Administrative Procedure Act.

(c) As used in this section the terms "agency action" and "agency" shall have the same meaning as is assigned to such terms in the Administrative Procedure Act.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON ATOMIC ENERGY

SEC. 15. (a) There is hereby established a Joint Committee on Atomic Energy to be composed of nine Members of the Senate to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and nine Members of the House of Representatives to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives. In each instance not more than five Members shall be members of the same political party.

(b) The joint committee shall make continuing studies of the activities of the Atomic Energy Commission and of problems relating to the development, use, and control of atomic energy. The Commission shall keep the joint committee fully and currently informed with respect to the Commission's activities. All bills, resolutions, and other matters in the Senate or the House of Representatives relating primarily to the Commission or to the development, use, or control of atomic energy shall be referred to the joint committee. The members of the joint committee who are Members of the Senate shall from time to time report to the Senate, and the members of the joint committee who are Members of the House of Representatives shall from time to time report to the House, by bill or otherwise, their recommendations with respect to matters within the jurisdiction of their respective Houses which are (1) referred to the joint committee or (2) otherwise within the jurisdiction of the joint committee.

(c) Vacancies in the membership of the joint committee shall not affect the power of the remaining members to execute the functions of the joint committee, and shall be filled in the same manner as in the case of the original selection. The joint committee shall select a chairman and a vice chairman from among its members.

(d) The joint committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such places and times, to require, by subpena or otherwise, the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, to procure such printing and binding, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The provisions of sections 102 to 104, inclusive, of the Revised Statutes shall apply in case of any failure of any witness to comply with a subpena or to testify when summoned under authority of this section.

(e) The joint committee is empowered to appoint and fix the compensation of such experts, consultants, technicians, and clerical and stenographic assistants as it deems necessary and advisable, but the compensation so fixed shall not exceed the compensation prescribed under the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, for comparable duties. The committee is authorized to utilize the services, information, facilities, and personnel of the departments and establishments of the Government.

(b) Whoever willfully violates, attempts to violate, or conspires to violate, any provision of this act other than those specified in subsection (a) and other than section 10 (b), or of any regulation or order prescribed or issued under sections 5 (b) (4), 10 (c), or 12 (a) (2), shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 or by imprisonment for not more than 2 years, or both, except that whoever commits such an offense with intent to injure the United States or with intent to secure an advantage to any foreign nation shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $20,000 or by imprisonment for not more than 20 years, or both.

(c) Whenever in the judgment of the Commission any person has engaged or is about to engage in any acts or practices which constitute or will constitute a volation of any provision of this act, or any regulation or order issued thereunder, it may make application to the appropriate court for an order enjoining such acts or practices, or for an order enforcing compliance with such provision, and upon a showing by the Commission that such person has engaged or is about to engage in any such acts or practices a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or other order may be granted.

(d) In case of failure or refusal to obey a subpena served upon any person pursuant to section 12 (a) (3), the district court for any district in which such person is found or resides or transacts business, upon application by the Commission, shall have jurisdiction to issue an order requiring such person to appear and give testimony or to appear and produce documents, or both, in accordance with the subpena; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof.

APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 19. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary and appropriate to carry out the provisions and purposes of this act. The acts appropriating such sums may appropriate specified portions thereof to be accounted for upon the certification of the Commission only. Funds appropriated to the Commission shall, if obligated by contract during the fiscal year for which appropriated, remain available for expenditure for 4 years following the expiration of the fiscal year for which appropriated. After such 4-year period, the unexpended balances of appropriations shall be carried to the surplus fund and covered into the Treasury.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

SATURDAY, JULY 27, 1946

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D. D., pastor of the Gunton-Temple Memorial Presbyterian Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who art the same yesterday, today, and forever, and the one sovereign and abiding certainty in the midst of the mutations of time, we pray that our minds and hearts may be animated and aglow with a greater faith in Thee in order that we may find ourselves and the secret of joy and hope.

Grant that in these troublous days, when life for so many is beset with heavy burdens, beshadowed with sorrow, and even the love of God seems to be a fiction, we may be men of light and of learning, of heroic fortitude and daring devotion, whom Thou art using to inspire and encourage the soul of humanity with a glorious vision of a new and better world.

May the day that we are longing and laboring for be that day of prophetic revelation when all the chasms that divide mankind shall be bridges by friendship and good will and the kingdom of this earth shall be the kingdom of our Lord and Saviour. Help us to bear testimony to our citizenship in that kingdom by our love for Thee and our love for our fellow men.

Hear us in the name of the King of Kings. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. McCORMACK). On this roll call, 254 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

By unanimous consent, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, the present occupant of the chair yesterday asked the Speaker for unanimous consent for the Speaker to recognize Members to call up certain legislation under suspension of the rules. Can the majority leader give us a list of the bills that are going to be presented to the House today before they are brought up here and the unanimous-consent request is made?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair yesterday enumerated certain bills that he would recommend the Speaker recognize Members to call up for consideration under suspension of the rules. The Speaker, of course, is the one to recognize Members to call up bills under suspension. The present occupant of the chair would prefer that the gentleman from Pennsylvania withhold his inquiry as to what bills may be brought up under suspension today until the Speaker returns. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, of course, realizes from the practical angle the difficulty of advising Members the day before as to what bills will be brought up by the unanimous-consent method.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, we appropriated over $450,000,000 yesterday, which is a lot of money, and I do not know where you are going to get it, and I do not think anybody else does either. We ought to know something about this before we legislate in this manner. It is not right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair was trying to frankly advise the gentleman from Pennsylvania in connection with his inquiry. Of course, it is not the Chair's purpose to get into an argument with the gentleman.

Mr. RICH. I appreciate that, Mr. Speaker, but I did not get any information.

ASSISTANT SECRETARIES OF AGRICULTURE

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 5757) to establish two additional offices of Assistant Secretaries of Agriculture, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusettes. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the need for this legislation?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I will say to the distinguished minority leader that the Department of Agriculture was created in 1889 with a Secretary and an Assistant Secretary. It ran on until 1934, I think it was, when an Under Secretary was provided. Since then the duties of the Secretary have greatly increased. There have been added to his duties Soil Conservation, the Agricultural Adjustment Act, Rural Electrification, Commodity Credit Corporation, Farm Security Administration, the Farm Credit Administration, and other agencies, and he finds that it is necessary for him to have these two additional top policy-making assistants. We held hearings on the bill, and I think the Department made out a splendid case.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 5757) to establish two additional offices of Assistant Secretaries of Agriculture, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The present occupant of the Chair will not recognize the gentleman from Virginia for that purpose.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, as I understood it was agreeable with the Speaker and the majority leader that if objection was made, that we could ask for suspension of the rules.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The present occupant of the Chair has no recollection of the latter observation made by the gentleman from Virginia, and the present occupant of the Chair suggests that the gentleman withhold his motion until the Speaker returns.

AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 6303) to amend the provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act relating to marketing agreements and orders.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. HERTER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it is my understanding that this bill, as amended, eliminates section 4 from the bill.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. That is correct.

Mr. HERTER. Is my understanding further correct that in the event section 4 should be reinstated by another body, that that matter will not be brought before us again?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I can give the gentleman from Massachusetts that assurance.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I would like to know what commodity it deals with.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. It amends what is known as the Marketing Agreement Act. Under the present law, for instance, farmers who are operating under a marketing agreement that has been set up and established, if the price of that commodity goes above the parity price, the marketing agreement immediately becomes inoperative, and the farmers are left without the benefit of the agreement. There is simply no sense in parity figuring in whether the agreement will be operative or inoperative. That is the principal change that will be made. It does take care of some of the nut people out in California in that it would place certain nuts under the act.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I cannot tell from that explanation what this bill means.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PHILLIPS. This bill makes no change, in the commodities affected by the act, except that it adds almonds to the list. It does however make three small but important changes in the act. At the present time, when any commodity covered by a marketing agreement reaches a point, in production, where the agreement is no longer necessary, it is suspended by an order from the Secretary of Agriculture. Under many of the marketing agreements, standardization measures have been put into effect, concerning ripeness, quality, or the like. It is desirable to maintain these standards, even if the marketing agreement is suspended. The new bill permits that.

The new bill would also permit contributions to be continued, to cover the necessary expenses of the marketing organization, and particularly to cover any commodity advertising which the producers may have approved.

These are noncontroversial amendments. The controversial amendments in the bill were all removed by agreement before the bill reached the floor, and these changes in the bill are covered by the amendment introduced by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDRESEN]. I hope the bill will go through, because it is very urgently necessary if we are to continue the constructive details of existing marketing agreements. At the present time, the Secretary of Agriculture is holding up an order, for the suspension of one agreement, which otherwise would have to go through and destroy the details of the program now in force, which the producers wish to continue.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Will the gentleman explain what section 4 is.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. No. 4 broadens the act by permitting farmers to get together and decide by a two-thirds majority whether or not they will bring other agricultural products under marketing agreements.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I object.

GLACIER NATIONAL PARK

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 7020) to provide for the acquisition by exchange of non-Federal property within the Glacier National Park.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain what this measure does?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. This authorizes the exchange of certain lands in Glacier National Park. No appropriation is required. The bill previously passed the House. It then had in it a clause to the effect that the title should be examined by the Secretary of the Interior. The President vetoed the bill, and we have corrected it so that the Department of Justice will examine the title.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. All this does is permit the Department of Justice to examine the title instead of the Department of the Interior?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. That is right.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. LECOMPTE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does this bill eliminate by an amendment the objections that the President had when he vetoed a similar bill?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Yes. The bill has the unanimous support of the committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to accept title to any non-Federal lands, interest in lands, buildings, or other property, real or personal, within the authorized boundaries of the Glacier National Park, as now or hereafter established, when the acquisition by exchange of such property would, in his judgment, be in the best interests of the United States. In exchange for the non-Federal property so to be acquired, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to convey to the grantors of such property, or to their nominees, any federally owned lands, interests in lands, buildings, or other property, real or personal, within the authorized boundaries of the Glacier National Park, located in the State of Montana and administered by the National Park Service, which are of approximately equal value, as determined by the Secretary, to the property being acquired. In order to facilitate the making of such exchanges, the Secretary of the Interior may enter into agreements for the reservation in conveyances to the United States, or for the grant in conveyances from the United States, of such estates for years, life estates, or other interests as may be consistent, in his judgment, with the accomplishment of the purposes of this act, but all such limitations shall be considered in determining the equality of the interests to be exchanged.

SEC. 2. Any property acquired pursuant to this act shall, upon acceptance of title thereto, become a part of the Glacier National Park, and shall be subject to all laws applicable to such area. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to issue such regulations as he deems necessary for carrying out the purposes of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EMPLOYEES OF PANAMA CANAL

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 3748, an act to provide for the recognition of the services of the civilian officials and employees, citizens of the United States, engaged in and about the construction of the Panama Canal.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the report.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3748) to amend an act entitled "An Act to provide for the recognition of the services of the civilian officials and employees, citizens of the United States, engaged in and about the construction of the Panama Canal", approved May 29, 1944, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 1.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2; and agree to the same.

J. HARDIN PETERSON,
HERBERT C. BONNER,
CHRISTIAN A. HERTER,
Managers on the Part of the House.

TOM STEWART,
WARREN G. MAGNUSON,
A. W. HAWKES,
HARLAN BUSHFIELD,
Managers on the Part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3748) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the recognition of the services of the civilian officials and employees, citizens of the United States, engaged in and about the construction of the Panama Canal", approved May 29, 1944, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

Amendment No. 1: This amendment was apparently a typographical error and struck out the effective date of the bill which was the date the original act, amended, was approved. The Senate recedes. On this amendment the effective date of this bill will be the same as the original act and in this respect H. R. 3748 will be in the form as passed by the House.

Amendment No. 2: This amendment strikes out the date "May 29, 1944" and inserts "December 7, 1941"; that is the date of the Pearl Harbor incident. This is provided so that the act would not apply to persons who did not become citizens before that date. It is felt that this is proper. The House recedes.

J. HARDIN PETERSON,
HERBERT C. BONNER,
CHRISTIAN A. HERTER,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain the report?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. The conference report corrects two dates. The effective date of the act was stricken out in the Senate and was purely a typographical error. The other date is changed back to the Pearl Harbor date. It is merely a matter of correction of dates, and has the unanimous approval of the conferees.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It only affects a few people working on the Panama Canal?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Yes.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SURPLUS PROPERTY

Mr. MANASCO. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 6702) to clarify the rights of former owners of real property to reacquire such property under the Surplus Property Act of 1944, and ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6702) to clarify the rights of former owners of real property to reacquire such property under the Surplus Property Act of 1944, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same.

CARTER MANASCO,
WILL M. WHITTINGTON,
CLARE E. HOFFMAN,
GEORGE H. BENDER,
Managers on the Part of the House.

JAMES E. MURRAY,
BURNET R. MAYBANK,
CHAPMAN REVERCOMB,
GEO. A. WILSON,
Managers on the Part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6702) to clarify the rights of former owners of real property to reacquire such property under the Surplus Property Act of 1944, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommend in the accompanying conference report:

Section 1 of the House bill modifies the definition of the term "real property" contained in section 23 (a) (1) of the Surplus Property Act of 1944 by including in the definition hotels, apartment houses, office buildings, stores, and other commercial structures. Section 1 of the conference report likewise includes commercial structures in the definition of the term "real property" but excludes (1) commercial structures constructed by, at the direction of, or on behalf of any Government agency, and (2) commercial structures which the War Assets Administrator determines have been made an integral part of a functional or economic unit which should be disposed of as a whole. Former owners thus have the privilege to reacquire commercial structures where such structures are being disposed of by War Assets Administration substantially in their orginal condition.

The House bill does not contain provisions comparable to those contained in section 2 of the conference report. Section 2 is designed to establish the criteria which determine the classification of property by the War Assets Administrator.

Section 2 of the House bill authorizes the disposal of the leasehold covering the Chamberlin Hotel, Fort Monroe, Old Point Comfort, Va., to a majority of the former bondholders.

Section 3 of the conference report extends the right to reacquire the hotel to all former bondholders who may wish to participate on a proportional basis.

CARTER MANASCO,
WILL M. WHITTINGTON,
CLARE E. HOFFMAN,
GEO. H. BENDER,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. MANASCO. Mr. Speaker, this bill simply clarifies the intent of Congress as to the rights of former owners to acquire surplus real property. There has been some confusion in the War Assets Administration in the interpretation of the act. We have tried to clarify the act so as to make clear the rights of former owners of property, such as hotel property and commercial property, as to the original intent of Congress when we first passed the Surplus Property Act.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. What does the present bill do?

Mr. MANASCO. The Senate bill provided with respect to the Chamberlain Hotel at Old Point Comfort, Va., that all the bondholders could come in, in the proportion of the number of bonds that they owned, to reacquire the property. The second provision changes the definition of real property in cases where the Government has built tremendous office buildings on some of the property and in such cases the former owner does not have the right to reacquire that kind of property, which I think is proper.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. But he would have the right to reacquire the property if it were sold at auction?

Mr. MANASCO. Yes; he has the right, of course, to buy it in the open market.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. But this bill would make the former owner of such improved property a preferred bidder?

Mr. MANASCO. Yes; that is right.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Would he have to pay what the Government put into the property in the open market?

Mr. MANASCO. That is right. That is the case under the present law, but we want to clarify it so far as the right of the former owners to buy and reacquire real property.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Is it a unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. MANASCO. Yes.

Mr. SCHWABE of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANASCO. I yield.

Mr. SCHWABE of Oklahoma. What about the situation of a farmer reacquiring farm land which was taken for the purpose of erecting munitions plants in various war industries?

Mr. MANASCO. If a factory was built on the property, he does not have the right under existing law to reacquire the property.

Mr. SCHWABE of Oklahoma. There were factories built, of course, but they took in a lot of land in those areas which was never improved.

Mr. MANASCO. Yes. Well, if the land is not necessary in connection with the factory, then the former owner has the right under existing law to reacquire it.

We do not change that at all.

Mr. POAGE. Reserving the right to object, does this relate in any manner to the present provision of law that requires the Government to return all of the mineral rights?

Mr. MANASCO. No, sir.

Mr. POAGE. It does not weaken that provision?

Mr. MANASCO. It certainly does not.

Mr. HAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANASCO. I yield.

Mr. HAND. This bill does not relate exclusively to hotel properties? It is general in its application?

Mr. MANASCO. Oh, it is general in its application. It applies to all commercial properties.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mrs. DOUGLAS of California asked and was given permission to extend her remarks in the RECORD in five instances and include certain excerpts.

Mr. REED of New York asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. PLUMLEY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include certain excerpts.

NICHOLAS SEVALJEVICK

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 1471) for the relief of Nicholas Sevaljevick, now known as Nicholas Hornacky.

This was objected to at the last call of the Private Calendar because we had no copy of the bill or the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SPRINGER]?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I am wondering if the gentleman has taken this up with the objectors.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have taken it up with the objectors, with the majority leader, the minority leader, and also with the Speaker.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. And there is a favorable report from the gentleman's committee?

Mr. SPRINGER. I objected to it myself in the first instance because I had no opportunity to consider it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SPRINGER]?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Nicholas Sevaljevick, now known as Nicholas Hornacky, late of Troop F, Fourth Regiment United States Cavalry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 16th day of November 1916: Provided, That no bounty, pension, back pay, or allowances shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONFIRMING TITLE TO CERTAIN RAILROAD-GRANT LANDS LOCATED IN KERN COUNTY, CALIF.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 1602) to confirm title to certain railroad-grant lands located in the county of Kern, State of California.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain what this bill provides?

Mr. ELLIOTT. This bill simply confirms title in about a quarter of an acre of land in Kern County, Calif. The transfer of title was made in December 1891, and in going over the records, there is a cloud on the title.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Who owns the property now?

Mr. ELLIOTT. The Southern Pacific Railroad exchanged the land at that time with the Summit Lime Co. Under the present title it is in the Summit Land Co., and it should be in the Southern Railroad Co.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. This is approved by the gentleman's committee?

Mr. ELLIOTT. It is.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. ELLIOTT]?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to the land hereinafter described, which was patented by the United States to the Southern Pacific Railroad Co. on December 1, 1891, recorded at Kern County, Calif., January 15, 1892, and is now held and occupied by the Summit Lime Co., a California corporation, as successor in interest of the said railroad company through successive conveyances, and as grantee in a quitclaim deed from the said company executed December 21, 1937, is hereby released, relinquished, and confirmed to the said Summit Lime Co., the said land, situate, lying, and being in the east half of section 21, township 32 south, range 33 east, Mount Diablo base line and meridian, county of Kern, State of California, described as follows:

Commencing at a point in the west line of the east half of said section 21, distant fifty feet northerly measured at right angles from the center line of the Southern Pacific Railroad Co.'s eastward main tract; thence south eighty degrees twenty-three minutes east parallel with said center line a distance of one hundred and thirty-six and three-tenths feet to the point of beginning of the parcel of land to be described; thence continuing south eighty degrees twenty-three minutes east parallel with said center line a distance of two hundred and sixty feet; thence north nine degrees thirty-seven minutes east fifty feet to a point in the northerly line of the right-of-way of said railroad company; thence north eighty degrees twenty-three minutes west along said northerly line of right-of-way a distance of two hundred and sixty feet; thence south nine degrees thirty-seven minutes west a distance of fifty feet to point of beginning, containing an area of two hundred and ninety-eight one-thousandths of an acre, more or less: Provided, That there shall be reserved to the United States all oil, coal, or other minerals in the land, and the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CHEMICAL WARFARE SERVICE

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Military Affairs, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2375) to change the name of the Chemical Warfare Service to the Chemical Corps.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, do I understand this legislation is requested by the War Department and that it simply changes the name of one of its subdivisions?

Mr. SIKES. My distinguished friend is correct. It changes the name from the Chemical Warfare Service to the Chemical Corps. It is requested by the War Department in keeping with their reorganization program.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. There is nothing else contained in the bill except changing the title?

Mr. SIKES. It does nothing else.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SIKES]?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Chemical Warfare Service, created by the act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat. 768), shall hereafter be known as the Chemical Corps.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. VURSELL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

Mrs. LUCE asked and was given permission to extend her remarks in the Appendix.

Mr. ELLIS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper item.

Mr. CANFIELD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. BLAND asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial entitled "Merchant Ships and Sea Power" which appeared in the May-June 1946 issue of the Grace Log.

Mr. WHITE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in two instances and to include certain excerpts and communications.

Mr. JUDD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and in each to include extraneous material.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

[Mr. MASON addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

LOAN TO BRITAIN TO SOCIALIZE BRITAIN

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho?

There was no objection.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. Speaker, a London dispatch in this morning's press declares that the House of Commons yesterday voted authority to the Minister of Health to take over virtually all of the nation's hospitals, hire doctors, dentists, specialists, supply drugs and generally provide at Government expense complete health service for everyone in England and Wales. A separate measure is proposed for Scotland. I quote from this dispatch:

To provide this dream service, the British Government will spend an estimated $653,000,000 annually at the start. This amount will increase as the present inadequate medical facilities are increased.

Apparently the proceeds from the British loan will aid materially in socializing Britain. If the British people prefer that kind of government, they should be required to pay for their experiments, and American taxpayers should not be compelled to pay the bill. This is one of the reasons why I opposed the British loan.

EXTENT OF APPROPRIATIONS AUTHORIZED UNDER SUSPENSION OF RULES PROCEDURE

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I think the House should be aware of what is transpiring under the suspension of the rules. I call attention to the fact that in less than 2 hours on yesterday afternoon we proceeded to authorize appropriations in the amount of $478,500,000. This is an unprecedented situation, Mr. Speaker, and we should not, in the closing hours of this session pass such huge authorizations without full consideration of each bill. These bills may have merit but this is not the way to handle them.

Mr. Speaker, there should be a law or a rule against invoking the suspension of rules procedure when all Members want the business of the House concluded as soon as possible.

Mr. Speaker, we are on the high road to inflation and every Member who has voted for these excessive authorizations must bear full responsibility for what has transpired.

OPPOSITION TO THE WAGNER-ELLENDER-TAFT BILL

Mr. VURSELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. VURSELL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to read into the RECORD a telegram to Martin C. Huggett, care of the National Association of Home Builders, Washington, D. C., which I believe will be of interest with reference to the Wagner-Ellender-Taft bill:

CHICAGO, ILL., July 16, 1946.

MARTIN C. HUGGETT,
Care National Association of Home Builders, Washington, D. C.:

The housing committee of the Cook County Council of the American Legion met last evening and makes the following recommendations. Defeat Wagner-Ellender-Taft bill, S. 1592; second, condemn Wyatt program; third, moratorium on all construction except veterans' housing and required for health and safety; fourth 10-percent increase in residential rents to compensate owners for increased costs. These recommendations are to be forwarded to the national convention of the American Legion for action.

JOHN H. SULLIVAN,
Chairman, Veterans' Affairs Committee, Metropolitan Home Builders Association.

Sixty-four thousand Legionnaires of 390 posts are represented by this telegram in opposition to the WET bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

LEGISLATION PASSED YESTERDAY

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Wisconsin neglected to mention that on yesterday afternoon the House passed some very important legislation of marked benefit to the American people. The appropriations that he speaks of being authorized would be spread out over a period of a number of years and any Congress that wanted to could refuse them. Furthermore, those appropriations will have to do only with hospitals and vocational education. I doubt that there are any two bills that the House could have passed met with more approval from the people or more exactly with a view to the basic needs of this Nation than the legislation passed on yesterday.

I do not believe the gentleman's statement gives an accurate picture to the Nation nor do I believe that the Nation will agree with him in his criticism of the action we took on yesterday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. VOORHIS of California asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in six instances, in each to include a short article by himself.

Mr. STEVENSON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD with regard to a bill he introduced, H. R. 5715.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article by Arthur W. Binns, president, National Home and Property Owners' Foundation.

Mr. RICH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances, in one to include a piece of prose by Ted B. Hayward, entitled "A Summons to Reason," and in the second to include an editorial from the Bristol (Pa.) Courier of Friday evening, July 26, 1946, entitled "The Big Issue."

Mr. HAND asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the general subject of Federal taxation and to include certain excerpts.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

THE BANKING AND CURRENCY COMMITTEE

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Speaker, our present chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee has been accusing the members of his own committee in 1-minute speeches on the floor of filibustering against the Wagner-Ellender-Taft housing bill. Actually, most of the delays which have occurred in the hearings on this bill have been entirely due to the chairman himself. He should assume the responsibility for them.

Personally, I have never made a point of order nor delayed proceedings in any way whatever. I was delighted yesterday when we started night sessions. I did bitterly resent the abrupt manner in which the chairman closed the night session last night and refused to permit me to ask questions of Mr. Krooth of the Federal Public Housing Agency, nor did I approve of the chairman ending the hearings so early in the evening.

Now I canceled a number of engagements in Harrisburg this week end in order to stay here for a night session tonight. I am shocked and surprised at the chairman canceling this night session for this evening. This is particularly embarrassing to me because I had invited friends from Harrisburg here to attend the night session tonight.

I want to see the Wagner-Ellender-Taft housing bill hearings continued steadily and rapidly. This is an important bill. It should receive action. It concerns the welfare of many veterans and other people.

TELEPHONE OPERATORS OF THE NATIONAL CAPITOL

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Speaker, as this sessions draws to a close, I want to take this opportunity to pay tribute to the telephone operators of the National Capitol. They have been working hard; they have been very courteous, very patient, and have been a great help to the Members of Congress in carrying on their work. I wish to say that by their excellent work in handling our calls they have earned our wholehearted thanks and appreciation. Their efficiency during this very busy session is deserving of our hearty commendations They have a record of which they may well be proud.

CONGRESS SHOULD ADJOURN

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, the Congress has just raised the salaries of its Members. If they want to earn that raise, I suggest that we adjourn and go home. We may be sure that we would save hundreds, if not billions, of dollars for the taxpayers if we did this.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JENKINS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in four instances and include excerpts.

Mr. GRANT of Indiana asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. GILLIE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial appearing in the Fort Wayne News-Sentinel.

Mr. LEFEVRE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. THOM asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial appearing in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Mr. GRANT of Alabama asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. PATMAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in three instances and include statements and excerpts.

Mr. WEICHEL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances.

CAPITOL TELEPHONE OPERATORS

Mr. WEICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. WEICHEL. Mr. Speaker, with reference to the comment made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GAVIN] on the courtesy of the Capitol telephone operators, I join with the gentleman in expressing those sentiments. Their courtesy certainly is in contrast to the arrogance of the bureaus, and it is refreshing to have their cooperation.

COMMITTEE ON IRRIGATION AND RECLAMATION

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the subcommittee of the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation may meet today during general debate on any bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is the emergency that the gentleman thinks so important that he has to hold hearings at this late date?

Mr. MURDOCK. It is not for the purpose of holding hearings. It is in regard to subcommittee action on a committee bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. What bill is it?

Mr. MURDOCK. H. R. 5434.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. What is the nature of the bill?

Mr. MURDOCK. It is a bill that we have been holding hearings on and have not completed action.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I would like to know what the bill is.

Mr. MURDOCK. It is a bill that reauthorizes the Gila project in Arizona.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

Mr. HINSHAW. I object, Mr. Speaker.

VETERANS' LEGISLATION

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the floor leader said yesterday that he was recommending that the so-called bill for amputees and paralytics be brought up today under suspension. I understand that the chairman of the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN], is going to ask to bring it up as soon as possible. I would like to remind the House that yesterday we appropriated $450,000,000 for this country and, as the gentleman from Wisconsin said, we have already appropriated billions of dollars that have been sent abroad to socialize England. I would like to remind the House that all of that money is spent for other countries, but nothing has been done for our combat-injured amputees and paralytics this year, and it is an emergency. The chairman of the World War Veterans' Committee reported a bill to provide conveyances for amputees yesterday. The following letters show the need for speedy action:

LONG ISLAND CITY, N. Y., July 23, 1946.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE: I am writing every member of the House Veterans' Committee to urge that the demand of the Paralyzed Veterans' Association be considered and the Edith Rogers bill be brought out to the House floor. That bill provides cars for the boys who have lost the use of their limbs fighting to save those of us at home from the fascism that spread through Europe. Is it not fitting and proper for our Nation to be slightly grateful to these disabled soldiers and is it not fitting and proper that we be slightly humane?

My husband is a paraplegic at Halloran General Hospital at Staten Island, N. Y. We all know the implications of a disability called amputation, but only the medical student, the families of paraplegics and the paraplegics themselves know the full implications of this type of injury. Here's a general description. Paralysis from the waist down in varying degrees from complete external and internal paralysis to partial control of motor power and internal organs. My husband is considered one of the star pupils, so to speak, at the paraplegic center at Halloran. He is one of the lucky ones. He can walk for approximately two blocks with a good deal of pain. He is wearing an extremely uncomfortable back brace because he is not allowed to leave a prone position without some support and his back is so very weak that any brace is painful to wear.

Considering the above explanation of the higher degree of cured paraplegic, can you wonder at the need for some plausible means of transportation. The only way my husband and I can travel at all is if we call upon some sympathetic friend for a break away from the prison of the comfortable chair in the living room. No other means of transportation is medically (physically and mentally) feasible. Taxis cannot be supplied on either Army allotment or disability pension. Nor are they available or easy to reach when needed.

My husband, like so many of the boys at Halloran, is learning to drive. Since he has partial control of his legs he is able to drive a regular car with some degree of comfort. His future plans call for as near to normal a life as is at all possible. He is planning a business, considering taking his wife to a movie, planning on taking his 3-year-old son to a park or the beach, dreaming of the home we some day hope to own and the addition we some day hope to make to our family. In other words, he is planning to be a happy, useful citizen despite his handicaps. Without the car it would be ridiculous even for him to consider a discharge from the Army hospital. He would be a prisoner in his own home at odds with himself and with the world at large.

Sincerely.

JULY 23, 1946.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE ROGERS: Enclosed please find a copy of the letter I have sent to your constituents on the Veterans' Committee. You have my deepest respect for the bill you introduced, and I sincerely hope that the bottleneck can be broken to place it before the House. This legislation is urgently needed.

Sincerely,

LUCILLE MOSS.

JULY 23, 1946.

DEAR MRS. ROGERS: I am an amputee who has recently been discharged. We amputees are proud to have such a champion as yourself in our behalf.

Just recently I received my specially adjusted car. To me and thousands of other amputees it is not a question of Is a car necessary toward our rehabilitation? We know the answer to that question. We knew it when we tried to keep up with a fast-moving world, when we tried to climb hills, walking in inclement weather, trying to get to work in crowded busses, and numerous other incidents which you already know about during your association with legless veterans. To us it is the question of, Do we have to put ourselves in "hock" for the next 15 months paying for such a necessity toward our proper rehabilitation? We did not have the opportunity to deal ourselves in the war profits. We had another important job to do which everyone knows how well it was done. This job did not leave us financially stable. Now we find ourselves in the position of paying for our much needed cars by sweat and toil and by cutting down on important items in our budget. To us that does not seem fair. You, Mrs. ROGERS, and countless others in Congress have foreseen such a predicament and are trying to alleviate such a situation by your bill to provide us cars. We have hope and faith that others in Congress will also see the light of day and will shortly lighten our burden and help us toward our proper and normal station in life as citizens of a great country.

Regardless of the outcome of your bill, you have earned our undying gratitude and will always be remembered by us as a credit to our country. God bless you.

RETIREMENT LEGISLATION

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. GIFFORD. Just one thought for you people who seem to have a worrisome mind about salary and retirement matters. I have been here more than a score of years. My bankers are well informed that I have had to carry on business in order to remain in Congress. How do I reason about the effect of your raising pay, with certain retirement privileges? Simply like this. My friends should and will be pleased if something comes my way. My opponents have probably become so discouraged at getting me out that they will rejoice at the bait that the retirement will offer me to retire. Cannot you take a little comfort in such a viewpoint as I have expressed?

COMMITTEE ON IRRIGATION AND RECLAMATION

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I objected to the unanimous-consent request of the gentleman from Arizona to hold an executive hearing of a subcommittee of the House Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation. I did it only because I happen to know there are only three members of that subcommittee left in the city of Washington; consequently the subcommittee could not act with intelligence and authority on the matter. The matter to be considered, as stated by the gentleman from Arizona, is very important to my State and I believe the subject should be given the consideration of the full subcommittee.

CARE FOR AMPUTEES

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. It is with considerable reluctance that I address my colleagues upon the bill being proposed by the gentlewoman from Massachusetts. I can speak to you with a very deep personal concern and experience upon this matter. I know what men go through when they suffer the loss of their legs or their arms.

It is my humble opinion, Mr. Speaker, that this bill if stripped of its emotional appeal will not stand the careful scrutiny of our innermost conscience and judgment.

For several months now Members of Congress have been buttonholed by men who have lost a limb asking that they be given a car so they can get around better and get a job. It seems to me that if the men need additional funds that it would be far better to appropriate them $1,500 in cash and let them either buy a car or use it as they see fit. In my opinion, the bill is discriminatory, because it does not take care of the individual who has lost his arm or perhaps his eyes. It merely provides for those men of World War II who may have lost a leg.

The Government now pays the soldiers who have lost a limb money as long as they live. A generous Government has tried to smooth the way for these unfortunate individuals. I do feel, however, Mr. Speaker, that the individual in this Congress who is sponsoring the legislation to give the amputees the car is doing a lot of harm to these amputees. I believe the final result is that of an inferiority complex. They feel the Government owes them something. They get into a mental slump. They begin to pity themselves. They are unable to adjust themselves to the conditions which exist.

I hope the Congress will pardon a very personal experience, because as a physician I feel I can speak very frankly to my colleagues. I know from experience that it is necessary to make friends and adjust yourself to the loss of a limb. For 6 months after I had lost my limbs, I cried like a baby every time I took them off or put them on. It was necessary to discipline myself rather severely. I did wear both of my limbs and stood at the operating table and performed a major operation 2 months after the amputation. Within 6 months I was wearing my limbs most of the time. I lost my limbs when I was 42 years old, and for the last 10 years I have been able to do about everything I wanted to do. You are never comfortable wearing an artificial limb, but it is necessary to accept the condition and do the best you can.

I have had the opportunity of visiting men in the Naval and Army hospital, as well as at Glenn Dale, and talked with men who had had the misfortune of losing a limb. I have tried to instill in them some confidence. I find now that some of these men who come to the Capitol, and they are here nearly every day, have had their limbs amputated as much as 18 months ago. Yet they come up here not wearing artificial limbs. The men tell me that the limbs they get in the Government hospitals are not satisfactory; that they feel uncomfortable. I do know that many of the limbs are poorly made, but no limb that they might make will be entirely comfortable.

I have contacted General Kirk on numerous occasions, asking why these men who have had their limbs amputated more than 6 months and who have a good stump do not wear artificial limbs. I have recently scolded some of these amputees because while they do have limbs they refuse to wear them. I think this is entirely a wrong attitude. I know they must make friends with their disability. They must do that. If they do not they will soon get an inferiority complex which will follow them all of their days. There is no reason why a man who has had his limb off more than 6 months and who has a good stump should not be wearing an artificial limb and doing about everything he wants to do without the use of a car. The car does not restore his limb.

I would also point out, Mr. Speaker, that the man who has had his limbs amputated at the hips will never walk by himself. These men are to be greatly pitied. I would go as far as any one in this Congress in seeing that they had all the comforts it is possible for a generous Government to give them. I am certain, however, that a car is not the answer. If they need additional funds to use a taxicab or a private conveyance, the money ought to be made available to them.

I hope the Members of this Congress will not be carried away by an emotional reaction because men with limbs missing come to visit them. This is not sound legislation. The car will soon be gone but the limb can never be replaced.

I say again, these amputees have a definite obligation to themselves to accept their condition as it is; put on their artificial limbs and start adjusting themselves to conditions so they may again become useful members of society. I know they can do it. I know it from experience.

TOLL BRIDGE ACROSS CUMBERLAND RIVER, BURKESVILLE, KY.

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7046) to revive and reenact the act entitled "An act granting the consent of Congress to the State highway commission, Commonwealth of Kentucky, to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Cumberland River at or near Burkesville, Cumberland County, Ky." approved May 18, 1928.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. HOLMES of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, and I shall not object, will the gentleman explain the bill?

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill introduced by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION] to revive and reenact the act of 1928 authorizing the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge over the Cumberland River near Burkesville, Ky.

Mr. HOLMES of Massachusetts. This has a unanimous report from the subcommittee and the full committee?

Mr. CHAPMAN. It was unanimously reported by the subcommittee and the full committee.

Mr. HOLMES of Massachusetts. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act approved May 18, 1928, and heretofore extended by an act of Congress approved March 2, 1929, granting the consent of Congress to the State highway commission, Commonwealth of Kentucky, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Cumberland River, at or near Burkesville, Cumberland County, Ky., be, and is hereby, revived and reenacted: Provided, That this act shall be null and void unless the actual construction of the bridge herein referred to be commenced within 1 year and completed within 3 years from the date of approval hereof.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendments:

"SEC. 2. Section 2 of Public Law No. 436 of the Seventieth Congress, approved May 18, 1928, is amended to read as follows:

"'If tolls are charged for the use of such bridge, the rates shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the cost of the bridge and its approaches, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 20 years from the completion thereof. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls. An accurate record of the costs of such bridge and its approaches, the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept, and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.'"

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2310) to further extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Friar Point, Miss., and Helena, Ark.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. HOLMES of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, and I shall not object, will the gentleman explain the bill?

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill that has passed the Senate and has been reported unanimously by both the subcommittee and the full Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to further extend the time for the commencement and completion of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Friar Point, Miss., and Helena, Ark.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. This is not one of those speculative bridges which has been brought before the House on many occasions?

Mr. CHAPMAN. The committee of which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOLMES] and I have been members for 15 years has never reported a bill of that kind.

Mr. HOLMES of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Friar Point, Miss., and Helena, Ark., authorized to be built by the Arkansas-Mississippi Bridge Commission and its successors and assigns by an act of Congress, approved May 17, 1939, heretofore extended by acts of Congress, approved May 27, 1940, and July 14, 1941, and revived and reenacted by acts of Congress, approved February 12, 1944, and July 14, 1945, are hereby further extended 1 and 3 years, respectively, from the date of approval of this act.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FOURTEENTH STREET POTOMAC RIVER BRIDGE

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7109) to amend section 6 of Public Law No. 516 of the Seventy-ninth Congress, approved July 16, 1946.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. HOLMES of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand this is just to correct a clerical error in the bill which passed the House some time ago with reference to the Potomac River Bridge.

Mr. CHAPMAN. The gentleman's statement is correct.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 6 of Public Law No. 516 of the Seventy-ninth Congress, approved July 16, 1946, entitled "An act authorizing and directing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to construct two four-lane bridges to replace the existing Fourteenth Street or Highway Bridge across the Potomac River, and for other purposes," is amended as follows: Wherever in said section 6 the words "the National Capital Park Service" occur they are changed to read "the National Park Service."

With the following committee amendments:

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ARMY NURSES

Mrs. BOLTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mrs. BOLTON. Mr. Speaker, may I call the attention of the Members of the Congressional War Parents' Association to an extension of remarks for whose insertion in the Appendix of the RECORD I have secured unanimous consent.

Mr. Speaker, it is to be hoped that the War Department and the Army will follow the example of the Congress and bring the antiquated methods which stultify action and interfere with necessary changes more nearly into harmony with the tempo of today's world.

Recently I gave this House the history of the proposed Army Nurse Corps bill, a vital piece of legislation if nurses are to be used in the Army, which left the Surgeon General's office for GI on November 11, 1945, and has been received for introduction and introduced by the Military Affairs Committee only within the last few days. A bill covering promotions of Medical Corps specialists and one covering medical technicians of all sorts came to committee on the same day. I have been informed that it is too late for committee consideration of these exceedingly important measures. This is due, Mr. Speaker, to methods that border upon maladministration that should be changed promptly.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANDOLPH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include two editorials.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a report by Milton H. Button, director of the Wisconsin Department of Agriculture, on the matter of the banning of Wisconsin milk in Knoxville, Tenn.

JOHN J. COCHRAN

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, when I came here 12 years ago one of the first Members I met was our friend the gentleman from Missouri, JACK COCHRAN. During the past year many Members of the House have become discouraged and have refused to stand for reelection. Some of them have accepted positions where their ability was recognized and well rewarded. Some disheartened and unwilling to longer endure the abuse of irresponsible radio commentators and columnists or to meet the well-financed campaigns of pressure groups have made half-hearted campaigns and have been defeated. But in spite of the many grievous misfortunes with which he met, and several were sufficient to break the courage of the average man, the gentleman from Missouri, JACK COCHRAN, never gave way to discouragement. Though but for what some think was political treachery he would have been Senator from his State, perhaps Vice President, and later the President of our country. He never waivered in his loyalty to his party. He never at any time failed to realize that he was the servant of the people, devoted to the service of the Nation.

He was a worthy foe, always tenacious, always fighting to the end for his views, but at all times kind, courteous, and considerate of his opponents.

In my humble judgment during the 11 years which I have served here, no more worthy servant of his district and the Nation has been a Member of this House, has taken a more active and worth while part in the deliberations and the actions of the House, has served with more ability and courage.

I, for one, regret and I am sure that every Member of this House regrets the fact that because of his recent severe illness and his present condition our friend the gentleman from Missouri, JACK COCHRAN, has seen fit to resign from this body. In doing so he has but given us another illustration of his unselfishness, of his high conception of the duties of a citizen, of the obligation which rests upon each of us to give our best to the service of our country.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I simply wish to state that the applause following that speech was to reecho the sentiments of the gentleman from Michigan and not on the resignation of the Member.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, anyone who knows the gentleman from Missouri, JACK COCHRAN, knows that applause was a spontaneous tribute from the hearts of the Members to the long and faithful service, the ability, and the courage, the unselfishness and devotion of the gentleman from Missouri, JACK COCHRAN, as a Member of the House of Representatives. His friendship, his devotion to his duty will ever be an inspiration to me.

EDITH FRANCES DE BECKER SEBALD

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1478) to record the lawful admission to the United States for permanent residence of Edith Frances de Becker Sebald.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LESINSKI]?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain this bill?

Mr. LESINSKI. This bill is with reference to a Japanese woman whose father was a British subject and whose mother was Japanese. She married an American soldier, and just because she is of the Japanese race she is not permitted to enter the country.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And she is the wife of an American soldier?

Mr. LESINSKI. Yes; she is.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, there are a number of bills I understand in the gentleman's committee that have to do with people in similar categories to the one just mentioned. There is one general bill offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JUDD] and one by myself with reference to a Japanese who has been here, employed very faithfully in the Army Map Service. He is married to an American woman and has two children. He is being deported back to his native land and his wife and children are to be left in this country. I hope something will be done to prevent the deportation of these Japanese citizens who have done such outstanding service for this country during the war.

Mr. LESINSKI. I agree with the gentleman. The subcommittee has not made a full report on that bill as yet, but the committee has sent a letter to the Attorney General's Office, that all deportations of that type should stop until the Congress passes some legislation to take care of the cases which the gentleman is talking about.

Mr. HINSHAW. I would like to say to the gentleman that I had a letter the day before yesterday from the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization simply postponing the deportation of the gentleman I mentioned until September 24, when the Congress will not be in session.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LESINSKI. I yield.

Mr. JUDD. Will the gentleman not agree that the Attorney General's Office ought to notify promptly the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization so that such letters will not go out terrifying families with the idea that they are going to be torn apart in September?

Mr. LESINSKI. I agree with the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Attorney General be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to record the lawful admission for permanent residence of Edith Frances de Becker Sebald, who entered the United States at San Francisco, Calif., on June 23, 1939, and that she shall, for all purposes under the immigration laws, be deemed to have been lawfully admitted as an immigrant for permanent residence.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONALITY ACT OF 1940

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 513) to amend the Nationality Act of 1940 to preserve the residence for naturalization purposes of certain aliens who serve in the military or naval forces of one of the Allied countries during the Second World War or otherwise assist in the Allied war effort, and for other purposes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this seems to be very broad legislation, covering a wide field. I think we are entitled to a full explanation.

Mr. LESINSKI. This deals with certain aliens who were legally in America when the war broke out and who joined the armed forces of one of the allied nations. The purpose of the bill is to give them a chance to become American citizens without having to wait the customary 5 years. It is for the relief of alien soldiers who fought with the Allied armies or in the American Army.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. They were formerly residing in the United States?

Mr. LESINSKI. They were permanent residents; yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 307 of the Nationality Act of 1940, approved October 14, 1940 (54 Stat. 1142; U. S. C., title 8, sec. 707), be, and it hereby is, amended by adding thereto a new subsection to be lettered "subsection (e)" and reading as follows:

"(e) Any alien who has been lawfully admitted into the United States for permanent residence and who, during the Second World War, departs from the United States for the purpose of serving and does serve in the military or naval forces of any country at war with a country with which the United States was, is, or shall be at war, or who during the Second World War departs from the United States for the purpose of taking employment in war work of any such country and does engage in such work, shall, upon establishing to the satisfaction of the Commissioner that he has met the requirements of this subsection, be considered as residing in the United States for the purpose of naturalization, notwithstanding any such absence from the United States: Provided, That such alien returns to the United States for permanent residence within 1 year after the United States shall cease to be in a state of war. For the purpose of this subsection, the Second World War shall be deemed to have commenced on September 1, 1939, and shall continue until such time as the United States shall cease to be in a state of war."

SEC. 2. That section 10 (d) of the Immigration Act of 1924, approved May 26, 1924 (43 Stat. 158; U. S. C., title 8, sec. 210 (d)), be, and it hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"(d) For the issuance of the permit, and for each extension thereof, there shall be paid a fee of $3, which shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts: Provided, That no fee shall be required for the extension of a permit issued to any member of the class of aliens referred to in section 307 (e) of the Nationality Act of 1940, as amended."

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. LESINSKI: Strike out lines 1 to 20, inclusive, on page 2 of the bill and substitute the following:

"(e) The continuity of residence in the United States for naturalization purposes shall not be considered as having been interrupted by the action of an alien who was a lawful permanent resident of the United States in departing from the United States (1) after September 1, 1939, and before December 7, 1941, for the purpose of serving in, if he was honorably discharged from, the armed forces of a foreign country at war with a country which declared war on the United States, or (2) on or after December 7, 1941, with the consent of his local draft board, the Director of the Selective Service System, or the appropriate military or naval authorities of the United States if the alien had been inducted, for the purpose of serving in, if he was honorably discharged from, the armed forces of the country of his allegiance, such country being at war with a country at war with the United States: Provided, That the provisions of this subsection shall be applicable only to those aliens who return to the United States for permanent residence within a period of 1 year from the date of the enactment of this subsection and are lawfully readmitted into the United States as immigrants."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

By unanimous consent House Resolution 657 was laid on the table.

RELINQUISHING OF MINERAL RIGHTS UNDER CERTAIN LANDS IN THE COUNTY OF SANTA BARBARA, CALIF.

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Military Affairs, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 5692) to relinquish the mineral rights of the United States under certain lands in the county of Santa Barbara, Calif.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, how much land is designated in this bill?

Mr. SIKES. If my distinguished friend will permit, I suggest that the author of the bill would be glad to make a full explanation.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I think we should have a thorough explanation.

Mr. DOYLE. Mr. Speaker, in 1942 in the County of Santa Barbara, the Federal Government acquired title to several thousand acres of land of agricultural and semiagricultural nature for airfield purposes.

The parcel covered by this bill is approximately 724 acres out of a total of about 4,000. The Government paid for it $37 an acre as highly developed agricultural land with water thereupon.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. What was the going market price at that time?

Mr. DOYLE. The going price without water was about $30 an acre and without its being highly developed agricultural land.

I may state that the records of the Government show that at the time of the acquisition of this land—I mean all the land, about 4,000 acres—there was no intention to acquire the mineral rights on any of the parcels; nevertheless, on this parcel there was a mutual mistake and the mineral rights were included with the fee rights.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Who previously owned the land?

Mr. DOYLE. This particular land is part of an estate of a man who is now dead, a resident of my city, a Mr. O'Donnell. This land is now owned by the estate.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Is there any reason to believe that since the deed passed there has been discovered any mineral rights or any oil?

Mr. DOYLE. There has not been, I am informed. There has been no development of any sort there. The proposed bill has been amended by an amendment requested by the War Department, to which there is no objection and which amendment places this land on exactly the same footing as all the other parcels acquired. That is the purpose of this bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It is very easy for confusion in the War Department. As I understood the gentleman to say, the man sold his property and he got the going price at the time, and the Government reserved the mineral rights. Now, the Government must have had a reason for the reservation. Now, why should we pass the rights at this time back to the former owners?

Mr. DOYLE. I may say to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts that the difference on the 724 acres was $7 an acre only on an appraised value resulting from the intensive cultivation of the 724 acres and the fact there was water on the 724 acres.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. He must have been satisfied with the price.

Mr. DOYLE. The Government records and the Government communications show they did not intend to acquire the mineral rights. That is the official Government record.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. But the official deed shows they were reserved to the Government.

Mr. DOYLE. There was no reservation in the owner of the mineral rights in the deed, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOYLE. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Is it not a fact that in connection with lands owned by the Department of the Interior the mineral rights are always reserved in all the lands that the Government owns?

Mr. DOYLE. This has nothing to do with the Department of the Interior.

Mr. RICH. That is the policy of the Government on Interior Department-owned lands, and we own one-third of the West. Why should we give up now the mineral rights that the Government owns on lands that are in the War Department?

Mr. DOYLE. I may say to the gentleman that it is not the fixed policy of the War Department to always acquire mineral rights. In fact, I have a letter here from the Secretary of War himself, Robert P. Patterson, showing that there is no objection to the bill. The restrictions that were imposed on this parcel were unusual by mutual mistake and it was not intended to be so restricted by the War Department.

Mr. RICH. It seems to me it is unusual that the Government would buy this land and owning it now from the heavens to the depth that they would now want to sell the mineral rights under it. The Government does not do business that way unless there is a reason. Now, what is the reason? Are there minerals under there and, if so, what is the value of them?

Mr. DOYLE. I may say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the Government is not selling the mineral rights here. The Government is undertaking to correct a mutual mistake that shows up from the time the appraisement was filed. In July 1942, the appraised value paid by the Government showed this land was not inclusive of the mineral rights; then it went to the courts with dozens of other properties and through mutual mistake, admitted by all Government departments, the mineral rights to this parcel were not reserved to the owner. This bill is merely for the purpose of placing the owner of this land in exactly the same status as all the other owners and I may also say to the gentleman that the difference of $7 an acre would not begin to cover the mineral values. The gentleman no doubt knows that.

Mr. RICH. Any one selling land in the gentleman's State does so with the intention and purpose of the owner selling the land above the surface and below the surface; is that the custom?

Mr. DOYLE. It is very often the custom.

Mr. RICH. If that had been done in this instance, the owner would have reserved that right?

Mr. DOYLE. I may say that in the transfer of thousands of titles to parcels of land it is not unusual to make mutual mistakes. Here is a case where right from the time of the Government appraisal the record shows there was no intention to acquire mineral rights to this land, and every department has said in writing that there was a mutual mistake, that $7 an acre does not represent the mineral value, but is the difference in value on account of agricultural development and water on the land.

Mr. RICH. Had you any knowledge before that there were any minerals under that land before the sale was made to the Government?

Mr. DOYLE. Oh, all over that area, I may say to the gentleman, there is no question but what there were the possibilities of minerals.

Mr. RICH. Have you discovered anything since that would cause you to believe that the Federal Government now has real estate out there in which there are valuable mineral rights?

Mr. DOYLE. We have not, not that I know of. There has been no discovery and there have been no drillings.

Mr. RICH. I understand that every man that has a piece of property in the gentleman's State does not reserve all the mineral rights when he sells it, unless it is specifically stipulated in the agreement to the contrary, and if it has not been stipulated in the agreement then I do not see why we should now turn back to the owner the mineral rights under that land unless there is consideration made by the purchaser to the Federal Government for it.

Mr. DOYLE. I will say to the gentleman that the record shows that there is no consideration paid for mineral rights.

Mr. RICH. Unless it is stipulated, it is understood that when you buy land you buy it from the top to the bottom.

Mr. DOYLE. No; that is not always true in California, I will say to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. RICH. I object, Mr. Speaker.

PETER KIM

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bills (S. 1607) to provide for the naturalization of Peter Kim.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the bill?

Mr. LESINSKI. The War Department letter shows that Peter Kim was commissioned a second lieutenant in the Army of the United States on February 25, 1946; that he has given valuable service during the war but being of Oriental race he is not eligible to citizenship unless by a special bill. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JUDD] is familiar with the case.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Speaker, this Korean was so anti-Japanese he went to China and fought there against the Japanese. He joined the American Army, volunteered for especially hazardous missions, received a decoration, and was commissioned, as the gentleman from Michigan has stated.

The Army recommends the passage of this bill which certainly is a well deserved reward for loyalty, bravery, and devotion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That upon compliance with all other provisions of section 701 or 702 of the Nationality Act of 1940, as amended (56 Stat. 182–183; 8 U. S. C. 1001–1002), Peter Kim, Army of the United States, Army serial number 10500015, may be naturalized pursuant to either of said sections as may be applicable, notwithstanding the fact that at the time of his enlistment or induction into the armed forces of the United States, he had not been lawfully admitted to the United States and was not a resident thereof.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NATIONALITY ACT OF 1940

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 6995) to amend the Nationality Act of 1940 to preserve the nationality of citizens residing abroad.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain this bill?

Mr. LESINSKI. I will ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] to explain it.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, this simply extends the time of repatriation of those American citizens who have been living abroad, and, because of the war, could not get back. The time has expired to come back and maintain their citizenship, and this extends the time so that they can.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 409 of the Nationality Act of 1940, as amended (54 Stat. 1171; 55 Stat. 743; 56 Stat. 779; 58 Stat. 747; 8 U. S. C. 809), is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 409. Nationality shall not be lost under the provisions of section 404 or 407 of this act until the expiration of 6 years following the date of the approval of this act: Provided, however, That a naturalized person who shall have become subject to the presumption that he has ceased to be an American citizen as provided for in the second paragraph of section 2 of the act of March 2, 1907 (34 Stat. 1228), and who shall not have overcome it under the rules in effect immediately preceding the date of the approval of this act, shall continue to be subject to such presumption for the period of 6 years following the date of the approval of this act unless it is overcome during such period: Provided further, That during the period beginning October 14, 1946, and ending on October 13, 1950, a person who establishes to the satisfaction of an American diplomatic or consular officer before whom application is made for a passport that he was unable to return to the United States prior to the date of the application because of his inability to obtain an exit permit to depart for, or transportation to, the United States, shall retain his nationality by returning to the United States, and such passport, if issued, shall be valid only for such period as may be required for the bearer's return to the United States, but not exceeding 60 days."

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 16, after the words "United States", strike out down to and including the word "days" on line 18, and insert "during such period and during the period of validity of his passport. Any passport issued upon an application under this proviso shall be valid only for such period as may be required for the bearer's return to the United States, but not exceeding 60 days, and shall be appropriately identified by the issuing officer as having been granted pursuant to the requirements of this proviso."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF TIME LIMITATION ON CERTAIN PATENTS

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6346) providing for the exclusion of the time limitations under which patents were issued in the case of persons who served in the military or naval forces of the United States during World War II.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain what this bill does?

Mr. LANHAM. This is a bill providing that the boys who were in the service who had patents may have the time of their patents extended for the length of time they were in the service. We did that after the last war. These boys cannot protect their rights unless similar legislation is passed now.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Do they have any rights left after that bill that was passed yesterday, the atomic energy bill?

Mr. LANHAM. I hope this will not be interfered with by the legislation that was passed here yesterday. We have been trying to protect these veterans.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I know you are trying to protect them, and I am for it, but I wonder if they can be protected now.

Mr. LANHAM. I hope so. I think my sentiments with reference to that other measure are perhaps the same as the gentleman's.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. O'HARA. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I compliment the gentleman from Texas for bringing out this legislation, which gives to these men who have been in the service some protection, particularly in what would ordinarily be the fruitful years of their inventions. I hope the bill will pass.

Mr. LANHAM. I thank the gentleman. It certainly should pass. We enacted similar legislation after the last war, and it is for the proper protection of these boys in the service.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person who served honorably in the military or naval forces of the United States at any time between December 7, 1941, and September 2, 1945, both dates inclusive, and was subsequently honorably discharged, may within 6 months after the enactment of this act, upon payment of a fee of $20, make application to the Commissioner of Patents, comprising a verified statement, accompanied by supporting evidence of the following facts:

(A) That he is the inventor or discoverer of an invention or discovery for which a specified patent was granted prior to the 2d day of September 1945, the original term of which remains unexpired at the time of the filing of the application.

(B) That between December 7, 1941, and September 2, 1945, and also at the time of the passage of this act, he held, by ownership or contract, a right in said invention or under said patent or to income by way of royalty or otherwise therefrom, whereby an extension of the term of said patent would benefit him.

(C) That between December 7, 1941, and the date of enactment of this act, he was not receiving from said patent an income, or that his income therefrom was reduced by his said service.

(D) That at the time of his induction into the service he was making diligent effort to exploit the invention covered by his patent.

(E) The names of all persons, firms, or corporations, if any, holding at the time of the passage of this act, by grant, transfer, license, or contract from him, any right or interest in the invention or discovery or under the patent, and their consent to the extension for which application is made, which shall be supported by an instrument, or instruments, executed by all such persons, firms, and corporations, evidencing their consent to such extension.

(F) The period of extension of the patent from the expiration of the original term thereof, for which he applies, which shall in no case exceed a further term of three times the length of his said service in the military or naval forces of the United States between the dates of December 7, 1941, and the date of enactment of this act, but exclusive of any reenlistment subsequent to September 2, 1945.

(G) That the licensee of a patent affected by this act shall automatically be granted an extension of said license for the period of the extension on the same terms and conditions as contained in said existing license, thereby creating an equitable adjustment of the benefits of this act.

(H) That such extension shall in no way impair the right of anyone who before the passage of this act was bona fide in possession of any rights in patents or applications for patents conflicting with the rights in any patents extended under this act, nor shall any extension granted under this act impair the right of anyone who was lawfully manufacturing before the passage of this act the invention covered by the extended patent.

SEC. 2. In the case of a veteran, as described in paragraph 1 of this act, who dies, or has died, or who becomes insane or unable to act, which veteran owned an interest as described in this act in said patent at the time of his death or at the time he was declared mentally incompetent or became unable to act before said extension is granted, such application may be filed or proceeded with by his legal representatives substantially as provided in section 4896 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended (U. S. C., 1940 edition, title 35, sec. 46), with respect to proceedings in such cases for obtaining a patent.

SEC. 3. On the filing of such application the Commissioner of Patents shall cause an examination thereof to be made, and if, on such examination, it shall appear that such application conforms, or by amendment or supplement is made to conform, to the requirements of section 1 of this act, the Commissioner shall cause notice of such application to be published at least once in the Official Gazette. Any person who believes that he would be injured by such extension may within 45 days from such publication oppose the same on the ground that any of the statements of the application for extension required by section 1 of this act is not true in fact, which said notice of opposition shall be verified before an officer authorized by the laws of any State or Territory or the District of Columbia to administer oaths. In all cases where notice of opposition is filed the Commissioner of Patents shall notify the applicant for extension thereof and set a day of hearing. If after such hearing the Commissioner of Patents is of the opinion that such extension should not be granted, he may deny the application therefor, stating in writing his reasons for such denial. Where an extension is refused the applicant therefor shall have the same remedy by appeal from the decision of the Commissioner as is now provided by law where an application for patent is refused. If no opposition to the grant of the extension is filed, or if, after opposition is filed, it shall be decided that the applicant is entitled to the extension asked for, the Commissioner of Patents shall issue a certificate that the term of said patent is extended for the additional period for which application has been made as aforesaid, and shall cause notice of such extension to be published in the Official Gazette and marked upon copies of the patent for sale by the Patent Office, in such manner as the Commissioner may determine.

SEC. 4. Thereupon said patent shall have the same force and effect in law as though it had been originally granted for 17 years plus the term of such extension: Provided, however, That in any action, at law or in equity, for infringement after the expiration of 17 years from the grant of the patent and during the period of such extension, the defendant may plead the general issue, and having given notice in writing to the plaintiff or his attorney 30 days before, may prove on trial that any of the statements of the application for extension required by section 1 of this act is not true in fact; and if any one or more of such statements shall be found untrue in fact, judgment shall be rendered for the defendant, with costs: Provided further, That no person whose patent shall be extended under the provisions of this act shall be permitted to make any claim for damages against the United States for the period of the extension, and the rights of the United States shall remain in all respects as if these patents had not been extended.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 7, after the comma following the word "Act", insert "or within 6 months after such honorable discharge if still in the military or naval forces of the United States at the time of such enactment."

Page 2, line 17, strike out "by" and insert "as a direct result of."

Page 3, line 6, strike out "in no case exceed a further term of three times" and insert "be for a further term equalling."

Page 5, line 7, after "Commissioner", insert "to the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals."

Page 5, line 8, strike out "an application for patent is refused." and insert "an applicant for patent is dissatisfied with the decision of the Patent Office Board of Appeals."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. HEALY. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the District of Columbia, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2359) to close the office of the Recorder of Deeds on Saturdays.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, do I understand that this is simply to permit the Office of the Recorder of Deeds to close on Saturdays like other offices do?

Mr. HEALY. It is the same as was recently done in connection with the banks in the District of Columbia.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, there are many people who work every day during the week. If the office of the recorder of deeds is not kept open, how will the people who work on weekdays transact their business?

Mr. HEALY. I may say to the gentleman that the banks are now closed on Saturday and, as you know, since the war ended, most of the Government agencies are now on a 5-day week. This is the only office of the District of Columbia government which has been kept open on Saturday. Through experience it has been found that there is little if any need for this office to be open on Saturday. It has been an extra expense to the District of Columbia to keep it open and keep the employees on duty for the few occasional people who do come in.

Mr. RICH. If you say there is no need to keep it open, then there is no use to keep it open.

Mr. HEALY. That is correct.

Mr. RICH. But if the office is not going to accommodate the people of the District of Columbia and if it is not supposed to do that, then that is all right. But if you are trying to take care of the people of the District, I will leave this entirely up to you whether there is going to be any difficulty for the people to be able to attend to their business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions of any other act, the Office of the Recorder of Deeds for the District of Columbia shall be closed on every Saturday.

SEC. 2. Any writing, the time for recording of which expires on a Saturday, or on a Sunday, shall be deemed to have been recorded within the time prescribed if such writing be recorded on the first day thereafter other than Sunday or a legal holiday.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. HEALY. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the District of Columbia, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2125) to amend the act entitled "An act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1901, and the acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is the reason for barring a commissioner from being reappointed?

Mr. HEALY. Under existing law, a commissioner cannot be reappointed at the conclusion of his term of office. There must be an intervening period of 3 years. The reason for requesting this change is to make it possible for a commissioner to be appointed upon the conclusion of his present term so that in the event it is desirable to reappoint a commissioner of the District of Columbia it would be possible to immediately reappoint such commissioner. At the present time, it is impossible.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. This legislation says that no person who has served as such commissioner shall be eligible for reappointment within 3 years of the date of expiration of his term.

Mr. HEALY. As I understand it, that is the existing law. The purpose of this bill is to amend that law and make it possible for a commissioner to be reappointed without having to wait 3 years.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Has the committee had a meeting on this bill?

Mr. HEALY. No meeting has been held by the committee on it. The members of the committee have been polled on this bill and the bill has been approved by the Department of Justice and also by the District of Columbia Commissioners.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. What is the urgency of passing this legislation now?

Mr. HEALY. This bill was just passed by the Senate, I believe, 2 or 3 days ago.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. But what is the reason which makes it necessary to pass it at this time?

Mr. HEALY. I presume that the terms of some of the commissioners may expire in the near future and without this bill it would be impossible to reappoint any commissioner whose term has expired.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Can the gentleman state whether or not someone's term has expired?

Mr. HEALY. I am not sure.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I think the House had better wait before considering this legislation.

Mr. HEALY. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my request.

REGULATING SALE OF MILK IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. HEALY. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the District of Columbia, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 7114) to amend the act entitled "An act to regulate within the District of Columbia the sale of milk, cream, and ice cream, and for other purposes," approved February 27, 1925.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill affects a very vital necessity—milk. We have had so many battles here on that subject that I would like to know just what this bill does.

Mr. HEALY. This amendment to the existing law will make it possible for the dairy industry in the District of Columbia to use newly developed pasteurization processes. At the present time, under existing law, the latest pasteurization process is illegal.

I might advise the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] that at the present time 40 States have already amended their laws so that this new pasteurization process can be used. This bill has been approved by the dairy industry of the District of Columbia, by the District of Columbia Health Department, the United States Public Health Service, the Bureau of the Budget, and the District Commissioners. I believe the bill was originally requested by the dairy industry, because of the fact that the new process for pasteurization cuts in half the time required to pasteurize milk.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I note the bill was introduced only on July 23. Have there been any hearings?

Mr. HEALY. There has been no hearing before the committee. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] introduced the bill at the request of the dairy industry, and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. I am not advised of the reason for its late introduction.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEALY. I yield.

Mr. PACE. What is this new pasteurization process?

Mr. HEALY. I do not understand the process.

Mr. PACE. What is in the law that prohibits the milk industry's using the most modern inventions?

Mr. HEALY. There is a requirement that milk be heated at a certain temperature for a certain length of time. With this new process that length of time is cut in half. The limitation in the present law is one that requires, say, 3 minutes instead of a minute and a half, which is all that is necessary with the new process.

Mr. PACE. Will you limit them in this new bill so that they cannot take advantage of any further progress?

Mr. HEALY. This bill will only take care of the process which has been invented and is in practice in 40 States, as I have heretofore indicated.

Mr. PACE. So that if there is ony further progress, another bill will be required?

Mr. HEALY. Another bill will be required.

Mr. PACE. Has this process been approved by the Public Health Service?

Mr. HEALY. The District of Columbia Health Department, the United States Public Health Service, the Bureau of the Budget, and the District Commissioners have all approved it.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The legislation appeals to me, but in view of the fact that the committee has not taken any official action on it and no hearings have been held, I feel it should be withdrawn at this time.

Mr. HEALY. Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw the request at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California withdraws the request.

COMPENSATION FOR SERVICES RENDERED IN NURSERIES AND NURSERY SCHOOLS

Mr. HEALY. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the District of Columbia, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 7126) to amend section 2 of the act of July 16, 1946 (Public Law 514, 79th Cong.), relating to the establishment and operation in the District of Columbia of nurseries and nursery schools, so as to permit payment of compensation for services rendered after June 30, 1946, and prior to the enactment of such act.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, as I understand, this simply provides for payment for one period of 2 weeks for a number of people?

Mr. HEALY. That is correct. As the gentleman knows, this program has been going on for about 4 years, first under the Lanham Act and then under the war chest, and now under a bill recently passed by the Congress. However, due to delay in the bill going through committees in both Houses, it did not become a public law until July 16 when the President signed the bill. Employees who worked for this program during the 15 days took a chance on whether or not the program would continue, remained at their posts and continued their work from July 1 to the 15th. They cannot be paid for that time unless this bill is passed.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And that is all this bill does?

Mr. HEALY. That is all this bill does.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. How many people are affected?

Mr. HEALY. Seventy-five people.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEALY. I yield.

Mr. RICH. How many people are there in the District of Columbia, who are making over $5,000 a year, who send their children to these child centers?

Mr. HEALY. Under the bill recently passed by the Congress, no one earning $5,000 is eligible for this program. The gentleman is referring to the manner in which the program was carried on during the war, under the Lanham Act funds, when everybody was encouraged to take jobs in industry to speed the war effort.

Mr. RICH. That is right. How many people in the District of Columbia now who are getting in the family, salaries from the District of Columbia or the Government that equal $5,000 a year? Are there any?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the second sentence of section 2 of the act of July 16, 1946 (Public Law 514, 79th Cong.), is amended to read as follows: "The Board is authorized to employ teachers, attendants, clerks, custodians, and other persons necessary to provide such day care and to pay compensation for their services, including services rendered after June 30, 1946, and prior to the date of enactment of this act, in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AUTHORIZING THE TREASURY TO CONTINUE ACCEPTANCE OF DEPOSITS OF PUBLIC MONEYS FROM THE PHILIPPINES

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BELL].

Mr. BELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2348) to authorize the continuance of the acceptance by the Treasury of deposits of public moneys from the Philippine Islands.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is a bill which has been on the Consent Calendar. It was objected to by one of the Republican objectors, the gentleman from New York [Mr. COLE], simply because it had no termination date. I understand the gentleman from Missouri is willing to accept an amendment to that effect.

Mr. BELL. That is correct.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. For the benefit of the Membership I wish the gentleman would explain what the legislation does.

Mr. BELL. In the past the United States Treasury has accepted deposits from the Philippines. Since then the new republic has been born. This bill is to permit the United States Treasury to continue to accept such deposits, sinking funds, and deposits of that nature.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of June 11, 1934 (48 Stat. 929; U. S. C., title 48, sec. 1157), is hereby amended by inserting after the words "government of the Philippine Islands" the words "or the Republic of the Philippines."

SEC. 2. This act shall be effective on the date the independence of the Philippine Islands is proclaimed by the President of the United States.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts: On page 1, line 9, after "President of the United States", strike out the period and insert the following: "and shall terminate on July 1, 1951."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REPEAL OF CERTAIN WAR AND EMERGENCY STATUTES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS].

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of H. R. 7147, to repeal certain statutes relating to the war and emergency.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman state what this does? It is a meritorious bill. I am sure no one is opposed to it.

Mr. HOBBS. I thank the gentleman for his kind statement.

Mr. Speaker, the Committee on the Judiciary is particularly proud to report this bill. As our distinguished Member from Michigan has so well said, we had referred to our committee six resolutions dealing with the termination of the two emergencies, the hostilities lately pending and the war. We have studied the problem arising out of these six bills since early last October, daily. We have had the assistance furnished us by various agencies exercising these powers which would be terminated immediately were these six resolutions to be adopted. So when we got to the bottom of the problem we found that there were over 400 war power statutes that had been passed by both Houses and approved by the President of the United States, under which various agencies of our Government were exercising multitudinous war powers. We concluded after a thorough study of each one of the 400 laws that we could not dispense with some of them because of the continuing necessity for the powers being exercised under some, but that it was highly desirable to do away with many others. Therefore, as we could not report a bill that would terminate the war for some purposes and not for others, we have finally agreed unanimously on this bill and its accompanying report. Its enactment into law will repeal some 40 or 50 of the war powers acts that are on the books, and in the case of about 100 others we found that the agencies which were exercising powers under them agreed with the Judiciary Committee that it was the intent and purpose of the legislation that the powers therein conferred should be exercised only while the shooting part of the war was raging. So your committee in its report here calls attention to the fact that there is agreement on that score and we congratulate those agencies that have concurred in our construction and have ceased since VJ-day to exercise any of those powers. We recommend that the practice be continued.

The effect of the bill that we bring to you and ask passage by unanimous consent today is simply that there will be by virtue of your favorable action a repeal of these 40 or 50 statutes and the continuance of the voluntary cessation of activity under some 100 other war powers laws, a total of 140 to 150.

Mr. MICHENER. To make a long story short, all this does is to repeal some 52 war powers laws. The House is interested in repealing these emergency laws. This bill does that, and it is done with the approval of every one of the departments affected. The Committee on the Judiciary wanted to get rid of many of these laws, as many as could be gotten rid of with safety; therefore, all the departments were called in and the departments have agreed that these 52 laws can be eliminated without injury to the Government. I think we ought to make short work of this bill and get rid of these laws.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I am glad to know that the committee is paring down some of these emergency war powers. The gentleman will remember I had a resolution before his committee to declare the war at an end 6 months after the signing of the surrender on the battleship Missouri. I am concerned right now about another situation. I have a letter from Paul Porter which relates to the Second War Powers Act and the reestablishing of slaughter quotas. You will remember when the first OPA died the slaughter quotas were taken off the small slaughterers. This permitted them to kill cattle and hogs unrestricted. The result has been a great flow of meat to the public. Mr. Porter tells me in a letter received today that they are still under the Second War Powers Act as it relates to slaughter quotas. I believe they are to be put on again. I am concerned about how long the war is going to continue and how long we are going to permit bureaucrats like Paul Porter or any other bureaucrat to issue rules and regulations that have the full force and effect of law without the approval of the Congress. I think the gentleman's committee should take steps to stop that type of regulation coming from the OPA because if he reinstates slaughter quotas it is going to cause chaos and confusion and it will be disregarded in many sections of the country. The greatest move this Congress can take is to cancel all war power emergency and declare the war has ended.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I am examining the committee report on this bill and note that there are a great many important statutes that are being repealed, and I hope and trust that the press or some other organization will publish to the people of the United States just what these statutes are that are being repealed, because I am sure, with the way this is being carried on at the present moment, very little notice will be given nationally. This bill repeals a great many important statutes, relating to oil, mineral, and gas leases, 90 days annual leave, and a great many bills of that character. It is a highly important bill. I certainly cannot object to it, but I hope notice is given of the statutes that are repealed, because there are so many important ones involved.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I would like to know whether this bill eliminates any personnel from the Federal pay roll?

Mr. HOBBS. Not in words, but of course, the net result will be along that line. What we do is simply to repeal these statutes.

May I give a word of explanation because I feel it should be made. I just want to say that there are 52 statutes indicated in the bill to be repealed, but that we had included in that list of 52 some general appropriation bills which carried war powers. So, we have an amendment which will cut out those.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. The gentleman stated that all the parties concerned approved this measure.

Mr. HOBBS. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I cannot imagine how any Government employee would approve any bill that had any prospect of eliminating his job.

Mr. HOBBS. Let me say it is highly commendable that that is true in this case.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, of course, the repeal of these acts will result unquestionably in lowered employment because you do away with a number of activities in which Federal employees have been working, and therefore you do, as the result of the passage of this bill, reduce the number of employees on the Federal pay roll, although you do not do it directly.

Mr. HOBBS. That is correct, sir.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, may I say for the benefit of the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SMITH] that subcommittee 4, which has had this matter before it, heard many of the department heads, and many of the assistants testified, and with reference to these acts which are now being repealed by this present bill they have all agreed that those acts should be repealed, and with reference to something like 100 in addition, they have also agreed that they will go out of existence very promptly.

Mr. HOBBS. The gentleman is exactly right.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I wonder if the gentleman from Alabama would insert a statement in the RECORD as to just what statutes are being repealed.

Mr. HOBBS. Such a list is set out in full in the report.

Mr. MICHENER. May I say that those laws are set out in the bill. You cannot repeal a law without directly or indirectly naming it.

Mr. JONES. The point I wanted to make was that if that were done it would very easily be found in one spot for ready reference. It must be codified by somebody eventually.

Mr. MICHENER. The bill provides:

That the following statutes or parts of statutes are hereby repealed:

Act of August 11, 1939 (ch. 701, 53 Stat. 1418).

Act of July 30, 1941 (55 Stat. 610), as amended by Fifty-seventh Statutes, 270, and act of June 8, 1945 (Public Law 78, 79th Cong., 1st sess.).

Act of July 31, 1945 (Public Law 168, 79th Cong., 1st sess.).

Mr. JONES. I thank the gentleman. That is what I had in mind.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I notice in the list of acts repealed, there was one passed by the Congress last year, which was reported out by the Committee on Agriculture, the act of February 28, 1945, an amendment to the Agricultural Adjustment Act, which provides that:

During the present emergency certain farms are to be regarded as farms on which cotton, wheat, or peanuts, as the case may be, were planted and grown.

I beg the gentleman's opinion as to why he regards that act as no longer needed, when it was enacted particularly for this year, next year, and the year following. Certainly if we repeal that statute we are going up the hill and right back down again. This statute should remain in effect until we return, if ever, to the acreage allotment, or until a sufficient number of years has passed so that the war years will not be a part of the base period. This act provides that when a boy was in the service and could not plant an allotment, he would be treated as if during that time he had planted those crops. But we are still in the base period as far as the war is concerned.

Mr. HOBBS. We are fully cognizant of that fact. Will the gentleman refer to the bill and not to the report?

Mr. PACE. I am using the report, because the bill does not convey any information as to what the act is, but simply gives the date.

Mr. HOBBS. I think the gentleman will find that this repealer does not affect the entire statute.

Mr. PACE. What is the line of the bill?

Mr. HOBBS. I am sorry; I do not know, sir.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACE. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is it not a fact that the attorneys for the Department of Agriculture, along with the attorneys for the various departments of the Government, checked over all these statutes?

Mr. HOBBS. Yes, sir; I so understand.

Mr. SPRINGER. They recommended that each one of the statutes which are set forth in this bill be repealed.

Mr. PACE. Of course, I cannot question such a statement's having been made, but that is an act we passed last year for the special purpose of having it in effect for the next few years, so that boys who were in the service and could not plant the crops that form the base for future acreage allotments would not be penalized. The act should remain in effect either until acreage allotments are reinstated or until the base period has passed. I assume the bill must be considered in the Senate. I certainly do not intend to oppose the bill here. However, I would appreciate it if the distinguished gentleman from Alabama would check my contentions and, if they are correct, ask the Senate to strike this particular repeal from the bill.

Mr. HOBBS. I will be delighted, and thank the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I understand that if consent is granted for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution the chairman will be recognized to offer an amendment to authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, with the consent of the National Advisory Council, with their approval, and after consultation with them, to make a loan of $75,000,000 to the Philippines in accordance with Senate Joint Resolution 388.

ADJOURNMENT RESOLUTION

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution (H. Con. Res. 165) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress shall adjourn on Friday, August 2, 1946, and that when they adjourn on said day they stand adjourned sine die.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. KOPPLEMANN) there were—ayes 168, noes 3.

So the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6303) to amend the provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act relating to marketing agreements and orders.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain this bill again? This is the bill whose consideration was requested earlier?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. This extends the marketing agreements so as to keep them in effect irrespective of whether the crop price level is above or below parity. It does not affect in any way the wool growers because section 4, which broadened the act to take in other agricultural products, was eliminated.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, when the request was made earlier for the consideration of this measure I objected. I was not quite clear on the matter of section 4. I am assured that section 4 will be eliminated. It is on that basis that I am withdrawing my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, and as reenacted and amended by the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended, is further amended as follows:

By adding at the end of section 2 (U. S. C., 1940 edition, title 7, sec. 602) the following:

"(3) Through the exercise of the powers conferred upon the Secretary of Agriculture under this title, to establish and maintain such minimum standards of quality and maturity and such grading and inspection requirements for agricultural commodities or the products thereof, other than milk and its products, in interstate commerce as will effectuate such orderly marketing of such agricultural commodities as will be in the public interest."

SEC. 2. Section 8c (6), as amended (U. S. C., 1940 edition, title 7, sec. 608c (6)), is amended to read as follows:

"(6) In the case of agricultural commodities and the products thereof, other than milk and its products, orders issued pursuant to this section shall contain one or more of the following terms and conditions, and (except as provided in subsection (7)) no others:

"(A) Limiting, or providing methods for the limitation of, the total quantity of any such commodity or product, or of any grade, size, or quality thereof, produced during any specified period or periods, which may be marketed in or transported to any or all markets in the current of interstate or foreign commerce or so as directly to burden, obstruct, or affect interstate or foreign commerce in such commodity or product thereof, during any specified period or periods by all handlers thereof.

"(B) Allotting, or providing methods for allotting, the amount of such commodity or product, or any grade, size, or quality thereof, which each handler may purchase from or handle on behalf of any and all producers thereof, during any specified period or periods, under a uniform rule based upon the amounts sold by such producers in such prior period as the Secretary determines to be representative, or upon the current quantities available for sale by such producers, or both, to the end that the total quantity thereof to be purchased, or handled during any specified period or periods shall be apportioned equitably among producers.

"(C) Allotting, or providing methods for allotting, the amount of any such commodity or product, or any grade, size, or quality thereof, which each handler may market in or transport to any or all markets in the current of interstate or foreign commerce or so as directly to burden, obstruct, or affect interstate or foreign commerce in such commodity or product thereof, under a uniform rule based upon the amounts which each such handler has available for current shipment, or upon the amounts shipped by each such handler in such prior period as the Secretary determines to be representative, or both, to the end that the total quantity of such commodity or product, or any grade, size, or quality thereof, to be marketed in or transported to any or all markets in the current of interstate or foreign commerce or so as directly to burden, obstruct, or affect interstate or foreign commerce in such commodity or product thereof, during any specified period or periods shall be equitably apportioned among all of the handlers thereof.

"(D) Determining, or providing methods for determining, the existence and extent of the surplus of any such commodity or product, or of any grade, size, or quality thereof, and providing for the control and disposition of such surplus, and for equalizing the burden of such surplus elimination or control among the producers and handlers thereof.

"(E) Establishing or providing for the establishment of, reserve pools of any such commodity or product, or of any grade, size, or quality thereof, and providing for the equitable distribution of the net return derived from the sale thereof among the persons beneficially interested therein.

"(F) Requiring or providing for the requirement of inspection of any such commodity or product produced during specified periods and marketed by handlers.

"(G) In the case of hops and their products, in addition to, or in lieu of, the foregoing terms and conditions, orders may contain one or more of the following:

"(i) Limiting, or providing methods for the limitation of, the total quantity thereof, or of any grade, type, or variety thereof, produced during any specified period or periods, which all handlers may handle in the current of or so as directly to burden, obstruct, or affect interstate or foreign commerce in hops or any product thereof.

"(ii) Apportioning, or providing methods for apportioning, the total quantity of hops of the production of the then current calendar year permitted to be handled equitably among all producers in the production area to which the order applies upon the basis of one or more or a combination of the following: The total quantity of hops available or estimated will become available for market by each producer from his production during such period; the normal production of the acreage of hops operated by each producer during such period upon the basis of the number of acres of hops in production, and the average yield of that acreage during such period as the Secretary determines to be representative, with adjustments determined by the Secretary to be proper for age of plantings or abnormal conditions affecting yield; such normal production or historical record of any acreage for which data as to yield of hops are not available or which had no yield during such period shall be determined by the Secretary on the basis of the yields of other acreage of hops of similar characteristics as to productivity, subject to adjustment as just provided for.

"(iii) Allotting, or providing methods for allotting, the quantity of hops which any handler may handle so that the allotment fixed for that handler shall be limited to the quantity of hops apportioned under preceding section (ii) to each respective producer of hops; such allotment shall constitute an allotment fixed for that handler within the meaning of subsection (5) of section 8a of this title (U. S. C., 1940 edition, title 7, sec. 608a)."

SEC. 3 Section 10 (b) (2) (U. S. C., 1940 edition, title 7, sec. 610 (b) (2)) is amended to read as follows:

"(2) (i) Each order relating to milk and its products issued by the Secretary under this title shall provide that each handler subject thereto shall pay to any authority or agency established under such order such handler's pro rata share (as approved by the Secretary) of such expenses as the Secretary may find will necessarily be incurred by such authority or agency, during any period specified by him, for the maintenance and functioning of such authority or agency, other than expenses incurred in receiving, handling, holding, or disposing of any quantity of milk or products thereof received, handled, held, or disposed of by such authority or agency for the benefit or account of persons other than handlers subject to such order. The pro rata share of the expenses payable by a cooperative association of producers shall be computed on the basis of the quantity of milk or product thereof covered by such order which is distributed, processed, or shipped by such cooperative association of producers.

"(ii) Each order relating to any other commodity or product issued by the Secretary under this title shall provide that each handler subject thereto shall pay to any authority or agency established under such order such handler's pro rata share (as approved by the Secretary) of such expenses as the Secretary may find are reasonable and are likely to be incurred by such authority or agency, during any period specified by him, for such purposes as the Secretary may, pursuant to such order, determine to be appropriate, and for the maintenance and functioning of such authority or agency, other than expenses incurred in receiving, handling, holding, or disposing of any quantity of a commodity received, handled, held, or disposed of by such authority or agency for the benefit or account of persons other than handlers subject to such order. The pro rata share of the expenses payable by a cooperative association of producers shall be computed on the basis of the quantity of the agricultural commodity or product thereof covered by such order which is distributed, processed, or shipped by such cooperative association of producers. The payment of assessments for the maintenance and functioning of such authority or agency, as provided for herein, may be required under a marketing agreement or marketing order throughout the period the marketing agreement or order is in effect and irrespective of whether particular provisions thereof are suspended or become inoperative.

"(iii) Any authority or agency established under an order may maintain in its own name, or in the name of its members, a suit against any handler subject to an order for the collection of such handler's pro rata share of expenses. The several district courts of the United States are hereby vested with jurisdiction to entertain such suits regardless of the amount in controversy."

SEC. 4. Section 8c (2) (U. S. C., 1940 edition, title 7, sec. 608c (2)) is amended by inserting a colon in lieu of the period at the end thereof and by adding the following: "Provided, That, in addition to the commodities specified, orders may be issued pursuant to the provisions of this section with respect to other agricultural commodities or the products of such commodities or to any regional or market classification thereof if (A) the Secretary determines that the issuance of an order with respect to any such commodity or product would more effectively advance the interests of the producers thereof, pursuant to the declared policy, and (B) a majority of the producers of such commodity or product, who, during a representative period determined by the Secretary, have been engaged, within the production area specified by the Secretary in the production for market of the commodity specified, or who, during such representative period, have been engaged in the production of such commodity for sale in the marketing area specified by the Secretary, voting in a referendum conducted by the Secretary, approve or favor the application of the provisions of section 8c to such commodity or product. Subsection (12) shall be applicable to any such referendum."

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 2, strike out "or the products thereof."

Page 2, line 3, after "products," insert "and not including vegetables, other than asparagus, for canning."

Page 2, line 9, strike out all of lines 9 to 13, inclusive, and insert the following:

Page 8, beginning in line 8, strike out all of section 4, and insert the following:

"SEC. 4. Section 8c (2) (U. S. C., 1940 edition, title 7, sec. 608c (2)) is amended by inserting after the word "pecans" the following: "almonds."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ESTABLISHING TWO ADDITIONAL OFFICES OF ASSISTANT SECRETARIES OF AGRICULTURE

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5757) to establish two additional offices of Assistant Secretaries of Agriculture, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. May I point out to the gentleman from New York that there is an urgent necessity for this legislation. At the present time the Department of Agriculture is staffed by a Secretary, an Under Secretary, and one assistant. Since the one assistant and Under Secretary were appointed, the duties of the Department have been greatly increased. Since then we have placed under the Department the Soil Conservation Program, the Farm Security program, and the Farm Credit, Agricultural Adjustment and the Rural Electrification programs. All these activities have been added to that Department since the appointment of the Under Secretary in 1934. They need these two policy-making assistants.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, the trouble is that we are loading the Government with such an enormous bureaucracy that there will be nothing left but the Government of the United States with nobody to pay the taxes.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I do not think this will add a single person to the personnel of the Department.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLANNAGAN]?

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 5757) to establish two additional offices of Assistant Secretaries of Agriculture and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia withdraws his motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill H. R. 5757.

IMPORTATION INTO, OR THE DEPOSITING IN TERRITORIAL WATERS OF, THE UNITED STATES OF GARBAGE DERIVED FROM PRODUCTS ORIGINATING OUTSIDE OF THE CONTINENTAL UNITED STATES

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7101) to protect American agriculture, horticulture, livestock, and the public health by prohibiting the unauthorized importation into, or the depositing in the territorial waters of, the United States of garbage derived from products originating outside of the continental United States, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain the legislation?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I shall ask the gentleman from California [Mr. PHILLIPS] to explain the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PHILLIPS. This bill was prepared after a conference between representatives of the Army, the Navy, the Maritime Service, the private shippers, the Great Lakes shippers, the Department of Agriculture, the California Department of Agriculture, and the representatives of the agricultural commissioners of the States bordering on the ocean. It provides for the disposal of garbage when the garbage reaches the United States on ships, so that the hoof-and-mouth disease, rinderpest, and other diseases of that kind may be prevented. I know of no objection to the bill. The bill now presented is the bill authorized after the conference to which I referred.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) for the purposes of this act—

(1) The term "garbage" means waste material, such as food scraps, table refuse, galley refuse, and refuse from stores of ships, railway cars, and aircraft, including such waste material in passengers' and crews' quarters, derived, in whole or in part, from fruits, vegetables, or animal products which have originated outside of, and have not previously legally entered, the continental United States.

(2) The term "fruits, vegetables, or animal products" shall not include fruits, vegetables, or animal products, purchased as ships' provisions in Canadian ports on the Great Lakes, unless there is in effect, with respect thereto, a proclamation issued under subsection (b) of this section.

(3) The term "vessel" means every description of craft or other contrivance used, or capable of being used, as means of transportation on or in water.

(4) The term "aircraft" means every description of craft or other contrivance used, or capable of being used, as means of transportation through the air.

(5) The term "person" means an individual, partnership, corporation, company, society, or association, a State or any agency thereof, or a political subdivision of a State or any agency thereof; and such term imports the singular or plural, as the case may be.

(6) The term "United States", when not limited by the adjective "continental", includes all Territories and possessions of the United States, with the exception of the Philippine Islands and the Canal Zone.

(7) The term "continental United States" means that part of the United States located on the continent of North America, including Alaska, but excluding Hawaii, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and the Canal Zone.

(8) The term "territorial waters of the United States" means all navigable waters of the United States, including all portions of the sea within its jurisdiction.

(9) The term "land" means not only that part of the earth's surface usually connoted by that term, but includes any building, platform, or other structure affixed to the land, whether permanent or temporary, and any pier, dock, wharf, or bridge extending into or across territorial waters of the United States.

(10) The term "authorized representative of the United States" means any employee of the United States Department of Agriculture, any customs, immigration, or public-health officer of the United States, and any commissioned, warrant, or petty officer of the United States Coast Guard, authorized by the Secretary of Agriculture to enforce the provisions of this act.

(11) The term "authorized garbage collector" means any person holding an unsuspended and unrevoked authorization from the Secretary of Agriculture to collect garbage from vessels, railway cars, aircraft, and other vehicles arriving in the United States.

(b) Whenever the Secretary of Agriculture finds that any type or kind of fruit, vegetable, or animal product, purchased as ships' provisions at Canadian ports, is likely to be a source of contagious disease dangerous to humans or animals, he shall issue a proclamation to that effect; and, whenever, after issuing any such proclamation the Secretary finds that such type or kind of fruit, vegetable, or animal product, so purchased, is no longer likely to be a source of contagious disease dangerous to humans or animals he shall by order revoke such proclamation.

SEC. 2. For the purpose of protecting American agriculture, horticulture, livestock, and the public health, the following acts are hereby prohibited and made unlawful:

(a) Throwing, discharging, or depositing garbage, or causing, suffering, or procuring garbage to be thrown, discharged, or deposited, from any vessel, railway car, aircraft, or other vehicle into any territorial waters of the United States unless such garbage has been reduced to fluid form.

(b) Throwing, discharging, carrying, or depositing garbage, or causing, suffering, or procuring garbage to be thrown, discharged, carried, or deposited, from any vessel, railway car, aircraft, or other vehicle onto land within the United States: Provided, however, That garbage may be so carried and deposited in tightly closed containers, for immediate incineration or for delivery to an authorized garbage collector, if arrangements have been made with said collector immediately to receive the same, or it may be otherwise safeguarded in a manner satisfactory to the authorized representative of the United States.

(c) The retention or maintenance of garbage on vessels, railway cars, aircraft, or other vehicles within the United States except in tightly closed containers and under such treatment as may be prescribed by an authorized representative of the United States.

SEC. 3. The presence in a vessel, railway car, aircraft, or other vehicle, for consumption therein, of animal products not permitted entry under the sanitary laws of the United States, or of fresh fruits or vegetables which have originated outside of the continental United States shall constitute prima facie evidence that garbage which has accumulated in the vessel, railway car, aircraft, or other vehicle has been derived, in whole or in part, from such animal products, fruits, or vegetables, and, for the purpose of ascertaining whether any such animal products, fruits, or vegetables are being transported in any vessel, railway car, aircraft, or other vehicle arriving in the United States, any authorized representative of the United States shall have power, without warrant, to inspect any such vessel, railway car, aircraft, or other vehicle.

SEC. 4. No customs entry need be filed nor duty paid with respect to any garbage disposed of in accordance with the provisions of this act.

SEC. 5. Any authorized garbage collector with whom arrangements to receive garbage have been made by the owner, operator, master, or other person in charge of any vessel, railway car, aircraft, or other vehicle entering the United States, or by any authorized representative of such owner, operator, master, or other person, shall upon receipt of notice that garbage has been carried from such vessel, railway car, aircraft, or other vehicle and deposited upon land within the United States, proceed without delay to the place of such deposit and handle and treat the said garbage in accordance with the directions of an authorized representative of the United States.

SEC. 6. (a) The owner or operator, or the master or other person in charge, of any vessel, railway car, aircraft, or other vehicle, aboard or from which a violation of section 2 of this act occurs, shall be liable to a penalty of not more than $1,000, and the vessel, railway car, aircraft, or other vehicle shall be liable for the payment of such penalty and may be proceeded against by way of libel in the district court of any district in which the said vessel, railway car, aircraft, or other vehicle may be found: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture shall have authority to limit or mitigate any such penalty under such terms and conditions as he may deem just and reasonable.

(b) Any authorized garbage collector or any agent or employee of such collector who shall violate any provision of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $500 or by imprisonment for not more than 6 months, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court. In addition, the Secretary of Agriculture, in his discretion, may suspend or revoke the authorization of such garbage collector to collect garbage under this act. Nothing in this paragraph shall be construed, however, as requiring the Secretary of Agriculture to report for prosecution minor violations of this act (or of the regulations issued thereunder) whenever he believes that the public interest will be adequately served by a suitable notice or warning.

SEC. 7. When construing and enforcing the provisions of this act, the act, omission, or failure of any officer, agent, or other person acting for or employed by any individual, corporation, company, society, or association, within the scope of his employment or office, shall in every case be also deemed to be the act, omission, or failure of such individual, corporation, company, society, or association, as well as of such officer, agent, or other person.

SEC. 8. The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to prescribe rules and regulations, for administrative purposes only, in connection with the carrying out of the provisions of this act.

SEC. 9. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act. Funds appropriated pursuant to this authorization shall be available for allotment by the Secretary of Agriculture to the bureaus and offices of the Department of Agriculture and for transfer to other departments and agencies of the Government which the said Secretary may call upon to assist, or cooperate in carrying out such purposes or for service rendered or to be rendered in connection therewith.

SEC. 10. If any provision of this act or the application thereof to any person or circumstance is held invalid, the validity of the remainder of the act and of the application of such provision to other persons and circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 11. Nothing contained in section 13 of the act of March 13, 1899 (30 Stat. 1152; 33 U. S. C., 1940 edition, 407), shall be construed as forbidding the discharge of fluid garbage into the territorial waters of the United States.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WEATHER BUREAU STATION, LANSING, MICH.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1198) to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to sell certain property in the State of Michigan now occupied by the Weather Bureau and to acquire land in the State of Michigan for the election of a Weather Bureau station.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain the bill?

Mr. FLANAGAN. I shall ask the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO], who is interested in the bill, to explain it.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, this bill is a very unusual bill, because Michigan wants to pay the Federal Government some money. Through this legislation the Federal Treasury will receive and not pay out funds. The Federal Government has a Weather Bureau station on the campus of Michigan State College at East Lansing. The State of Michigan wants to buy the building and the site and use it for college purposes. The State is to provide a site to the Federal Government for a new station outside the campus. This is a most unusual bill, because money is to be paid the Federal Government for the property described which it now owns. I know of no objection. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BLACKNEY], in whose district this station is located, is vitally interested in the bill. He is eager for its passage and has been most diligent in his efforts to obtain approval by Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce is authorized to sell, in such manner and on such terms and conditions as he deems to be to the best interest of the United States, to the Michigan State College of Agriculture and Applied Science, the Weather Bureau station located on the campus of the said college, to convey such property to the said college by quitclaim deed, and to deposit the proceeds of such sale in the Treasury as a miscellaneous receipt.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of Commerce is authorized and directed to acquire a site and cause to be erected thereon a suitable and commodious building for the use and accommodation of the Weather Bureau at East Lansing, Mich., to replace the station authorized to be sold under the provisions of section 1.

SEC. 3. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate by Mr. Koerber, its assistant enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

CURE AND PREVENTION OF CANCER

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 4502) to authorize and request the President to undertake to mobilize at some convenient place in the United States and adequate number of the world's outstanding experts, and coordinate and utilize their services in a supreme endeavor to discover means of curing and preventing cancer, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is hereby authorized and requested to undertake, in whatever manner he may deem most appropriate, to mobilize at some convenient places in the United States an adequate number of the world's outstanding experts, and coordinate and utilize their services through an independent group appointed by him in a supreme endeavor to discover means of curing and preventing cancer; and to take any additional action that he may consider necessary or proper to achieve the desired result.

SEC. 2. The sum of $100,000,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated to enable the President to carry out the provisions of this act to be available until expended.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. The gentlewoman from Massachusetts demands a second, and the Chair will have to recognize a Member on the minority side for that purpose.

Without objection, a second is considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

MOBILIZATION OF WORLD'S CANCER EXPERTS

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY].

Mr. NEELY. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, please come with me down the corridor of tribulation for a momentary, final farewell visit with 480 of our fellow human beings of the United States who, in horrifying agony, will die of cancer during the next 24 hours. If these sufferers should be arranged in the order in which they will set out upon their journey to that undiscovered country from which no traveler returns, the first whom we shall see will die within the next 3 minutes, the second within the next 6 minutes, and so on until this time tomorrow, when the last of the 480 will have passed through the gruesome slaughterhouse which the hideous monster, cancer, ceaselessly operates in this country.

At the conclusion of our visit with these 480 let us remember that 17,000,000 more of those now living in the United States will eventually be destroyed by this most terrifying of all afflictions. When voting on the pending bill, will you not also remember these simple mathematical facts: If the United States were in the regular shape of a rectangle, its borderline would be approximately 7,000 miles long. And if all the 17,000,000 who have been branded for death by cancer should be buried in a straight line touching one another, their grave would reach twice around this entire 7,000-mile border and extend an additional distance as great as that from Boston to the city of Washington.

This, in brief, is the problem which, so far as human flesh and blood are concerned, the bill is designed to help to solve. But the foregoing is manifestly accompanied by a financial problem, because the bill contains a request for an appropriation of a hundred million dollars. Let us consider a few statistics that tend to illuminate this point.

The Members of the Congress, with practical unanimity, appropriated funds to defray the cost of our participation in the Second World War at the rate of $221,043,000 for every day this country was engaged in that titanic struggle. But our appropriations in this matter were for the purpose of conquering a combination of deadly foes, who were able to destroy but 273,000 American service men and women during the entire period between the attack on Pearl Harbor and the final surrender of Japan. In the same time cancer killed 501,019 of the American people.

On the basis established by Dr. Louis I. Dublin, noted statistician for the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., as I recently pointed out to this illustrious body, care and medicine for those who died of cancer in the year 1944 cost us more than $171,000,000. And upon the basis supplied by the same statistician, when the economic value of those whom cancer destroyed is added to the sum paid for medicine and care, it appears that this most terrifying of all earthly scourges extorted from the American people during the year mentioned more than $1,229,000,000.

It is estimated that in the 3 years of the war we spent $335,000,000,000 to conquer the Axis Powers. But during the same 3 years a total of much less than $4,000,000 of public funds was appropriated for the war against cancer which, during every day of this bloody conflict, destroyed almost twice as many of our people as the Nazis and Japanese were able to kill with the unlimited instrumentalities of destruction at their command. These comparative figures should make the living blush as red as blood for shame and cause the dead, if they could rise and speak, scathingly to rebuke us for our senseless inaction and our cruel neglect.

Let me once more remind the House of the well-known fact that cancer has for scores of years been steadily gaining on all the doctors and all the other scientists who have devoted their lives to the battling of this scourge. Except heart disease alone, cancer is the king of all the killers of men. The bill, if enacted, will enable the President and the scientists whom he calls to his aid to make a long overdue new approach to the solution of the cancer problem. It will enable the doctors and scientists whom for ages lack of funds has compelled to fight the cancer monster with bows and arrows to exchange their useless stone-age weapons for those as modern and effectual as the atomic bomb, and with them finally destroy the most dreaded deadly foe to humanity that stalks the world, and thus bestow a never-ending, matchless blessing on mankind.

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, it is with a great deal of pleasure that I support this bill for the mobilization of the world's cancer experts, for I consider this one of the most momentous measures on which this Congress has been called to act.

This Congress has never hesitated to mobilize men for war, nor to appropriate money for armaments and weapons of death, and it was right to do so, and necessary to bring about victory. Now we have an opportunity to mobilize against an enemy that killed more than 500,000 Americans during the 3 years that 273,000 were dying in battle during the war. This enemy, which has risen in the past 30 years from seventh to second place among the death-causing diseases of the United States, strikes at the very fabric of our society and threatens every home. An estimated 17,000,000 Americans now living will die of cancer. To us, through this bill, the chance is given to try and save many of these doomed millions.

A year ago, in August 1945, I called on President Truman to convene a meeting of the leading health authorities of this country to discuss this very subject and to plan a fight against, not only cancer, but also polio, malaria, and similar diseases. This was shortly after the first atomic bomb was dropped, when it appeared that perhaps this new great war weapon had possibilities of leading to new medical discoveries. The President expressed his approval of the plan but did not think the time was then appropriate. I sincerely hope that this bill will pass and that the President will now call such a meeting of experts from all over the world.

Earlier this week I was pleased to vote with the majority that passed the hospital construction and survey bill. That bill was a great step forward in the battle to improve the health of our citizens. I hope many of the hospitals which will be built may be devoted to research and treatment of cancer and that other dread killer—polio. This present bill is a necessary supplement to the hospital bill and has even greater possibilities, holds greater hope for the future. I strongly urge its passage.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, at first I was against this bill because I thought the Public Health could handle the matter. Thinking it over, I realize that I could not vote against any measure that might enlighten the world, particularly our own country, as to what could be done in the cure of cancer.

I wonder how many men on the floor today have a wife who fears she may have cancer, or a wife who is in the agonies of cancer, or a mother who died of cancer, or a brother who died of cancer. In a local hospital there is a ward of cancer cases from this World War. One of the Members of the House lost a brother because of cancer. There is a ward in a hospital in New York for children who have cancer.

It is a horrible disease. You know the number of deaths. You know how it has affected your own family. I earnestly hope, Mr. Speaker, that the bill will pass. I recently heard from the American Society for the Control of Cancer, and they asked me to express their very earnest hope that it would pass.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JUDD].

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Speaker, naturally it is very hard for anyone to oppose a bill which purports to be in the interest of finding the cause and cure of cancer. Particularly is it difficult for an individual who has spent 19 years of his life in the active practice of medicine and surgery, and has dealt with hundreds and hundreds of cancer cases. My own mother had cancer of the breast. I think I know something about it.

I shall never forget the horror, almost terror, I experienced with one of the first cases I ever saw. I was just beginning as an intern. A patient on the ward had cancer of the lip which had extended down into his neck. One day the process eroded into his jugular vein, and despite my frantic efforts, he bled to death on the public ward. I was responsible and the shock is still vivid in my memory.

I take second place to no man or woman in this House or in the country in my concern for discovering the cause and cure of cancer; but, Mr. Speaker, the passage of this bill in any such form as at present is by no means synonymous with an honest-to-goodness, scientific, well-thought-out, carefully planned and considered attack upon that dread disease.

Look at the text of the bill. There is not a single specification in it. It reads:

> The President is hereby authorized and requested to undertake, in whatever manner he may deem most appropriate, to mobilize at some convenient places in the United States an adequate number—> of the world's outstanding experts and coordinate and utilize their services through an independent group appointed by him in a supreme endeavor to discover means of curing and preventing cancer?

Now, of course, the President cannot do all this. Somebody has to do it for him. Somebody else has to decide what manner is appropriate. Somebody else has to coordinate and utilize. Who is that somebody to be? Has the Congress the right, first, to appropriate $100,000,000 without any specification whatsoever as to how and by whom the money is to be spent? And is it right for us to trifle with the emotions, the desperate hopes and awful fears, of thousands of people who already have or who will have this disease, by a grand and pious gesture which makes them think we are doing something for them when we have not the slightest idea whether we are or not?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JUDD. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Is there anything that can be done under this bill outside of spending $100,000,000 that cannot be done in the Cancer Research Institute which has already been set up in Washington and is operating under Federal law?

Mr. JUDD. In my judgment, everything that can or will be done under this bill can be done a great deal better under the cancer research program that is already well established and functioning. Actually, I think this bill is not as likely to help as to create chaos in the whole cancer research program at which a great many of the world's outstanding experts have been working day in and day out for 50 years and more. They never rest from their labors. Now, in this bill we propose to bypass them and set up a new outfit to be controlled and operated by God only knows whom and in what manner nobody can predict.

Yesterday I voted for the hospital-aid bill, S. 191. There were two or three things in that bill which I did not like, but at least we knew what we were voting for. In one place in the bill it specified points 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, as I recall, and we knew exactly what would be done under the bill. Here we do not have the slightest idea of what we are doing. I beg of you, my colleagues, that you do not, under the impulse of a perfectly laudable, proper, and praiseworthy motive and emotion, vote for a bill which, in my judgment, is more likely to harm than to help.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JUDD. I yield.

Mr. BLOOM. I am very much interested in what you are saying. I would like to have the gentleman explain if he can why in all the time and years that these people have been working on this problem that cancer has risen from seventh on the list of deaths to second.

Mr. JUDD. The answer is very simple. It is because the medical profession has found the causes of the diseases that used to kill people at 10, 20, 25, and 35 years of age. Nowadays more people live to the age when cancer usually develops. When doctors discovered diphtheria antitoxin, and sulfa drugs and penicillin so people did not die of diphtheria, or blood poisoning or pneumonia, they produced cancer victims. Cancer is second now because the diseases that used to be second, third, fourth, and so forth, have been so greatly reduced. Somebody here said that 17,000,000, or whatever the figure is, of the people now living in the country are going to die of cancer. Well, I can tell you that 100 percent of the people now living are going to die of something. The fewer that die of tuberculosis or typhoid fever, the more will die of something else. Surely not everyone will have to rush in front of an automobile in order to die.

Mr. BLOOM. Does the gentleman really believe what he is saying? I cannot see it.

Mr. JUDD. I am sorry he cannot see it, but the chief reason why the cancer rate is rising is simply because there are now so many more people in the upper-age brackets where cancer occurs most frequently.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JUDD. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I have been unable to get a copy of the hearings since this bill was called up, but I understood that Dr. Thomas Parran, Surgeon General, made substantially the same criticism as the gentleman when the committee considered the bill. My recollection is that the Surgeon General recommended a number of material amendments which the committee reporting the bill rejected.

Mr. JUDD. The money authorized is not the essential thing. I will not argue a minute about the money. I voted yesterday for even more money for hospitals. I voted a few weeks ago for a definite program for neuropsychiatric research. I voted 2 years or so ago a good many millions for tuberculosis research and care. I will gladly vote money for a comparable cancer program. It is not the money that bothers me; it is the procedure or the lack of procedure in this bill that I object to. We have an excellent Public Health Service. If that is the agency to handle it, let us say so. If it is not good enough, let us scrap it and set up another. But I beg of you not to go off half-cocked, as this bill does. I ask the House to defeat this bill, send it back to the committee, and let them bring in something whose text will make clear what it is we are voting for. I say that, not because I do not want to find an answer to the cancer problem, but just because I do want to find an answer to it. Voting for this vague, undefined grant of money is not the way to do it.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself half a minute just to say that Dr. Parran said he welcomed the opportunity to appear at the hearings in support of the purposes and principle of the bill. That is what the hearings state.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. I am glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BULWINKLE. What did Dr. Parran say in his letter to the chairman of the committee on page 16?

Mr. BLOOM. What did he say? Read it.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I do not want to take the gentleman's time.

Mr. BLOOM. You asked me what he said.

Mr. BULWINKLE. He asked you to have amendments placed in the bill.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I am for the bill.

I remember talking with a general quite a long time ago. It was his initiation to the atomic bomb, or what was then not the atomic bomb. They took him into a room that was filled with scientists and on the wall were patches of all kinds that meant exactly nothing to him. That is where they were working. There were no diagrams. There was nothing spelled out. There was just an objective and nothing more. In pursuance of that objective there were hundreds of millions of dollars incorporated in an appropriation bill that most of the Members of the House did not even know was there. Finally this instrument of victory was fashioned, and there were no meticulous guide lines set out as a course of extended conduct.

Now, the atomic bomb did something besides snuff out 75,000 lives in Nagasaki and Hiroshima. It destroyed a defeatism with which we have been confronted, for God knows how long, in the face of this riddle of cancer. People are determined now that everything can be accomplished if the will and the funds are available. It has sharpened determination in the field of research. It has given the people of this country a sense of proportion. Not one of these people blinked when it was put up to them that a hundred million dollars was proposed as an expenditure to find the answer to this other ghastly killer. The Gallup poll indicated that 87 percent of the people who were queried did not bat an eyelash about the expenditure. They were willing to go along.

You know, there is a little drama about this thing. A few weeks ago over in the Senate hearing room a subcommittee was holding hearings on this matter and Senator PEPPER was in charge. He had introduced a physician there who came originally from Weimar, Germany. That is where one of these ghastly prison camps was located. It was Dr. Max Gerson. He is quite a specialist in that field. He was dependent upon live exhibits to make the case, rather than make it in so many words. Dr. Gerson had an interesting history. Long ago he was such a victim of migraine headaches that quite by accident he stumbled on a remedy for skin tuberculosis, which is known as the Sauerbruch-Gerson diet. So only a few weeks ago in the Senate hearing room this is what happened: Dr. Gerson was there. He brought some of his patients to illustrate his own approach to the cancer problem.

A young lady 17 years old got up on the witness stand right here in this building. She had a malignant tumor of the brain and no operation could be performed. She was paralyzed. Then they began to experiment with her in a hospital in New York. They began to experiment in the whole field of body chemistry, and that young lady was paralyzed, but she walked to the witness stand here in this Capitol and testified before that committee.

There was a sergeant, just as burly and just as brawny as the word "sergeant" implies, who also walked to the witness stand and testified. He also had a brain tumor. They operated but they could not follow up with X-rays because it was too dangerous. Yet, through experimentation and research that has been going on, he managed to walk to that witness stand and testify.

Then, there was another lady appeared who had a cancer of the breast. She was also one of the living exhibits that took place over there.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. In just a moment. Now, they could not claim a cure because the time had not run according to the standards, our accepted medical standards. If I remember correctly, you cannot claim a remedy or a cure unless there has been absolutely no recurrence for a period of 5 years. But here were some living witnesses who did what? They seemed to generate a hope, irrespective of the approach that was taken, that we can lick this thing if we mobilize the scientific brains of the world and the money to go after it. I do not want it inferred that I am promoting any particular approach to this subject. Rather I mention it because in various parts of the world there must be many approaches to the problem of cancer, and if this knowledge can be pooled and a determined research crusade made, we can find the answer.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. BLOOM. I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Brain tumors can be removed and the patients do very well, so you cannot use that here. I would like to see the money appropriated for cancer but not spent through another agency. We have two agencies now, the Cancer Research Institute, the United States Public Health Service, to which this Congress appropriated some $3,000,000 this last year. We have 32 agencies in Government now dealing in some type of research. Why set up another one? Let us use the agencies we now have and force them to do all the research through this Institute.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Very well; the gentleman asks: "Why set up another?" The fact that we had all the agencies we did working on war-winning missiles was not sufficient until we set up the Manhattan project that produced the one that won the victory. There was a job to be done. There was a victory to be won. We were not too concerned about how many agencies and bureaus existed. We wanted an agency that could do a given job and do it now.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. JUDD. I am grateful to the gentleman for making such a good and moving statement on my side of the argument. The cures he has so vividly portrayed were worked out under the cancer research program which is now in operation. Supplement it, expand it, improve it, but do not bypass it with a new half-cocked thing whose results we cannot possibly predict.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I hope the Members will let me continue for a moment.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I thank the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

There is an answer to it. I remember what Dr. Vannevar Bush, whom I regard as probably the best administrative scientist of the United States, said with respect to this very matter. He said that—

> Our problem in the field of the atomic bomb, for instance, was not at first applied research, it was in the field of pure research to develop the approach. Once the approach was developed the rest of it was easy.

The problem here in the field of cancer is the same, it is in the field of pure research to develop the approach. Shall we go on with the technique of eradication through the use of electrosurgery, the use of the knife, the use of X-ray, the use of other things to eliminate cancer? Or are there other approaches such as the chemistry of the body? To think about this body as a chemical laboratory in which there can be generated the curative and the resistive forces that will expel or resist or drive out or dry up cancer might finally prove to be the real solution. Those are the two approaches that have to be considered. In the matter of cancer we should take the same approach we took in the matter of the development of the atomic bomb.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Those things are being done now.

Mrs. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mrs. LUCE. My stepfather and your colleague, Dr. Albert E. Austin, died of cancer. I am therefore naturally sympathetic to this bill; but I do ask: Why not be done with it as long as we are appropriating billions and try to find out what causes the common cold which starts many a person on the way to the grave? And why not find out the causes of heart disease? And, indeed, why not appropriate $5,000,000, and be done with the whole thing? One might just as well do that as appropriate as we did yesterday $400,000,000 without knowing what we were doing. Why stop with cancer?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Let us attack the thing that is the second greatest killer according to the statistics of the big life insurance companies and which should have some persuasive force upon us. The fact of the matter is that every 3 minutes someone dies of cancer, but not every 3 minutes does someone die of a common cold. That is the answer.

We are here talking about the greatest killer on the face of the earth. Certainly if there is one best way of tackling it, it is by a comprehensive plan of getting the best brains in the world together to work on it and to apply the kind of push that finally yielded the secrets of atomic power.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Just a few short days ago my colleague joined in voting down amendments to the atomic development act that would have permitted——

Mr. DIRKSEN. I did not vote that down.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. The majority did. Now you come in here and give a hundred million dollars to President Truman that he will probably use to appoint somebody from Missouri to find out what causes cancer.

Mr. DIRKSEN. A very, very interesting observation, I will say; but what has it got to do with the bill? And what has it got to do with the very serious business of dealing with a killing disease? Levity has its place, but not here.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. ERVIN. I should like to ask one question as a person who has some difficulty in getting to the point where he is willing to appropriate $100,000,000 to be spent by some persons that are unknown in a manner unknown. Why is it put in this bill if it is to be done by creating new agencies rather than by utilizing the services of the research agencies already set up like the Rockefeller Foundation?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I am not averse to putting it in the hands of an independent group. As a matter of fact, I have had a good many dealings with Dr. Parran of the United States Public Health Service. I would like to have a fresh viewpoint from all corners of the earth on the subject. It is so easy to talk of setting up bureaus, but people continue to die of this disease. It is so easy to find refuge in the argument that there should be better guide lines and directives in expending this money, but people still die of cancer in greater numbers than ever before.

Mr. ERVIN. Is that the reason the gentleman is in favor of the provision that this money must be spent through an independent group; in other words, exclude those who have been heretofore studying the matter?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Is this not the way that we found the secret of the atomic bomb? There is no magic to me about the $100,000,000. If you want to make it $50,000,000 all right. The point is that the best brains in the world ought to be mobilized on this job to get it done; then we can move on to all the other afflictions to which mankind is subjected.

Mr. ERVIN. When you write into the bill that this has to be done through an independent group, thereby excluding those who have heretofore been studying it, are you not excluding some of the best brains from further studying the proposition?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I doubt that very much. I have that much faith in the President of the United States that he is interested in the ills of the flesh and wants to see assembled the best brains to give proper attention to this subject. If it is the money argument which disturbs any Member of this House, then tell me how you can justify a vote to spend $100,000,000 for a single battleship with which to destroy life and not be willing to find a $100,000,000 with which to save life and to heal. Tell me how you justify $2,000,000,000 for an atomic bomb which destroyed 75,000 persons and then be unable to find justification for one-twentieth of that amount to save many times that number of our own people. The victims of cancer will find small comfort in any argument about guide lines and bureaus and economy and rules and regulations and what not. They are people. Upon them is the brand of death. They want action and they want it now. This must be a spirited and determined crusade, and this bill is a beginning.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE].

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I realize that anyone who dares oppose this bill in public will have telegrams sent all over the country about him without ever giving the true facts about it. I shall not speak about that.

I shall not speak about the committee which assumed jurisdiction of this bill. That has passed.

But I am speaking to you about a subject which is dear to my heart. One of my relatives died of cancer. Some of the very best friends I have had in my life died of cancer. But heaven knows, I am not getting to the point of dumping $100,000,000 into somebody's lap and raising false hopes among the people of this Nation.

Now, let us see what we have. This Congress in 1937 passed a cancer act and provided for a national cancer institute and a national advisory cancer council.

Who is on that cancer council, if you please, and who is on it today? I doubt if there are many in the House, except probably some members of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee and members of the Appropriations Committee who know. Let me read you the list:

1. Dr. George Smith, Yale University Medical School, New Haven, Conn.
2. Dr. Sherwood Moore, director, Mallinkrodt Institute of Radiology, St. Louis, Mo.
3. Dr. Frank Adair, president of the American Cancer Society, surgeon, Memorial Hospital, New York, N. Y.
4. Dr. Charles Huggins, department of surgery, University of Chicago, Chicago, Ill.
5. Dr. Andrew C. Ivy, professor of physiology, Northwestern University, Chicago, Ill.
6. Dr. Robert S. Stone, professor of radiology, University of California Medical School, San Francisco, Calif.

Dr. Sherwood Moore, who testified before the committee that this research should be given to the existing organization. These are the men who meet from time to time in this Cancer Institute who say what shall be done and what shall not be done. Are they not interested in the welfare of the people of this Nation? Are you going to disregard their work? Ah, but the bill says that we want some foreign experts. The existing law provides that the Cancer Council and the Cancer Institute can call for the foreign scientists. If you do not have sufficient funds to carry out the purposes of the act, then, as I have told everyone in this country, this Congress will provide the funds for that purpose. If the existing law is not sufficient to meet the situation then this Congress will amend existing law.

Very few have read the hearings on this bill; exceedingly few. Why, even the chairman of the committee did not cite that Dr. Parran had said that amendments should be provided in the bill before it passed.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I do not think that is fair.

Mr. BULWINKLE. What did the gentleman say?

Mr. BLOOM. The gentleman asked what amendments Dr. Parran had suggested to the bill. If the gentleman wants them, I will have the Clerk read them. I found them in the hearings since the gentleman asked for them. You will note that this bill has been amended in several particulars, including the reference to the availability of the appropriation suggested by Dr. Parran. However, the committee did not agree with Dr. Parran that the Public Health Service should be designated to serve as the nucleus organization.

Mr. BULWINKLE. That is what I am saying, that the gentleman did not know then, but he found out since I talked about it.

Mr. BLOOM. The gentleman asked what they were. I naturally cannot remember everything in the hearings, and there are a lot of things that the gentleman has forgotten.

Mr. BULWINKLE. So I say to you that you have everything under existing law that is necessary for research in connection with this dread disease. Heaven knows that I admit everything that anyone says on this floor about how horrible cancer is.

I ask you to vote down the motion to suspend the rules.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I mentioned to the Members of the House on a previous occasion that I have made a special study of cancer, and studied under some of the masters in the field of cancer research. I believe I know something about that field and what is being done in it. I have tried to follow the developments of cancer research for a great many years. I have not been as close to the problem in the last few years as I was before I came to Congress, but I think I am still sufficiently in touch with it to have some idea as to what is being done.

It strikes me rather strangely when men get up on this floor and talk about mobilizing the brains of the world in this field. I can imagine what some of the men who are engaged in cancer research would say about a proposition of that kind. You talk as though you can go out and promiscuously, with cash, buy these brains. You cannot do anything of the kind at all. You cannot buy research in this way. We hear it said that because we developed the atomic bomb we are able to discover the cause and cure of cancer. All that is needed is to approach the cancer problem with the same determination that we exhibited in respect to the atomic bomb. It is such comparisons as this which too often lead us to wrong conclusions.

I ask you to give this matter serious and calm consideration. Let us not legislate in this emotional atmosphere. I am afraid if the Congress stays in session a little while longer somebody is going to have a bill up here to prevent sin. I do not see how you can possibly avoid it. I cannot understand why a bill like this was written in the first place. It does not project any program. We hand the President of the United States $100,000,000 to find a cure for cancer. This is a part of the delusion that possesses us that somehow or other by legislation we can cure just about anything.

Mr. SHAFER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. SHAFER. As I understand it, the best brains in dealing with cancer are already employed in research by our great medical houses throughout the country.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Yes; certainly.

Mr. SHAFER. At the present time in this country I understand many of our great concerns manufacturing medicine have banded together. In my district there is now being built a research laboratory to cost $4,000,000, and they have some of the best brains of this country and Europe working on cancer there.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. The Rockefeller Institute contributes a great deal to cancer research. If we have any money to spend in this field would it not be more the part of wisdom to place such funds in the hands of those who direct the existent well organized and developed cancer research institutions?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the remainder of my time.

Mr. Speaker, I want to remind the House that Madame Curie discovered radium, which is used in the cure of cancer. I think we can well have the benefit of the minds of the foreign scientists and doctors who can be helpful. May I also remind the House that Dr. Adair, of Memorial Hospital and a member of the American Society for the Control of Cancer, and Dr. Murphy, of the Rockefeller Institute, also a member of that society, as well as other doctors of great note, have done a great deal of work in cancer and still want more work done in the research and cure of cancer. Dr. Adair testified before the committee on it.

I shall insert in the RECORD the names of some 16 other doctors who have supported this bill.

The names of doctors appearing before the committee are as follows:

Dr. H. J. Bagg, director, Bagg Research Laboratory, Yorktown Heights, N. Y.

Dr. Gemma Barzilai, gynecologist, New York, N. Y.

Dr. Carl Beck, Chicago, Ill.

Dr. Howard Curtis, professor of physiology, Columbia University.

Dr. Andrew J. Donnelly, pathologist, the Institute for Cancer Research, Lankenau Hospital Research Institute.

Dr. G. Failla, Columbia University, New York City.

Dr. Harry B. Friedgood, president and director of research, Cancer Research Foundation of California, Los Angeles, Calif.

Dr. Ira I. Kaplan, director, radiation therapy department, Bellevue Hospital.

Dr. Daniel Laszlo, division of neoplastic diseases, Montefiore Hospital, New York, N. Y.

Dr. Sherwood Moore, Barnes Hospital, and professor of radiology at Washington University Medical School, St. Louis, Mo.

Dr. John E. Moseley, attending radiologist, Sydnham Hospital, New York, N. Y.

Dr. Thomas Parran, Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service.

Dr. John Rehner, Jr., chemist in charge of research on high polymer molecules for the Standard Oil Development Co. (a subsidiary of the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey).

Dr. Simon L. Ruskin, New York City.

Dr. Louis H. Seagrave, director, Cancer Research Foundation of California.

Dr. Philip R. White, director, division of general physiology of the Institute for Cancer Research, Philadelphia, Pa.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY].

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Speaker, I cannot hope to meet the arguments by the distinguished doctors in this House on which organizations should handle cancer research and which should not, or on which bureaucracy should get the glory for the discovery of the cure for cancer. But I do know that in this year, while the clock ticks by and Congress delays action this session, 171,000 additional Americans will die. I say to you that the time is now if we want to help save these lives. If we want to contribute more than this Congress has contributed to human life and human health in any other measure in the past year, let us pass this bill and send this bill over to the Senate of the United States and let them take action. The Senate can modify this, consider which agencies it favors, and turn it over to an independent agency or not, as they choose. But the important thing is, let us take action today and now.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. DOUGLAS].

Mrs. DOUGLAS of California. Mr. Speaker, one out of every eight adults in the United States will die of cancer. The question was asked by the gentlewoman from Connecticut, "Why not start research to discover the cause of the common cold?" What the doctors and scientists testified to before our committee was that whereas in the atomic bomb project the basic sciences were known before scientists started to experiment in the making of an atomic bomb, when we come to molecular life we know nothing. Cancer differs from all other afflictions of men—cancer cells live and breathe. We know nothing about growth, so that in experimenting in cancer research, we may discover anything—even the cause of the common cold. We may discover the secret of life itself. The fact remains that we are handling cancer as we did 2,500 years ago. Dr. Harry B. Friedgood, president and director of research, Cancer Research Foundation of California, said, "Although the present treatment of cancer is a credit to the ingenuity of research scientists, it is still only a modern version of that employed by the Greeks 2,500 years ago, the ancients cut out or burned out what they termed 'anarchistic cells'."

Today the only known cures for cancer are surgery or X-ray treatment.

Cancer, the second greatest killer of man is a masked monster. In heaven's name let us vote to tear that mask away. Let us vote to provide the physical facilities, scientific equipment for engaging the well-paid services of competent research workers in biophysics, biochemistry, biology, bacteriology, immunology, and the neighboring sciences that have a bearing on this problem.

If we are going to find out what cancer is and if we are going to then find a cure for cancer we must vote for this bill.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentlewoman from California has expired.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of the time to the gentleman from West Virginia, the author of the bill [Mr. NEELY].

Mr. NEELY. Mr. Speaker, the few doctors who have testified or spoken against the bill are like the newly wed young woman who, when she was asked whether she could sew, promptly responded: "No, but I can rip up beautifully." These particular members of the medical profession who modestly inform us of their unlimited knowledge and wide experience cannot even tell us whether cancer is a germ disease, or how to save a single life that is threatened by its curse. But they can, with unlimited enthusiasm, "rip up" the pending proposal which is designed to help save from agony and death the 500,000 of our people who now have cancer and the 17,000,000 others of our living whom it has branded for destruction in the days to come. These doctors are among the small minority who are oblivious to the fact that every passing year adds to the demonstrations that cancer cannot be eradicated by any means now known, and that it is impossible with available funds, existing facilities and present methods either to check the persistent acceleration of cancer's terrifying encroachment, or stay the progressive increase of its horrifying destruction in this or any other land.

In the life-and-death struggle against cancer, no country has ever supplied its doctors or other scientists with sufficient funds to enable them to advance even to the age of the flintlock musket. And while we persist in feebly fighting cancer in the manner approved in our grandmothers' days, this brutal destroyer continues to laugh at our calamity and mock at our fear. The few doctors who oppose this measure apparently fail to comprehend the meaning of unerring statistics which demonstrate that every nation on earth has, for generations, been traveling and is still traveling a cancer road that leads straight to the sepulcher of the human race.

In the words of James Russell Lowell:

The time is ripe, and rotten-ripe for change;
Then let it come: I have no dread of what
Is called for by the instinct of mankind.

I appeal to the House to pass the bill, and thus make it possible for the President, in cooperation with preeminent scentists such as Dr. Einstein, those who solved the problem of utilizing atomic energy, members of the National Academy of Science, and outstanding experts from the great institutions of learning and investigation of the United States and all other countries on the globe to proceed at once to do what never has been done, namely, solve the problem of curing and preventing cancer—the unmitigated curse which, if not assaulted by means as revolutionary as the atomic bomb, will eventually destroy the last of the human race and make the world as voiceless as the tomb.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM] that the rule be suspended and the bill be passed as amended.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLOOM) there were—ayes 70, noes 107.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 126, nays 139, answered "present" 1, not voting 164, as follows:

TITLE TO LANDS BENEATH TIDAL AND NAVIGABLE WATERS

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and concur in the Senate amendment to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 225) to quiet the titles of the respective States, and others, to lands beneath tidewaters and lands beneath navigable waters within the boundaries of such States and to prevent further clouding of such titles.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Page 3, after line 21, insert:

"The United States excepts from this disclaimer and retains all right, title, and interest claimed and asserted by Presidential Proclamation No. 2667 of September 28, 1945, or otherwise to the subsoil and sea bed of or the resources in the continental shelf lying oceanward from the area described in the first clause (1) of the preceding paragraph."

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Does any Member of the minority demand a second?

Mr. HINSHAW. I demand a second, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the motion?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. On the last suspension that rule was not invoked. Both Members who controlled the time were in favor of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Since the question has been raised, the Chair thinks the opposition is entitled to the time.

Does the gentleman from Alabama demand a second?

Mr. HOBBS. I do, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. No amendment is in order.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I have an agreement with the gentleman from Texas that I would be permitted to offer an amendment to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows nothing about that agreement. An amendment to this motion is not in order.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] is recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, this is a matter with which I believe the Members of the House are very familiar. This is the tideland bill which passed the House not very long ago almost unanimously. The amendment adopted in the Senate excludes from the operation of this bill the territory contiguous to the States known as the Continental Shelf, which is a very shallow part of the ocean extending out from the continent. The purpose of the amendment of the Senate is to exclude that land beyond the limits disclaimed by the States from the operation of this bill. The motion is to concur in that amendment which has been adopted by the Senate.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. Does it include or exclude the shore line of the Great Lakes?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The bill as it passed the House excludes all the shorelines of the Lakes. As stated, the Senate amendment now being considered has to do only with the Continental Shelf extending out into the ocean.

Mr. DONDERO. It only applies to tideland shores?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Permit me to make this statement which I believe may clarify the situation: The Members of the House know that submerged lands under navigable waters and 3 miles from the shore under the old English law belonged to the King. When the Thirteen Colonies gained their independence it was recognized that they acquired all the titles which the King had. From the beginning of our independence it has been held that the submerged lands that bordered the States for 3 miles beyond the shore belonged to the States. That is true with reference to the lands under the navigable rivers—river beds—as the gentleman will recall.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. DINGELL. So that I may get the situation clearly, and I believe that my colleague from Michigan is interested in the very same thing that I am interested in, does this proposal which is now on the Speaker's desk give Michigan protection so far as her shoreline is concerned?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is right.

Mr. DINGELL. And it puts all other Great Lakes States on a par with the western seaboard and the eastern seaboard and the Gulf coast?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes. This bill affects land like the land in Chicago that has been reclaimed and the land in Boston where the people have built and land in San Francisco where the people have built.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The gentleman very kindly stated that the exception embraced in the Senate amendment embraces the shelf on the Pacific coast. I ask the gentleman from Texas if there is a similar shelf or a shelf within the meaning of that amendment along the Gulf coast east or west of the Mississippi River.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do not know of any such shelf. It may be but I never heard it spoken of with reference to the Texas coast. I do not believe any of the States are attempting to establish or claim sovereignty on land in the shallow parts of the ocean beyond the strip, as to most States extending 3 miles from shore. Of course, in the Gulf States it goes some farther than 3 miles.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Then this amendment does not change the Gulf shore?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No. And I think the States ought not to assert any claim to the continental shelf away out in the ocean.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALTER. Does the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary feel that the question involved here is purely a judicial question and not a legislative question?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do not think it is purely a judicial question. I think it is a matter of very high public policy. We have had in this country for a long, long time this recognition of the sovereignty of the States with regard to this territory.

Many communities have builded very substantial buildings on reclaimed lands.

and it would tremendously disturb the whole situation in America if now, by some chance, the Supreme Court should hold that the people have been mistaken through all these years; that that is really Federal property and the Federal Government can come in and claim it. I think that involves a high question of public policy about which the Congress of the United States should express itself.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. HANCOCK. The only question involved is the Senate amendment. I understand the purpose of the Senate amendment is to protect the claim of the Continental Shelf beyond the 3-mile limit in the Pacific Ocean.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Substantially so. The House has passed this bill almost unanimously. It went to the Senate. This amendment to that bill comes back from the Senate and is here to make certain that the Federal Government has sovereignty over these shelves. The only new question would be whether or not the House would agree to that exemption.

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. With the exception of the amendment of the Senate, this resolution simply reaffirms the law that has been laid down by the court ever since we had a court?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is right.

Mr. HOOK. Then why pass this bill in order to stop a Supreme Court decision?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. For the very reason that we do not care to take a chance on the Supreme Court or anybody else disturbing a condition that has obtained in America since the beginning of this country. It is an important matter of public policy and it is within the power and the duty of the Congress to secure it.

Mr. HOOK. Is it not a question of who gets the oil?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No; I do not think so.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. Is it not a fact that the great State of Texas has reached away out into the water and claimed the oil far off the shore?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I think it is.

Mr. WEICHEL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. WEICHEL. With reference to the Great Lakes, and specifically with reference to Lake Erie, does this bill only give the State of Ohio and the States adjoining Lake Erie the right out for 3 miles?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I could not give you any opinion about that. This bill is the cession of any claim of Federal jurisdiction. I do not know how far out into the Great Lakes that extends.

Mr. WEICHEL. Will this bill take away rights from the various States?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No.

This bill, I mean the Senate amendment, the only thing we are acting on, is for the purpose of making it clear, as I understand it, that the claim of the Federal Government to the Continental Shelf be not disturbed.

Mr. WEICHEL. It does not cover anything on the Great Lakes, specifically? With reference to the Great Lakes, just what does it do?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. It does not disturb the Great Lakes at all.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I regret exceedingly the turn that this has taken. I understood, and it is not disputed, that there was an agreement between the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] and myself that my amendment would be, with his full consent, offered as an amendment to the Senate amendment. I now ask the gentleman if that was not the understanding that obtained between us.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I would not state that that was the understanding, but as far as I am concerned I would be glad to have the gentleman's amendment considered, and I have no objection to its being considered.

Mr. HOBBS. I thank the gentleman. That is exactly the request I am going to make. I am going to make the unanimous-consent request that in fairness I be allowed to offer the amendment. This is not a contest between parliamentarians. I am no parliamentarian and I know little or nothing about parliamentary law. So I appeal to the fairness of the House that this amendment, which probably will be voted down just as certainly as the fact that the conference report will be adopted, should be considered. But that is not the point. The point is that in fairness there ought not to be a bona fide amendment to the Senate amendment shut off without being considered, in view of my agreement with my chairman, who was and is in charge of the bill. I believe that even the gentleman from California and every Member of the House ought to grant that request.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. Always I am glad to yield to the distinguished gentleman from New York.

Mr. HANCOCK. As I recall, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] opposed the original bill when it was debated here, and he is still opposed to the bill.

Mr. HOBBS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HANCOCK. The object of his amendment is to delay the bill until after this Congress has adjourned or to kill it entirely. He says he has consulted with the chairman of the committee with reference to the amendment. Has he consulted with anybody else? Has he ever brought it to the attention of anybody on this side of the aisle? I have never heard of it or seen it.

Mr. HOBBS. No, sir; I thought it was coming up by unanimous consent as it was the other day. When I consulted our chairman I had no idea that anyone would be less than glad to have the amendment heard and passed on.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. With pleasure, sir.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do not know much about parliamentary rules either, but as far as I am concerned I join in the unanimous-consent request so that the gentleman may have a vote on his amendment.

I should like to ask this question. The same subject has been under consideration and bills have been pending for the past 10 years. Is not that true?

Mr. HOBBS. No, sir; this is the first bill of its kind, the others were the reverse of this one, and this bill was first filed, I think, in 1945.

Mr. SHEPPARD. One further question: The gentleman offered an amendment when the bill originally cleared the House that was somewhat of the same character insofar as what this amendment would accomplish. Is that true?

Mr. HOBBS. That is right. This only amends the Senate amendment, but is similar to my amendment offered last spring when the bill passed the House.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Under the circumstances I want to protect the interests of the State of California and I shall be forced to object to the gentleman's request when he submits it, and serve notice accordingly.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I am so happy to yield to the distinguished gentleman from California.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Would not the effect of the gentleman's amendment simply be to divorce the question of the conservation of the Nation's oil in the last remaining great pool that the Nation has from this question about streets and filled in land and stream beds and all the rest of it about which there is no real controversy? Is not that the gentleman's purpose? To separate those two questions?

Mr. HOBBS. That is right; absolutely right, sir, and to preserve the Government's suit now pending in the Supreme Court.

Mr. DOYLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I am glad to yield to the distinguished gentleman from California.

Mr. DOYLE. Is it not a fact that the amendment which the gentleman wants to offer in language and purpose is to defeat the purpose of the bill as it was passed by the Senate and amended? Is not that the effect of the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. HOBBS. I will be glad to answer the gentleman. That is only partially true, sir. It is my unalterable purpose to call again to the attention of this House, if I may, our constitutional duty to safeguard the national defense and to enable our Government to maintain armies and navies, which they cannot do without the propelling power of oil. Without the amendment I hoped to be allowed to offer, this bill is a menace and should be defeated. With that amendment adopted, the bill would be acceptable.

This bill is aimed to make it impossible, except by the grace of the States, to defeat the constitutional powers which the States granted in the Constitution of the United States to the Federal Government. By the way, I want to call attention to the fact that our distinguished chairman has fallen into an error when he says that under the treaty of peace of Paris the powers of the King were transferred to the Thirteen Colonies or to the States. The gentleman has just fallen into error accidentally in the heat of argument. Everyone knows that the treaty of peace at Paris was made with the United States of America, not with the several States or Colonies. The United States of America, eo nomine, negotiated and executed the treaty of peace at Paris as a sovereign entity by agreement of the Colonies. Under the decision in the Curtiss-Wright case there can be no question about that statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has consumed 10 minutes.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LAFOLLETTE].

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I wonder if we may have the gentleman's amendment read to see what he is talking about.

Mr. LAFOLLETTE. Mr. Speaker, I do not yield if it comes out of my time.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. LAFOLLETTE. Mr. Speaker, I do not yield for a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. Speaker, there are about three things involved in this. Two of them are very vital and one, I may say to my friends from the Middle West, may be political. So we will look at it both ways.

In the first place there is a suit pending in the Supreme Court of the United States, and I have heard numerous objections to Executive interference with the Supreme Court of the United States. We fought that issue out here before, possibly, and lost it; but there is no more justification for legislative interference with the operation of the judiciary than there is for the Executive interference. I have always opposed Executive interference.

In the second place, when this bill was up and being discussed before, I asked a question which no one has answered for me to date. Where is the title from the time when there was once a 3-mile limit, which has since been extended under President Hoover, then again extended under President Roosevelt, and again under President Truman.

I call your attention to the fact that it is not the National Guard of California or Texas or Mississippi or any other coastal State which is going to enforce this sovereignty, which you are about to give away. It is the Army and the Navy of the United States and the people that live otherwise than on the coastal sections of this country, their sons must help sustain it.

Finally—and this is the political angle if the other does not appeal to you gentlemen—in April of this year I made a speech on behalf of and with the consent and approval of every national farmers group in the United States, by resolution adopted by their national bodies, the American Farm Bureau, the Grange, the National Council of Co-ops and the Farmers Union (the first time they were ever together on anything of any kind), about claims they had filed, preempting claims on the Continental Shelf and the rest of the land belonging to the United States for the purpose of drilling for oil.

I want to say now that I talked with the attorney, who asked me to make that speech for those farm groups on this floor, on Wednesday of this week in Washington, and they are not satisfied with the Senate amendment as it stands today.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, I agree with most everything said by the gentleman from Alabama. We must recognize the vital need for oil for defense and protection of America, but I wonder where the gentleman from Alabama was when one-third of the 57 sections comprising the Elk Hills Naval Reserve in California was given away. I wondered today, when he was making this speech on the floor, about the vital oil that is needed to protect this country that is pouring out of that naval reserve this very minute going into commercial use. I wonder what he thinks of that. I want to call attention to this House that in the offshore area of the State of Texas, on the so-called Continental Shelf, oil is being extracted and has been extracted under the laws of Texas for years. We read how they find these salt domes and oil wells by means of geophysic prospecting, going far out from shore in the ocean and drilling oil wells and taking out the oil, if the rights of California are to stop at the shore line. Why the discrimination between California and the great State of Texas? Texas has been drawing oil from under submerged land all these years.

I want to ask the gentleman about that, and I want to ask him where he was when these 57 sections in the Elk Hills Naval Reserve in California were being taken over, lock, stock, and barrel; oil reserves on which this country must depend for national defense, if you please, by one of the greatest oil companies in this country. One-third of the 57 sections was given to the oil company, and oil is now flowing out into commercial use. If we want to really do something to protect the interest of the United States, let us start at the right place and keep in reserve the vital oil set aside for the use of the Navy in the defense of our country. I am in favor of this bill.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BIEMILLER].

Mr. BIEMILLER. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from Alabama is perfectly correct in the contention he made on this floor a few minutes ago. The issue here today is one of oil for defense. I have been notified only today by the chairman of the House Committee on Naval Affairs that it will be necessary for that committee to come back here in September to conduct hearings on a re-lease on the Elk Hills oil reserve. The Government's supply of oil is perilously low.

We have been hearing from many Members of this House during the past few days great patriotic protestations of their desire to defend the United States, of their paramount interest in defense. Today, if we really mean that, we have to vote to maintain the Federal rights in the last remaining great oil pool in this country. If you examine the resolution before us carefully, you will agree that is the real issue.

I regret that the gentleman from Alabama is prevented by the parliamentary situation from presenting his amendment. With his amendment, which would have reserved the oil and mineral rights in all tidelands to the Government of the United States, all of us could have supported the resolution. Then there could be no clouding of the issue which has occurred by the clever use the oil lobbyists have made of municipal rights in filled-in land, and so forth. But the parliamentary situation now stands, I repeat that if we support the resolution before us we are voting to give away oil that is badly needed by the Navy and the Army of our country. We had better think twice before we give away this last great pool of oil which should be reserved for the people of the United States of America and particularly for the defense of our country.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW].

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Alabama and the former Senator from North Dakota, Mr. Nye, both introduced resolutions in their respective bodies several years ago to claim jurisdiction and title on the part of the United States to all the submerged lands all over the coastal and inland water areas. These submerged-land States, including my State, had exercised unquestioned jurisdiction over those lands ever since the formation of this Government. In my own State that jurisdiction is claimed by the State and has been exercised for 100 years. These resolutions were for the purpose of taking away from the several States, including my State, their title and jurisdiction which they have so long held and exercised.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HINSHAW. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HANCOCK. May I add that the Federal Government has acquiesced in that claim of title by those States. The question never arose until very lately, when Senator Nye introducted his resolution.

Mr. HINSHAW. That is true. That jurisdiction has been in the States and has been acknowledged by the United States to lie in the States ever since the United States was formed. It was not until these two resolutions were introduced that any contrary idea was presented by anyone.

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HINSHAW. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. Is it not true that the question of oil for defense is not involved here at all? Of course the Federal Government can condemn oil wells within a few miles of our shores, or it can condemn an oil well in Wyoming or any other State if it needs the oil.

Mr. HINSHAW. Of course.

I will tell you what is back of the discussion at this point and what the gentleman from Alabama, I think, would probably like to see. There are filings in the Office of the Secretary of the Interior by persons who are not now engaged in the business of extracting oil, on the tidelands of the entire Pacific coast. All his amendment would do, or the proposal that has been made would do, would be to displace those who have been granted their rights by the several States, and from whom the States are collecting royalties, and cancel their leases, and open up all of these filings down in the Secretary's office on those same leases to a group which I believe to be a group of rascals, persons who are attempting to promote through the papers in Washington and elsewhere the idea that the United States has jurisdiction over the States' lands. It would be the greatest "steal" in history, and would rob my State, among others, of substantial revenue.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL].

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, the time has arrived when I can no longer remain silent as I review the repeated acts of aggression and treachery on the part of our so-called Russian ally. I am not speaking now of the unprovoked attack upon Poland in 1939, nor of the absorption of the brave little Baltic countries of Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania. I am not pleading the cause of the Finnish Nation which was struck down by Russian aggression or am I referring to the suffering and the partition of Czechoslovakia and the repression against the good people of Yugoslavia. All of these crimes, and more, I lay at the door of Communist Russia for I shall never forget the bravery and the sacrifice of these people whose sufferings even today are not at an end.

I am adding to the criminal record of Russian communism the names of two more Christian countries, Austria and Hungary, cultured nations which have suffered, first, under the heel of Nazi Germany, and who now are as bad or even worse off under the equally repressive and rapacious Communist Russian military domination. The world was aghast when Czechoslovakia was sacrificed to Hitler and when Poland was stabbed in the back by Russia. Civilization was stunned and speechless when the little Baltic countries and Lithuania were crushed. Statesmen and diplomats who today sit and confer with Molotov, of the team of Ribbentrop and Molotov, which engineered World War II, are puzzled by the ruthless and unprincipled Russian attitude.

It is high time that members of the Big Four should know that there is no such thing as a word, a guaranty, or an understanding with communism. It is purely a matter of expediency and advantage. Honor is unknown to Godless communism. Communism will betray or double-cross American fair play and generosity just as it will traduce or destroy the democracy and Christianity if given the opportunity to do so.

We have been bludgeoned or blackmailed ever since Tehran, Yalta, and Potsdam. We continue to pay Russia hard-earned American cash in the form of blackmail. We are used to pull her chestnuts out of the fire in Spain, as we were in Argentina. After we have impaired the traditional American friendship in the South American Republic, Communist Russia, which has not had diplomatic relations with that country for 20 years, according to plan, stepped in to take our place and our business. We are expected now to do the same thing in Spain and Portugal. Russia, with our acquiescence, pocketed $100,000,000 of blood money from Italy which will eventually come out of our pockets. Russian communism has taken every advantage of UNRRA and has used American benevolence to spread this filth of Godlessness and hate against the United States and against Christianity in the contiguous countries.

I think it is time to call a halt upon Russia and her communistic practices. If we cannot get along with Russia, we will have to find a way to get along without her. If we cannot aid this tier of subjugated countries from Finland down to Greece and Italy, then, at least, let us keep from aiding their enemies. The democratic elements in these countries must feel discouraged and totally impotent as they witness America being pushed around by the man who gained doubtful fame on the Molotov-Ribbentrop team. Communism cannot grow without appeasement. Before Russia, by accident, became our ally, communism was quite securely bottled up within Russia, although even in that country it was not firmly fastened upon its people excepting by force. It is only since the western nations adopted a policy of appeasement that the Russian steam roller began to crush the democratic and Christian peoples unfortunate enough to live at her borders. It is rumored that shortly Russia will be made the recipient of a substantial loan, the latest figure proposed is said to be $1,250,000,000. The effect of such benevolence on the part of the United States of America would be to strengthen and vitalize militant communism.

I thought that a loan for the British was insurance against the spread of communism. If that was correct and only one of many good reasons, would it not be true now that a loan of this magnitude, or any loan for that matter, to Communist Russia would have a neutralizing effect upon the purpose of the British loan? Are we Americans anxious to create a bigger, more aggressive, and more virulent communism throughout the world, or are we trying at least to confine this predator to its present field. If Russia is strengthened financially, she will directly or indirectly start financing her agents and her puppets in the subjugated countries. She will be in a position better to maintain her armies in Poland, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Rumania, and in the little Baltic countries, thus insuring eventual submersion of the last vestige of Christianity and democracy in the stench of communism.

I do not care a rap about communism in Russia. If the Russian people want it, let them have it, and I hope they are happy with it; but I will not be a party to any deal by which communism will be aided and made to flourish in countries that fear and do not want it or any part of it. I will not waste American money to induce Russia to agree to what she had previously agreed upon, because I do not believe that in the third instance Russia is worthy of her word in the first instance.

I am thoroughly imbued with the deductions of the learned Father Edmund Walsh, S. J., of Georgetown University, who in his lectures stated time and again that Russian communism will resort to any expedient or trick to gain an advantage over the hated capitalistic countries and the equally despised Christianity.

Permit me to read, Mr. Speaker, the editorial whicl. appeared in the Washington News of Saturday, July 6, on Russia Gets $100,000,000. I think it is pertinent to what I have in mind.

RUSSIA GETS $100,000,000

Whenever we sit down at the table with the Russians we give something away. When we trade, we get a toothpick for a load of cordwood.

We started giving away things at Tehran in November 1943. We continued giving at Yalta and at Potsdam. Now at Paris we vote Russia $100,000,000 in reparations from Italy in return for Russia's agreement to call a 21-nation peace conference.

To be more exact, we pay Russia $100,000,000 to keep an agreement she made at Moscow last Christmas.

Russia agreed at that time to a general peace conference May 1. Then she stalled her way out. Now, we pay off again and Russia consents to hold the conference July 29, nearly 3 months late.

We say "we" will pay Russia the $100,000,000 because any money Italy is able to send to Russia will come indirectly out of American pockets. We are putting up the cash to feed Italy and to rehabilitate Italian industry. The reparations to Russia will be paid out of the products of Italian industry.

If the conference July 29 promised to settle anything of major importance the pay-off might be defended on the grounds of expediency. But the deal has a Munich smell.

Simultaneously with the calling of the conference comes a warning that settlement of the German and Austrian questions is not in sight. A general peace conference which cannot dispose of those questions will be of negligible value to the world, and of no value to the United States.

The rehabilitation of Europe cannot proceed so long as Germany and Austria remain a political no-man's land, walled off from the rest of Europe by military road blocks—and with Germany divided against itself into four airtight compartments.

Europe is a highly integrated economic unit and until it is treated as such millions of Europeans will stay in the bread line, with Uncle Sam paying for the bread.

A general conference which cannot approach this situation realistically, with the wraps off, cannot be considered a peace conference by any stretch of imagination. Such a meeting can only ratify Russia's ill-gotten gains, leaving the vital problems of Europe unsolved.

The continuing appeasement of Russia creates new problems, and settles nothing. The idea of giving Russia reparations from Italy is as fantastic as dignifying by the same term the loot Russia carried away in the rape of Manchuria.

We will never buy peace by paying blackmail.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 additional minute, in order that I may ask unanimous consent that the amendment which I was not permitted to offer be read for the information of the House in that time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOBBS: Amend the Senate amendment to House Joint Resolution 225 so that that amendment shall read as follows:

"The United States expects from this disclaimer and retains all rights, title, and interest (1) claimed and asserted by Presidential Proclamation No. 2667 of September 8, 1945, or otherwise, in the continental shelf running oceanward from a line extending oceanward three miles distant from the ordinary low-water line, including the subsoil and sea-bed and all the resources in such continental self; and (2) in all submerged lands involved in the case of the United States of America against the State of California now pending in the Supreme Court of the United States, and all other submerged lands similarly situated along the coast of the United States of America."

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL].

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Speaker, in my judgment the House should reject this proposal to quitclaim all the right, title, and interest of the United States in the Continental Shelf. I feel strongly that the Congress should not give away property or rights belonging to the Federal Government. This is particularly true in this instance where tremendous oil reserves are involved. This is the greatest potential oil reserve now known to exist in the United States and to be under the control of the Federal Government. The war just ended has proven the tremendous importance of oil in military and naval operations. This oil reserve should be held and conserved by the Federal Government for the future.

If, by any chance, title to it is vested in the States, then the claim of the State of California can be maintained in the courts. If the State of California does own this property and if other States own similar property, then this resolution is completely unnecessary. If the State of California and other States do not own this property, then I for one refuse to be a party to giving it away to the States.

It is this same property which Ed Pauley and the California oil interests affiliated with him have been trying to pry loose from the Federal Government for a long time. There is a bad odor attached to the whole procceding, because of the vast sums of money spent by Ed Pauley and California oil interests. Mr. Pauley's close interest in this matter was the chief reason for his rejection as Under Secretary of the Navy. I felt strongly that Mr. Pauley should not receive that position because the Under Secretary of the Navy exercises such great control over the naval oil reserves. I do not want to do anything myself which would accomplish the same result I feared would be done by Mr. Pauley if he were appointed Under Secretary of the Navy. I do not wish to pass judgment on the Pauley controversy; nevertheless, it does confirm my previous conviction to vote against this bill.

The failure to adopt the Hobbs amendment is a further reason. Under Mr. HOBBS' amendment, the question of the conservation of the Nation's oil in the last remaining great pool owned by the United States, would have been divorced from the other matters involved. The United States Government would have retained all its present right, title, and interest to the oil underlying the Continental Shelf. It would have merely disclaimed its right, title, and interest to the other property involved. Since this proposed amendment could not be voted upon nor acted upon nor adopted, it is more imperative than ever to reject this entire proposal. To do otherwise would be unfair and prejudicial to the rights of the United States Government which we are all bound by oath to protect.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. THOM].

Mr. THOM. Mr. Speaker, I was one of the 11 Members who were opposed to this bill originally. I am proud of that stand.

Now, there is a suit pending to prohibit further exploitation of the oil of the offshore lands of California. On what does the Attorney General base that suit? He bases it on the following paragraph from the act which admitted California into the Union. That reads as follows:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the said State of California is admitted into the Union upon the express condition that the people of the said State, through their legislature or otherwise, shall never interfere with the primary disposal of the public lands within its limits, and shall pass no law and do no act whereby the title of the United States to, and right to dispose of, the same shall be impaired or questioned.

If there are lawyers here who cannot see that there is a bona fide dispute, then they must be blind. That dispute ought to be settled by the United States Supreme Court. This paragraph applies to public lands and I assert that it is a judicial question to determine whether public lands include the 3 miles that lie off the coast of California and other States.

The House is proceeding to adopt a vicious method of usurping the rights of the Supreme Court. In three cases, in the case of insurance companies, railways, and tideland oil bills, we have in this House tried to legislate in order to beat the Supreme Court to a decision.

We are told that the law is plain by the advocates of this bill. If that be so, why are they afraid to have the United States Supreme Court write a decision on the present case before it? Rather, I suspect, it is true that the lawyers supporting State ownership of offshore lands feel that their case is weak, and to save themselves they are rushing into the Congress to foreclose action by the Supreme Court. We hear speeches in this House continually about the separation of powers between the executive, legislative, and judicial departments of Government. If you believe in that doctrine you ought to vote to kill this attempt to take away the jurisdiction of the highest Court of the land.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS].

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, from a purely political standpoint, I may be foolish to take the position that I do on this question. But I cannot conscientiously vote for this bill and I will not vote for it. I believe what the gentleman from Ohio has said is absolutely true. I think it is a legal question that ought to be decided legally. Furthermore, I think this question of oil is the real issue involved in this bill. As to all the rest of these lands, of course, the United States could quitclaim its right, title, and interest to the States and is perfecly willing to do so. I would be glad to vote for such a bill. I recognize the position of a Member such as my colleague from Long Beach, Calif., where the city government has made excellent use of its oil resources, but I can point to case after case after case in various States where the oil has been allowed to be wasted and exploited without anything like adequate return to the people of those States. I think this oil should be conserved for the basic national defense and welfare of the United States and I believe that is what the House ought to vote for today.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. HOBBS. I just want to make this statement, that I do not think the President of the United States, the head of the Navy Department, the head of the Interior Department, the head of the Justice Department come within the category that has been described by the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW].

Mr. LAFOLLETTE. Nor do the co-ops representing all the farmers in the United States come within the category of rascals either.

Mr. HOBBS. I was just about to make that statement, that every farm organization in the Nation and millions of our constituents are with us in this fight.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. HOBBS. With pleasure, sir.

Mr. HINSHAW. I was referring to a group of lobbyists who have been running around here promoting this idea of yours, and not to any agent of the United States.

Mr. HOBBS. This bill makes me think of the old folk rhyme:

Mother, may I go out to swim?
Yes, my darling daughter.
Hang your clothes on a hickory limb,
But don't go near the water.

The United States is the child of the States. The States granted to their Union the power to provide for the common defense; to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States; to provide and maintain a Navy and an Army.

The pending resolution, while not specifically attempting to repeal these grants of power, would make it well-nigh, if not absolutely, impossible for the United States to use them! So, this resolution without the amendment I am proposing is equivalent to causing the mother States to say: "Yes, my darling daughter, leave the powers with which I clothed you hanging on the hickory limb of article I of the Constitution of the United States, but don't go near the water of exercising any one of them!"

In this era of harnessing atomic energy for both peace and war oil is still a basic essential if our Nation is to survive. We cannot drop a single bomb in defense of our Nation without transporting it to its military objective, and that transportation requires oil. We cannot transport a single man, much less an army, nor the food, nor matériel necessary to maintain and make it effective without oil. We cannot propel our ships, jeeps, tanks, nor our argosies of the air without oil. So, when it is proposed to relinquish the Nation's right to take and use oil from beneath the Nation's territorial waters we might as well strike from the Constitution the powers to provide and maintain our armies and navies!

There is pending in the Supreme Court of the United States a suit by the United States against California which seeks to establish its right, inter alia, to take and use the oil in the bed of the Pacific Ocean off the coast of California beginning at the low-water mark and extending oceanward. That suit does not involve any soil underlying bays, harbors, rivers or other inland waters, nor does it involve the so-called "tide lands." The passage of the pending resolution without my amendment would kill that suit. My amendment would save it, and permit the Supreme Court to pass upon the question therein raised.

Also, it is said by the proponents of this resolution that the Supreme Court in some 50 cases has already decided the issues involved in the case now pending in the Supreme Court against the Government and in favor of the States. The Government contends that this is not in accordance with the record, and it seems perfectly clear that the pending resolution is born of fear that the Government's contention is right.

The passage of this resolution without my amendment would be an unwarranted invasion of the constitutional province of the Supreme Court. If the States are right they have nothing to fear. If the National Government is right the rights established by the pending decision of the Supreme Court would inure to the benefit of every State.

In the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of September 20, 1945, on page 8842, I spoke at length on this resolution and set forth a brief which cites the authorities on these questions. I respectfully beg your careful perusal.

There is no case, nor respectable authority, which asserts the exclusive, fee simple title in any state or nation to the 3-mile zone either as to water or bed.

There is no case, nor respectable authority, which denies the jurisdictional right in the littoral state or nation to that segment of the 3-mile zone abutting its shore.

The preponderating weight of authority and sounder reasoning holds that this right of jurisdiction and control is an attribute of national sovereignty and paramount and exclusive.

The issue as to the ownership of minerals, including oil, in the submerged lands also has never been presented to the Supreme Court of the United States for decision, and no such issue ever has been decided by the Supreme Court of the United States.

For, although the territorial limits of Alabama have extended all her sovereign power into the sea, it is there, as on the shore, but municipal power, subject to the Constitution of the United States, "and the laws which shall be made in pursuance thereof." (Pollard's Lessee v. Hagan et al. (3 Howard 212, 230).)

The Navy, Interior, and Justice Departments from the beginning of this fight have been "in my corner." While, of course, I am not unmindful of protocol, and am not quoting the President, I am as sure as I could be that he is standing squarely behind his Department heads in their support of my amendment.

All the great farm organizations of the Nation are supporting my amendment. Many other millions of your constituents join me and the other Members of this House who are loyally supporting this amendment.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the remainder of the time.

As has been stated, the only new question before us is the amendment that was put on in the Senate, dealing with these shelves that lead out from the shores. The motion before the House at the moment is that we concur in the Senate amendment.

I do not want to get into the discussion that was had on the floor when this matter was before us, but it is only comparatively recently, and there was a record vote. I understand there were 20 votes in the House against the bill. The opinion was practically unanimous in the House that these submerged lands along the coast and in the rivers that have been recognized as belonging to the States from the beginning of the Government still belong to the States, and the Congress as a matter of public policy should quiet that title.

In view of the insistence recently being made that these lands belong to the Federal Government, some of them with expensive improvements and mineral deposits, it was determined by the legislative branch of the Government to declare the public policy that that arrangement is not to be disturbed by anybody.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. There is one question about the argument of the opposition that disturbs me very much. It seems to me that if their views were followed, the Federal Government might take over the entire 3-mile zone along the waterfront of each State, and turn it over to the bureaucrats. Then they might hem in the State along its waterfront; not only for oil exploitation but for every other purpose.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Of course, if the Federal Government can oust the States as to that which makes up the bed, that which is contained in the 3-mile strip, it can take it over. I do not believe the people who come here from the several States want that thing to be done. They declared that to be their attitude when, after judgment, they passed the bill before. But we do believe the Federal Government ought to have the Continental Shelf, and the motion is to let it have the shelf. The amendment excludes the Continental Shelf and that is all. That is the only thing that is before us.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. RABAUT. The States cannot use the 3 miles either. They cannot build on those 3 miles. So it is no more graft on the part of the Federal Government than it is on the part of the States.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No. Nobody wants to build out to the 3-mile limit.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. HANCOCK. Much has been made of the fact that certain farm organizations are opposed to this bill. I think perhaps the opposition has been overstated. I have not heard from any farm organizations, but I know this, that 46 of the 48 States in this country, through their governors or their attorneys general, have endorsed this bill.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Of course. The representatives of 46 sovereign States have endorsed this bill, and of their representatives who were here when the vote was taken before with their States all except 20 agreed.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

All time has expired.

The question is: Will the House suspend the rules and concur in the Senate amendment to House Joint Resolution 225?

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 188, nays 67, not voting 175, as follows:

time lost' the amount he is paid by an employer with respect to an identifiable period of absence from the active service of the employer, including absence on account of personal injury, and the amount he is paid by the employer for loss of earnings resulting from his displacement to a less remunerative position or occupation. If a payment is made by an employer with respect to a personal injury and includes pay for time lost, the total payment shall be deemed to be paid for time lost unless, at the time of payment, a part of such payment is specifically apportioned to factors other than time lost, in which event only such part of the payment as is not so apportioned shall be deemed to be paid for time lost."

RAILROAD RETIREMENT ACT

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] is recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker, let me explain the amendments that were adopted by the Senate. Of course, I would rather not have the amendments, but I am very glad to accept them. The first amendment simply strikes out all of section 1 of the bill and restores the coverage, so-called, under the present law. There would be no change in the coverage under the present law. The second amendment provides for the collection of taxes or assessments, whichever you want to call them, by the Treasury Department, as heretofore, instead of by the Retirement Board. I think there is a saving to be made by having the Retirement Board do it, but it does not make very much difference to us who collects the taxes, so far as that goes, so I do not object. Another change made by the second amendment continues the present limitation of $300 for each month considered separately.

We had provided in the bill, and I think it was a just provision, that in calculating the maximum amount of salary in any month upon which benefits could be based under the retirement law the whole amount earned in a calendar year should be divided by the number of months in which the person may have worked, and the average, not in excess of $300, should be his monthly compensation. Those are substantially the only changes made by the Senate in the bill. I do not think it will serve any good purpose to discuss further the Senate amendments. There is absolutely no justification for sending the bill to conference. The Senate amendments, in substance, were offered in the House during the consideration of the bill before it went to the Senate by the Member who has just moved to send the bill to conference. I did not favor them, but the opposition urged them as an improvement of the bill. The bill, except as to the amendments just explained, could not, under the rules, be changed in conference. Since as already explained the amendments were offered and advocated by the opposition when the bill was considered in the House originally, there is really nothing in controversy which should be submitted to a conference. I hope, therefore, the motion to concur will be carried by an overwhelming vote.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. WOLVERTON].

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the motion which has been made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER]. I think this legislation is probably one of the most complex and technical that we, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, have ever been called upon to consider. When the bill was brought to the House, it was brought in under conditions that I am fearful did not give the opportunity for an explanation of the issues involved which the importance of the subject was entitled to have. As a result of the confusion or misunderstanding in the House, at the time the committee amendments were voted upon, the bill was passed in such condition that the imperfections were so apparent that even the proponents of the amendments acknowledged it. Because of the action taken by the House with reference to amendments offered by proponents of the amendments and the manner in which they were voted upon, the bill went out of the House carrying dates that everyone knew could not remain in the bill and still be constitutional. But so anxious were some to pass some kind of a bill that it did not seem to make any difference in that respect, with the result that we had a hodge-podge, so far as legislative drafting is concerned, that has never been equalled in my experience in this House.

Those remarks I have just made are not referring to the questions that relate to the rights of employees. There could be an honest difference of opinion with respect to that, but I am now speaking of the ineffective method that was adopted to give to employees improved benefits.

The other body of Congress acted upon the bill, after the committee of that body reported the bill to the Senate in the same form in which it was passed by the House, without correcting the dates or those important matters in the bill that would have to do with its constitutionality. It came before the Senate without any correction of that kind. An effort was made to pass it through that body without making those amendments, relying upon a concurrent resolution to be adopted after the bill had been passed, to correct the imperfections. But the Members of the other body took the position, from the debate as it appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, that they were unwilling to let that kind of legislation go out of that body under any such conditions, and accordingly made amendments that do correct those features to which I have referred.

As one who is interested in good legislation from the standpoint of good drafting as well as the contents of the legislation, I am proud of the fact that the other body did rise to the occasion at least in that particular.

The important part of this legislation is first to make certain and sure that the retirement features of the law, which is now in existence, will give, at the time the individual employee needs it, that which it was intended he should have. I had a part in the passage of that original legislation. I have had a part in the passage of every piece of legislation that has been passed in this House in favor of the employees of the railroads. While some may have been advertised more than I have, there is no one who has fought harder in their behalf than I have.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman three additional minutes.

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. So, when I speak today, I am not speaking as one who is opposed to giving additional benefits to our railroad employees. I voted for all the additional benefits provided for in the pending bill. But when we give them those benefits we ought to make sure that they are going to get them. The retirement fund at the present time is not actuarily sound. No one will deny that fact. So that the first thing—and, of primary importance—is to make certain that the fund is sound. That is what we sought to do in the legislation offered by the majority of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce when this bill was originally reported to the House.

Now, the pending bill comes before us. If you will look at page 10162 of this CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, which contains Senator GEORGE's amendment to tax features of the bill you will see how technical this question of rates really is. There is no one can look at that amendment and determine by a reading of it whether the rates that have been provided under that Senate amendment will give protection to the men which they are entitled to have. I am therefore, as a friend of the employees, insisting that if you want to do real service to them, then this bill should go to a conference committee where this matter can be considered and an examination made as to whether the rates provided in the bill will provide the benefits to the employees it is intended they should have. It is only that we may have careful legislation on this important subject that I am opposing this method of dealing with this important matter, that involves the welfare of so many thousands of employees who are depending upon us to protect their interests.

I voted for the bill that would increase the benefits for railroad employees, when the bill was before this House, so it cannot be charged that I am an opponent of increased benefits for these workers; but I do want to make sure that what we do is well done so that we will not be faced with a situation hereafter in which individuals will not get that which we intended they should get or which they expected to get.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has again expired.

Mr. McDONOUGH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McDONOUGH. In the event this motion should not receive the required two-thirds vote, does the bill then automatically go to conference?

The SPEAKER. No; that could be objected to, as it was a while ago. There are other avenues by which it could be acted on later; but the answer to the gentleman's inquiry is "No."

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, in answer to the inquiry of the gentleman from California [Mr. McDONOUGH] if this motion does not receive a two-thirds vote, then the only way the bill could go to conference would be by unanimous consent or by a rule from the Rules Committee taking the bill from the Speaker's desk and sending it to conference, or by a motion to suspend the rules which would have to receive a two-thirds vote. That is my understanding of the parliamentary situation regarding the methods that could be employed to send the bill to conference.

So we know that for all practical purposes if the pending motion is not adopted, this bill, so far as this conference is concerned, is dead, in all probability.

This bill has received severe opposition. It is rather difficult for me to understand in my own mind all of this effort to try and prevent its passage. There is no question but what the only chance this bill has to get through this session is to have the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] adopted. The amendments of the Senate were offered by the chairman of the committee when the bill was being considered in the House in the Committee of the Whole. The thing that happened there was that they overloaded the bill with a lot of amendments and under the guise of putting through a good bill they tried to kill it, or it would result in a bill with practically no benefits.

If this bill were to go to conference the chances are that the bill would be dead anyway; and if the conference report came back we would have to vote it up or down, and the chances are there would be a dead or ineffective bill come back. If it was not dead in conference it would be a dead bill that was reported back by the conference.

There are 1,500,000 employees of the railroads who are interested in the provisions of this bill if it becomes law. They are looking toward the Congress with anxious eyes. They have friends on both sides of the aisle, Democrats and Republicans. This fight has been waged under the courageous leadership of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] and he has been backed by Members of the House on both sides of the aisle, Democrats and Republicans.

In the closing days of the session this is probably the one day that we will have a quorum. I am not saying there will not be a quorum next week but we have a quorum here now, and if we are going to accomplish anything this session in connection with legislation of this kind, in connection with this bill, we have got to do it today, in my opinion, or it will not be done at all.

This is a fair bill as we look at its overall provisions. If there is anything to be corrected we can correct it later. Certainly these men who are benefited know what is beneficial to them. For 10 years I sat on the Ways and Means Committee, and in fact I handled the tax provisions of the first railroad retirement bill that became a law. The gentleman from Ohio remembers that well. He put through the legislative provisions. Then the tax provisions came from the Ways and Means Committee and I had the honor to handle it for the railroad men, the various brotherhoods. My experience of 10 years on the Ways and Means Committee with the brotherhoods appearing before the committee was to produce in my mind a deep respect for those men who represented the different brotherhoods. They are men who know their case, they came before the committee and presented their case honorably and in a fair manner. They made a most profound impression upon me. I consider their representatives to be honorable and trustworthy, men who present their evidence soundly and ably and they think their case out well before they appear before any legislative committee.

They are satisfied with this bill. They know if they do not get this bill through now the chances are there will be no bill this session. We have gone up the hill. Let us not go down the hill again.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman three additional minutes.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, let us vote for the motion offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] which means that having gone up the hill we keep on going up and we will send this bill on to passage and to victory.

I respect the views of my friend from New Jersey. The gentleman is honest in his views. But this bill is one that has been considered by both branches. It is in the best shape it can get in this session. As we look at the bill in all its aspects, it is entirely beneficial to the men who are the employees of the railroads, it is fair and just legislation. The bill having passed the House by a vote of 235 to 49, I hope that the Members of the House today on this motion to suspend the rules will vote to suspend the rules by well over the required two-thirds majority, and send the bill to final passage.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 7 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I remind the House that in the first instance I requested this bill be sent to conference. Objection was made.

Now we have the motion before us which would bar any further effort to improve the bill and accept the Senate amendments without any other change. Those amendments are in part of those offered by me when the matter was before the House but are entirely inadequate to meet the needs of this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, the bill should be sent to conference. Some place along the line it should have been considered by the Congress and every opportunity to improve it by amendment should have been used. That should have been done not for the sake of the Congress but for the sake of the country.

Speaking candidly, as I see it, to pass this legislation as it stands would be highly discreditable to the Congress of the United States. I want to take just a little time to review this matter, to give something of the perspective of this bill. Let us take a glancing look at what it is and what it means.

This is a 60-page bill, virtually written by a special group, and in its own interest. I cast no reflection on the members of that group. You cannot blame that group for getting away with it if they can. The blame, if any, falls on the Congress of the United States for approving such an unwholesome piece of legislation, so exaggerated in its terms, so out of proportion in our social-security program, and so burdensome to the transportation agencies of the country. When we place unnecessary burdens on our transportation agencies we place those burdens on those who use them, on the consumers, on the shippers, on the traffic of the United States.

As I stated, this bill contains 60 pages. It involves a very complex problem, that of social security.

It involves a problem comparable to that to which the Ways and Means Committee devoted a year without bringing here anything except a small segment of the problem—60 pages, written virtually by the beneficiaries of the legislation. It came to the House and as it finally left the House, not an "i" was dotted or a "t" crossed. We swallowed it, hide, tail, feathers, and all.

This legislation, as near as can be ascertained, with the burdens of the present law, places upon the carriers of the United States, the railroads principally, a total burden that will run to over $700,000,000 a year That is a charge against the people of the country. It is a charge against their freight bills. It becomes a charge to justify higher freight rates.

This bill has some features that I do not think this Congress can afford to approve. We cannot afford to forget that we have a great social-security problem to meet in this country. My judgment is that as a matter of doing justice to many not now in that program, if we are going to have equality of treatment, we must materially extend our social-security program in the next few years. Our Government is sponsoring three systems: One for Government employees, one for railway employees and one for employees generally. So when we are legislating here, more important than the mere millions that may be involved in this bill, is the precedent that we will establish for our social security system. For instance, here we propose to raise unemployment insurance from $20 to $25 a week. That does not sound very big, but what is going to be the rule for the employers of 55,000,000 people in the United States generally?

Can we vote for this special class a maximum of $25 a week when we voted only $20 for the soldiers and when under our great social-security plan the States usually allow much less? Shall we set this group up to stand forever ahead of all other groups, or will it inevitably follow that we will be called upon to give to all of the groups in the country what we give to this group? We cannot afford to require the employers of the country to pay too high a percentage of this labor cost for productive employment for nonproductive idleness.

If we go too far in placing upon productive industry the burden of carrying nonproductive inactivities, we may make it impossible to maintain our system of free enterprise.

When this bill comes to full operation it will place a burden of about 18 percent on the pay rolls of our public-service carriers. At the same time, Congress, by its own legislation, is imposing on the rest of the employers of the country a trivial amount by comparison. Does that seem either sensible or just?

I ask you to face the question candidly. What is going to be the situation when we place on industry generally in this country a burden on its pay rolls of 18 percent for nonproductive purposes? Are we willing to go home and candidly tell our people that we have voted a precedent for such a program for them?

Another provision changes the period of compensation for unemployment from 20 to 26 weeks. Already in some instances the compensation for an employee for unemployment may be greater than for his total period of employment. We have an illustration of what we are getting into in the constantly increasing demands. In the first place, the Unemployment Act provided for a coverage of 80 days' unemployment. In a very few years it was raised to 100 days, and now it is proposed to jump to 130 days. I have in my office now petitions recently received from rail workers who ask increased benefits for unemployment which would require a tax of their pay rolls of over 30 percent. These petitions are signed by thousands. When will the country have a Congress that will draw the line for the protection of the unrepresented public interest? This bill places under the head of unemployment people who are sick, and for that reason are unemployed. The benefits are to be paid solely by the employer.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself five additional minutes.

We add to this fund a liability for sickness of the same length and at the same cost as for unemployment. The result is that it is possible that one man may draw unemployment insurance for 51 out of the 52 weeks of the year. Under the railroad system, which is more liberal in that respect than other systems of unemployment, a man can work 2 days of the week without having that charged against his employment. So he might gain $20 a week for 2 days' employment and $25 a week for unemployment insurance.

Then we have the matter of maternity benefits; maternity benefits for 16 weeks for a woman who may not have been in the employ of the railroad at any time during pregnancy or at the time maternity occurs. She is to receive compensation at rates that exceed that paid for unemployment insurance. Is that a just charge against employers?

We must distinguish, too, between the cases where we are conferring benefits because they are needed and where they are furnished regardless of need. Unemployment is paid regardless of the financial condition of the employee. The employee may be in a better financial condition than his employer, but nevertheless the employer has to pay the bill for sickness regardless of the fact that the illness is in no way due to his employment.

Then this bill adds increased liabilities for disabilities.

There is an appealing natural satisfaction in paying a benefit to an employee who incurs a disability due to his occupation.

But under this bill, extended disability payments are required for disabilities in no way connected with the employment of the employer.

As compared with the extreme provisions of this bill our committee substitute was a modest one, but we proposed increased benefits that would aggregate over $65,000,000 a year to the employees and their beneficiaries in excess of what they secure at the present time. A jump of $65,000,000 a year is not a small thing when added to benefits already allowable.

I feel that this bill should have gone to conference. It left here without our dotting an "i" or crossing a "t." It went to another body, and when it got there what was the magnificent argument presented against any amendment offered to improve this bill? Time after time it was in substance repeated, "If any kind of an amendment is made to this bill, no difference how simple it may be or how important it may be, it means the bill is dead." So with that club they went after the votes over there. Is that any way to treat the serious problems of this Government? This legislation is not placed on a sound financial basis. This legislation was contemplated on the basis that the beneficiaries would contribute on a level payment basis. Our actuary tells us, and I think with pretty reliable ability, that this bill as it stands would incur a deficit of about $100,000,000 a year. It is not on a self-supporting basis. Under the law as it stands, that means a charge of that amount against the Treasury of the United States.

In my judgment this motion should be defeated, and the bill sent to conference.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House suspend the rules and concur in the Senate amendments?

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LEA) there were—ayes 126, noes 60.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 190, nays 64, not voting 176, as follows:

INDIAN CLAIMS COMMISSION

Mr. STIGLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the conferees on the part of the House may have until midnight tonight to file a conference report on the bill (H. R. 4497) to create an Indian Claims Commission, to provide for the powers, duties, and functions thereof, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

FARMERS' HOME CORPORATION ACT OF 1946

Mr. COOLEY submitted a conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 5991) to simplify and improve credit services to farmers and promote farm ownership by abolishing certain agricultural lending agencies and functions, by transferring assets to the Farmers' Home Corporation, by enlarging the powers of the Farmers' Home Corporation, by authorizing Government insurance of loans to farmers, by creating preferences for loans and insured mortgages to enable veterans to acquire farms, by providing additional specific authority and directions with respect to the liquidation of resettlement projects and rural rehabilitation projects for resettlement purposes, and for other purposes.

PAYMENT OF CERTAIN PENSIONS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 5148) to provide for the payment of pension or other benefits withheld from persons for the period they were residing in countries occupied by the enemy forces during World War II, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Page 2, line 19, after "act", insert ": Provided, That the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the amounts of payments which, except for the provisions of this act, would have been made from the special deposit account, and the Secretary of the Treasury, as directed by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, shall reimburse from the special deposit account the appropriations of the Veterans' Administration, or cover into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts, the amounts so certified: Provided further, That no payments shall be made to German or Japanese citizens or subjects residing in Germany or Japan."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. SCRIVNER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain the bill and the amendment?

Mr. RANKIN. This bill passed the House some time ago on the call of the Consent Calendar. The Senate added this restricting amendment.

Mr. SCRIVNER. This bill provides for the payment of compensation to veterans of World War I or World War II who were residing in foreign countries and whose payments were suspended during the war?

Mr. RANKIN. That is right.

Mr. SCRIVNER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COMMONWEALTH OF THE PHILIPPINES

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2235) to provide a system of relief for veterans, and dependents of veterans, who served during World War II in the organized military forces of the Government of the Commonwealth of the Philippines while such forces were in the service of the armed forces of the United States pursuant to the military order of July 26, 1941, of the President of the United States, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. SCRIVNER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, this bill involves the expenditure of unknown numbers of millions of dollars. Exactly the obligation we are taking upon ourselves under a bill of this kind cannot now be estimated. In view of its great importance, I find myself compelled to object.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill S. 2235.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has assured a great many Members that the only other business to be taken up this afternoon would be two unanimous-consent requests. The Chair thinks perhaps this matter can be straightened out by Monday.

Mr. RANKIN. Let me say to the Chair that this is a very important measure. It has been reported by the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation. It has already passed the Senate. We are very eager to get it passed in order that it may go to conference and be disposed of before the end of the session.

The SPEAKER. Because of the statement with regard to the legislative program the Chair has made to Members of the House during the day, he prefers not to recognize the gentleman from Mississippi at this time for that purpose.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman from Kansas object to the bill's being passed as it was amended by the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation?

Mr. SCRIVNER. I do object. I think it is too important to be passed by unanimous consent. There are many things that should be discussed. I was opposed to the bill in committee and I am opposed to it now. Therefore, I must insist on my objection.

Mr. RANKIN. May I say to the House that on next Monday we are going to take up those citations for contempt. We have waited all afternoon to try to get this veterans' bill up and now I find myself stymied. On Monday I am going to take up those citations regardless. Then I will call up this bill, if possible.

Mr. SCRIVNER. Mr. Speaker, I do not like to be in the position of opposing the chairman of the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation, but as he just stated this is one very important bill. I think the House should be made fully aware of its every import and though I do have the greatest consideration for him, I cannot do other than what I have done today.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? When I do call this bill up, the Chair will recognize me on Monday to suspend the rules and pass the bill, and, of course, the gentleman from Kansas will have an opportunity of demanding a second.

Mr. SCRIVNER. I was told that this was to be called up this afternoon under suspension of the rules.

Mr. RANKIN. That is the motion I have made and suspension was denied. So I will call it up under suspension of the rules on Monday if I possibly can.

RELIGIOUS PERSECUTION BY MARSHAL TITO

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, Americans are straightforward, forthright, and frank. They appreciate these attributes of character in those who hold positions of public trust. They decry vacillatory speeches. They appreciate the truth. The time has come for plain talk.

The New York Times, on its front page, July 24, 1946, carried this headline, "Murder of 230 priests reported in Yugoslav antichurch terror." Under date of July 25 the Yugoslav Ministry of Information denied that Premier Tito had launched a terroristic anti-Catholic policy of killing priests, stating that these reports were "old accusations renewed to coincide with the Paris Peace Conference. Certain circles abroad always have tried to spread propaganda that Tito advocates an anti-Catholic policy and today they are timing their charges to coincide with the Paris Peace Conference in hopes of making the people believe there are disorders in Yugoslavia."

I know from reliable sources that this is a false statement and nothing but propaganda to allay the feelings of the decent people of the world.

On July 27 our Secretary of State, James F. Byrnes, leaves for a world peace conference to be attended by all the United Nations. He carries with him the hopes of America and of the world. Unless our Nation can secure the peace of the world there will be no peace in the world.

There lives no true American who does not wholeheartedly desire peace. But no true American desires peace at any cost. We are not a Nation of appeasers. We have paid too great a price in blood and sacrifice for isolationism. Twice within 25 years, at great cost, we have been called upon to quench the devastating fire of tyranny and oppression. We did not seek, nor do we now seek, national greatness through force of arms. We saw, however, the world conflagration approach our homes and our families, and we acted. Victorious were our armed forces. Democratic governments were saved. Nazism and fascism were crushed.

Man does not wait to weed a garden until the time of its fruition. The destructive forces of nature are eradicated. National hate, vengeance, intolerance, and religious persecution are vile weeds in the newly planted garden of international cooperation. The unprevented growth of any of these forms of viciousness in the heart of any government will destroy the peace of the world. American isolationism is past. America is committed to international goodwill and assistance. So must the other countries. If America, reverting to prewar isolationism, fails to take a firm position against any nation which would breed the causes of war, talk of universal peace is the empty mouthing of vacuous men. The headline in the New York Times, and its following story, shock the world. Yugoslavia beware. Have you as a nation, suffering as you did the loss of 1,650,000 slain and 425,000 totally, or partially disabled, failed to learn the lesson of war? Is the cry of your Marshal Tito, "Death to all Fascists, liberty to the people," a hollow mockery. Terrorism, anticlericalism, religious persecution are neither new nor unusual in the old world. These pastimes of tyrants have never touched America. They are abhorrent to our national mind. We will never acquiesce to a peace achieved by the appeasement of despotism.

The story of Yugoslavia is simple—communistic, headed by a shrewd, calculating leader, this Balkan state professes love of America. Marshal Tito is a dynamic Communist. He was apprenticed in the trade of revolution. He is reported as philosophically certain that the foes of communism must perish. His name "Tito" is the Serb-Croat for the Roman Emperor Titus. The population of Yugoslavia is approximately 15,000,000, persons, 5,200,000 Roman Catholics, 7,000,000 Greek Orthodox and about 1,500,000 Moslems, the remainder of other creeds, and Communists. Marshal Tito and six other Communists dictate and Tito is the Yugoslav supreme dictator. He has been, fortuitously, imposed upon the Yugoslavs by a small minority. There is no political freedom in this Balkan state. There is religious persecution of priests and nuns. On the border of starvation, dependent upon America, upon UNRRA for the means of their very subsistence, this government, engineered by Tito and his Communist associates, through revolutionary tactics, reminiscent of the Moscow standard of World War I, thriving on confiscation, without compensation, under a pretense of punishing collaborationists seeks the destruction of holy men and women whose only crime is faith in God. Hitler and Mussolini conducted similar revolutions. America then watched, unconcerned. History tells the results of American indifference. Are we to watch in idleness while war, the reaper, in the guise of Tito sows his seed of death? Tito has caused the death, for no crime, of over 25 priests. This figure is official. I know that he orders the imprisonment of nuns, for no crime, which in fact means death through cruelty. His secret police is powerfully organized. Communists eat, others starve. Over 600,000 men are still in its army. And in addition, a large number of men make up a powerful force of secret police. In other words, a gestapo of fear and force. These men are the cold evidence of the power of one man, who, through his government, in the name of liberty under the blood-stained banner of atheistic communism, would encourage pacifism and forgetfulness through international propaganda in the minds and hearts of Americans who are weary and tired of protestations of political innocence out of the mouths of despots.

What is the answer for you and me? Whither goes America? We, as the most powerful nation on earth, can, through the power of our international morality and material prosperity, prevent the destruction of reciprocal trust among the nations of the world. We can, by moral persuasion, insist upon, in the words of Pope Pius XII the "safeguarding the family, children, labor, in fraternal charity, the outlawing of all hate, all persecution, all unjust vexation of honest citizens, in loyal concord between state and state, between people and people." We must be freed of any intimation that the United States of America suffers an international inferiority complex. We, as a nation, must be firm, through our all powerful State Department, in our dealings with national governments who would make a plaything of religion or a foible of Christianity. Yugoslavia—the people of the United States of America decry your religious terrorism and openly condemns your present leaders. We care not whether your hope of national greatness through religious persecution was born in Moscow or conceived in Belgrade. Such prejudice prevents world peace and must cease.

The anti-Catholic, anticlericalism of Tito will never destroy catholicism or any other religion in Yugoslavia. I would pause a minute to remind that this wave of religious persecution, communistic offspring as it is, does not alone affect catholicism. Atheistic communism plays no favorites. You and I know there is no such being as a positive atheist—but the Communist on foreign soil who publicly denies the existence of God would, by force of martial power, not by reason, destroy every religion. The present religious terrorism in Yugoslavia calls for dynamic defense by dynamic leadership throughout the decent world, both church and state.

Every thoughtful reasoning man knows that irreligion never solved any problem, individual, national, or international. A defiler of religion, like the diseased degenerate, merely runs away from the facts of life. He is afraid of the justice of God. Americans know, whether Catholic, Protestant, or Jew, that the road of the evil of international war lies in the irreligious state, dominated by hateful and irreligious minds. America knows that totalitarianism with its concomitant irreligon fails because it refuses to recognize the unit of the family under God as the foundation of organized society.

Yugoslavian ideology based on false premises would destroy the dignity of the individual to achieve the omnipotence of the state. The world knows the tyranny practiced by every government actuated by a philosophy that men are the pawns of the state. Man was a man before he was a citizen and as a man has certain rights, actual and potential, which the state did not create but which the state is bound to safeguard and protect. There will never be world peace unless totalitarianism in every form is blotted from the face of the globe.

Yugoslavia closes her mind and heart against the natural rights of man. I know from reliable sources that every Yugoslav must join a political party. Theoretically there may be more than one party, but since the approval of the seven-man Communist committee is a condition precedent to political existence, only the Communist Party exists. Failure of any parent to join this party results in the refusal of permission for his children to attend school. Ration-card privileges for food and clothing are annulled. Identification cards are canceled with resultant circumspection of travel and continuous suspicion. After this, if anyone still resists, he is denied work. Few resist to this extent. If these governmental restrictions do not compel submission, by joining a Communist Party, his property is confiscated and he is put in a concentration camp. Very few resist to this extent. If a man occupying a position of prominence refuses to become an associate of the political party he is executed.

The Yugoslavs are for the most part pro-American, at least 85 percent are. They would emulate our way of life. But they can never under their present government achieve democratic liberty and independence. The state totalitarianism of Yugoslavia is incompatible with democracy and constitutes a continual threat to the peace of the world. The outlawry of the use of force is but idle hope unless oppression and religious persecution are forever barred. No man who labors for his daily bread desires to live under the iron, cold-blooded, ruthless rule of a state omnipotent. Sooner or later peoples thus suppressed arise and strike. Fear of government can never nurture love of government. Yugoslavia is no exception.

The people of the United States cannot slumber while such conditions exist in any nation. We must awake now. Tomorrow may be too late. We are geographically thousands of miles away from the seat of the government of Marshal Tito but the spirit of our intense desire for the permanent peace of the world permeates his land and gives hope to his people. America can and must, by firm governmental policies executed by our State Department, aid the persecuted Yugoslavs, prevent terrorism within her boundaries, refuse to deal with tyranny, to the end that there yet may be peace, prosperity, and democratic self-rule in this land which has never enjoyed the privileges of true liberty and freedom. America must never allow Yugloslavic religious persecution through rule of terror to destroy the peace of the world.

I know from reliable sources that over 250 priests have been killed. I know many nuns have been killed. I know from reliable sources that rule of terror by day and night exists in Yugoslavia under Tito. I know that he and his clique, a very small minority, control and dominate the government and people of Yugoslavia, waging a vicious war against religion. I know the facts I have stated are correct.

Representatives of our Government at the coming Peace Conference, in order to lay a true foundation for future permanent peace, must consider these ruthless conditions. Their removal at the source is essential that understanding necessary to lay the foundation of peace may exist among all nations. Our Government should exercise its good offices with dignity and firmness and with its great power to the end that the persecution prevailing in Yugoslavia shall cease.

As I have said, there are about five and one-half million people in Yugoslavia who are communicants of the Catholic Church; a little over 7,000,000 of the Greek Orthodox Church; one and one-half million Moslems; and the remainder of other creeds, and Communists. It is a very small communistic minority that dominates the people of Yugoslavia, and they are entitled to their own form of government, but we like to see it arrived at by the exercise of the free will of the people. However, one thing is certain, when they engage in reprehensible practices, the killing of men and women, simply because of their love of God, the faith that they entertain, without regard to the religion that they may be a communicant of or a member of, then it affronts the decency of people everywhere and it presents a threat to real peace and it presents a problem that our Government and every government seeking to lay the foundations for permanent peace must consider.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. PITTENGER. I do not want to interfere with the gentleman's trend of thought. I was not in the Chamber when the gentleman started to speak. Do I understand the distinguished majority leader is charging on the floor of the House of Representatives that Russia, which dominates Yugoslavia and dominates Tito, the Yugoslav ruler, has been guilty of carrying on a campaign in which something like 230 ministers of the Gospel have been murdered, to suit the purposes of the communistic regime there?

Mr. McCORMACK. I am confining my remarks to Yugoslavia today. My remarks apply to any other country that has the same ideology and puts it into vicious operation. In reply to the gentleman, I know, and this is a deliberate expression—I know from reliable sources that over 250 priests have been killed. I know from reliable sources that many nuns have been killed. I know that those confined in prison means slow death. I know that there is a rule of terror by day and night existing in Yugoslavia under Tito. I know he has an army of over 600,000 now. I know he has secret police in every village, city, and town. I know that if you do not join the Communist Party you do not eat.

Everything I have said here is information that I have received from a source that I know is absolutely dependable and reliable.

Mr. PITTENGER. And the gentleman is referring to Marshal Tito of Yugoslavia?

Mr. McCORMACK. Exactly. I know that he and his clique, a very small minority—I want to have my remarks clearly understood—the majority of the people of Yugoslavia are not communistic. Over 85 percent—and this comes from an authoritative source, a definite, reliable source—are pro-American; they want to emulate our way of life, but they are dominated by a very small minority in control of the Government which is waging a vicious war against religion and a war against all religions. Their tactics are to liquidate the strongest one first and then liquidate the others in turn. Their aim is to destroy every vestige of religion.

I now yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. COOLEY. I was just going to suggest to the gentleman that not only have people been killed because of their religion but I pointed out to the House several months ago that practically all of the professors of the University of Belgrade had disappeared. And, if the gentleman will yield a little further, I think our trouble was that when we sent our first note to Yugoslavia after the November 11 election taking the position that it was not in keeping with the letter or spirit of the Yalta agreement we did not maintain our position; instead, a few months later we recognized the Tito government.

Everybody knows that Tito is nothing but a puppet of Stalin.

Until great powers like America and Britain can establish some sort of provisional government in Yugoslavia and guarantee unfettered elections and preelection activities, there will be a reign of terror in Yugoslavia.

Mr. McCORMACK. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. DINGELL. I respectfully call the gentleman's attention to the fact that only a week ago this Government received a so-called ambassador from Yugoslavia as the accredited representative of Tito's government. I do not like it.

Mr. McCORMACK. My main purpose was to comment on the news item we read in the New York Times which said that over 230 priests had been killed.

The very next day a denial came out of Belgrade. With the knowledge that I have, definite knowledge, not from the New York Times—the New York Times simply confirms what I already knew—and I can assure you it is from a definite authoritative reliable source which has the names of those who have been killed, when they were killed, where they were killed.

Mr. PITTENGER. If the gentleman would be embarrassed I will not insist that he answer this question: Whether in his opinion Mihailovich was not deliberately murdered by Tito under the directions and on the instructions of the Russian rulers who dominate Tito?

Mr. McCORMACK. I had no reference to that in my remarks because I was addressing my remarks about a matter that concerns us all without regard to our religious convictions. We all believe in religious freedom and free exercise thereof, and we vigorously resent the persecution of any individual because of the religious views that he entertains.

But from the same source, I will answer the gentleman. That authoritative source informed me that Mihailovich was treated with great cruelty and that his testimony was given as it was only because had he not testified that way he would have been returned to jail and subjected to greater cruelty. I am reliably advised that the man never cooperated.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mihailovich you are talking about now?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. RABAUT. The execution of General Mihailovich was just plain legalized murder, that is all it was.

Mr. LESINSKI. If the gentleman will yield, it is a known fact that Tito, the totalitarian puppet ruler of Yugoslavia, is none other than one Brozowicz, who was a Russian revolutionary. He also served as a general in the Spanish revolution. He is not actually a Yugoslav.

Mr. JONKMAN. I heard a statement the other day from an authentic source, and I understand it is in the files of the State Department. It was to the effect that the Tito government charged our Ambassador with getting information from a Yugoslav woman employed in our Embassy at Belgrade. The Ambassador denied receiving any information from her. The next day the woman failed to report for her work. When the Ambassador inquired whether she had been arrested, he was told by Tito's Gestapo that she had left the country. After investigating about 3 weeks he finally got a secret message that she was incarcerated at a certain number on a certain street in a certain numbered cell. They found her there with her hands tied and they had been tied all the time She had been tortured. She had had one filthy meal a day and no place to sleep except on the floor. The room was filthy. It was necessary to hospitalize her for a long time to recover from her brutal tortures. I understand that nothing was done or ever said about it by our Department of State. Does the gentleman know of such a report in the State Department?

Mr. McCORMACK. No; I do not. I know nothing about that particular case, but I am aware that there have been violations in areas in which the United States Government is sovereign; that is where, under international relationships, the sovereignty of a nation is recognized in its property abroad.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for four additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, the majority leader has underestimated the conditions that exist in Yugoslavia today. A question was asked the majority leader by the gentleman from Michigan. I do not know about that particular case, but from unimpeachable information that I have, it is only one of thousands of cases that are occurring in Yugoslavia daily.

Mr. JONKMAN. I could mention others.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman is in a position where he has obtained information that he must treat as confidential, but which he can in a general way express to his colleagues.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JONES. In view of the statement the gentleman has given regarding conditions in Yugoslavia being dominated by Communists, I am wondering whether or not it would be advisable for this Congress to recommend to the United Nations organization that the Tito government is a threat?

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, my purpose in calling this to the attention of the House is constructive. I am calling this situation to the attention of my colleagues because the continuance of such conditions in Yugoslavia and other countries will prevent the foundation being laid for international peace, and in order that our country will exercise its power and influence to try to remedy the same.

Mr. DINGELL. I think the solution to much of the problem between the United States and Yugoslavia now is to give Mr. Tito's ambassador his walking papers.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am trying to be tolerant but firm in my expressions. I feel that frankness is for the best interests of all countries throughout the world. We ought to speak plainly; we ought to speak frankly and temperately, but the only way to arrive at the truth is through an exchange of views. I know that as long as the persecution and killing of people because of their religious convictions exists in the world, as long as that is the policy of any government, or those in control, or of any ideology, in my own mind the chances of the foundation being laid for a permanent peace, either by agreement or compatibility, is incapable of obtainment.

Mr. DE LACY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. DE LACY. I am wondering if the distinguished majority leader would care to reveal the authoritative source he is quoting?

Mr. McCORMACK. Does the gentleman believe that when I say I received the information from a reliable and authoritative source that I make that statement out of thin air? There are compelling reasons, I can assure the gentleman, why I cannot disclose the source of the information at this time; but it is a source that is unimpeachable. Others may have as much information or evidence, but there is no better source existing than the one from which I obtained this information.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has again expired.

Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, the revelations of the gentleman from Massachusetts are indeed appalling; but I cannot say that they come as a complete surprise to me. From personal observation in Belgrade, and from conversations there with people in many walks of life, I learned for myself what it means to live in a terroristic regime such as Tito's. Even a year ago while I was in Yugoslavia, I could discern the growing fears which his ruthless tactics were engendering among the people over whom he had usurped authority.

I entirely agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts that America can, and must, aid the persecuted Yugoslavs by taking firm action through our State Department. I believe, however, that we must go even farther than this. The gentleman from Massachusetts has reminded us that representatives of our Government at the coming peace conference will have an opportunity to deal with this inhumane situation. I should like to emphasize the responsibility resting upon Mr. Byrnes in this connection. That responsibility extends much farther than the mere protesting against the persecution of native Yugoslavs.

Mr. Byrnes' responsibility extends also to preventing new persecutions by the man whose talent for persecution the gentleman from Massachusetts has so vividly described. May I remind the House that on May 9 of this year I protested in this Chamber against an earlier outrage perpetrated by Marshal Tito when I urged that President Truman and our State Department take action in the case of the Catholic nuns sentenced to death by his drumhead military tribunal.

According to the provisional settlement of the so-called Trieste question arrived at in the recent Paris Conference of Foreign Ministers, Trieste will be internationalized, but more than that, I am informed that a large section of the Italian province of Venezia Giulia, sometimes called the Julian Marches, will be yielded to the dominion of this same Marshal Tito. I am further informed that this will mean subjecting to the merciless domination of this multiple assassin hundreds of thousands of Christian Italians. If the facts alleged by the gentleman from Massachusetts give any basis for prediction, they must make us fear for the safety and very lives of those people.

The gentleman from Massachusetts has warned us against further appeasement of despotism. It may be true that the provisional settlement of the Trieste question was the best that Mr. Byrnes could secure at the time of the Paris Foreign Ministers conference, but in view of the revelations of the gentleman from Massachusetts, I ask whether this whole question should not be reconsidered. How in conscience, could Mr. Byrnes, as the representative of the American people, the world's most vocal proponents of liberty, condemn hundreds of thousands of Italians to the tender mercies of the tyrant Tito? This would be more than appeasement. This would be betrayal. Furthermore, no settlement of the Trieste question which consigns a single Italian to the barbarous domination of Marshal Tito should be agreed to by the American delegation to the peace conference.

I question whether Mr. Byrnes has fully realized the probable consequences of selling out hundreds of thousands of Italians in the Venezia Giulia district. Eight million descendants of Italians in this country, over a million of whom fought in the armed forces of our Nation, will reprobate such a betrayal of the people of their motherland. The million and more Americans of Italian descent who served in our armed forces, will be especially indignant at our sacrifice of the ideals for which they fought. They fought, Mr. Speaker, for freedom from fear everywhere in the word. They will passionately resent our casting hundreds of thousands of Italians under the shadow of the deadly fear of Tito, the persecutor of their faith.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I earnestly proposed that Mr. Byrnes seek not only the relaxation of Tito's iron grip upon the Yugoslavs, but that he work for the reconsideration of the Trieste settlement so that whatever may be the disposition of the city itself, the Italians in the areas about the city shall not be forced into servitude under Tito. Unless this whole question of Trieste and the province of Venezia Giulia is settled upon the basis of justice and equity, I very much fear, Mr. Speaker, that we shall have on our hands another Danzig, and that by our unwillingness to stand for justice, we shall fall into another war.

HERBERT W. ROGERS—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

I am returning herewith, without approval, H. R. 3400, entitled "An act for the relief of Herbert W. Rogers," proposing to relieve Rogers from liability for $1,000 shortage in his accounts in the New London post office. It appears that this shortage arose under the following circumstances: On December 23, 1944, postal clerk Herbert W. Rogers issued postal savings certificates to three members of the same family at the same time aggregating $3,800. He failed to count the funds tendered until after the patrons left, when he found only $2,800. The patrons were contacted but they contended that they had tendered the full amount of $3,800. The case was investigated by postal inspectors who failed to break the story of the patrons but found no reason for doubting the clerk's story. It is further shown that there is no question as to the clerk's integrity.

The employee in this case was grossly negligent—and so found by the Postmaster General—in the performance of his duties, resulting in the loss of $1,000. To grant relief in such cases would encourage the continuance of such careless and negligent handling of public funds, not only by this employee but by others who might be led to believe that they would be relieved no matter how negligent they might be. No basis is perceived why the Government should assume losses incurred under such circumstances.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 27, 1946.

LEONARD J. FOX AND MILFORD G. FOX—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, H. R. 3158, Seventy-ninth Congress, entitled "An act for the relief of Leonard J. Fox and Milford G. Fox, a partnership, doing business as Fox Co."

This enactment would authorize and direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the sum of $9,058.32 to Leonard J. Fox and Milford G. Fox, a partnership doing business as Fox Co., which amount is purported to represent a loss suffered by the said company under contracts numbered W669-QM-19810 and W669-QM-2022, dated June 30, 1942, and July 16, 1942, respectively, with the Government.

The record discloses that the contracts called for the furnishing of a certain number of silver badges and that, subsequent to the date of their execution, the Office of Price Administration increased the ceiling price of silver. It appears that, by reason of such increase in the price of silver, the contractor was required to pay its supplier $9,058.32, the amount stipulated in the present act, more than was contemplated at the time its order was placed.

Both the War Department and the Comptroller General have recommended against special relief for the contractor upon the facts and circumstances existing.

The price stipulated in the contracts for the goods covered thereby has been paid in full. Hence, there can be no question but that the contractor has no legal right to any additional compensation for the performance of its contract obligation. The sole basis of the contractor's claim for relief is that it was required to pay its supplier for silver required in the performance of the contracts more than it expected to pay at the time the contracts were executed. This situation well could have been avoided if the contractor had either made a prior contract with its supplier or if the contractor had insisted upon a provision covering price increases in silver in its contracts with the Government. Moreover, I am of the opinion that enactment of the proposed legislation would create an undesirable precedent. I have no doubt but that many more contractors with the Government have suffered a loss, or at least a decrease in anticipated profits, by reason of encountering conditions and costs different from those contemplated at the time their contracts were made. I fail to find in the facts of the present case any extenuating circumstances which would warrant relief for this particular contractor as against such other contractors who have been required to absorb increased costs, and even losses, brought about by changed conditions arising after performance commenced.

Accordingly, I do not feel justified in approving the enactment.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 27, 1946.

RAILROAD REORGANIZATIONS

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I submit for printing under the rule the conference report and statement on the bill (S. 1253) to enable debtor railroad corporations expeditiously to effectuate reorganizations of their financial structures, to alter or modify their financial obligations, and for other purposes.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order against the filing of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, under the rules of the House, when conferees are appointed the differences in the views of the several Members should be considered in the appointment of the conferees.

In the instant case no regard was taken of seniority or the views of the Members, particularly those of the Committee on the Judiciary. An examination of the motion to recommit will disclose that those Members who did not speak on behalf of the bill voted against the motion to recommit, so that the only conferees on this tremendously important legislation were the proponents of any kind of legislation.

I call to the attention of the Speaker the following statement appearing on page 244 of Jefferson's Manual:

> The Speaker appoints the managers in the House, selecting them so as to represent the attitude of the majority and minority of the House on the disagreements in issue; and while it is usual to represent the party divisions of the House, the representation of opinions as to the pending differences is rather the more important consideration.

When the conferees were selected, there were suggested the names of those persons whose views and attitude toward this legislation were well known. I make the point of order that the report by conferees thus selected should not be received.

The SPEAKER. Of course, the Chair could enter into quite a discussion about the point the gentleman has raised, but the Chair thinks it is necessary only to say that if the point of order the gentleman contends for would lodge it comes too late. It should have been made when the conferees were appointed.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Ordered printed.

CIRCUIT COURTS OF APPEALS AND DISTRICT COURTS

Mr. BYRNE of New York submitted the following conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 4230) to provide necessary officers and employees for circuit courts of appeals and district courts:

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4230) to provide necessary officers and employees for circuit courts of appeals and district courts, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same.

WILLIAM T. BYRNE,
CHAUNCEY W. REED,
Managers on the Part of the House.

PAT MCCARRAN,
ABE MURDOCK,
ALEXANDER WILEY,
anagers on the Part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4230) to provide necessary officers and employees for circuit courts of appeals and district courts, submit the following explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon in conference and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The bill as passed by the House provides authorization of substantive law for appropriations for secretaries and miscellaneous employees of the courts, such as librarians, for whose positions appropriations for many years have been made without such authorization. It also restates the provisions of existing law as amended by the Judiciary Appropriation Act for 1946, authorizing the appointment of law clerks by the judges. The Senate made two amendments to the bill, the first to recast the language of section 1 so as to require that prior to the creation of any new position for the court employees there must be filed with the Administrative Office of the United States Courts a certificate of necessity signed by the senior circuit judge of the circuit concerned. The second amendment merely repeals the two sections of existing law which would be rendered obsolete by enactment of the bill.

The House conferees agreed to the Senate amendments.

WILLIAM T. BYRNE,
CHAUNCEY W. REED,
Managers on the Part of the House.

TREATMENT OF PEOPLE IN RUSSIAN-DOMINATED AREAS

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, it is my great privilege to commend the majority leader the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] for the courageous and challenging speech about Yugoslavia, which he made just a few moments ago. Everything he said, all of us know, either off the record or on the record, is true and correct. We know that the treatment of the people of Yugoslavia under Tito is inspired by Russian domination. We know that is true of the people of Poland. We know that is true of the people of other small countries across the water which come under the domination and tyranny of the Russian hordes.

Mr. Speaker, we need more straight-from-the-shoulder talk such as we have just had by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK]. His challenge calls for action. It calls for a foreign policy by our Government that will not tolerate the hypocrisy and tyranny and persecution and murder such as has been described as taking place in Yugoslavia by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

TRANSPORTATION FOR AMPUTEES

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include two letters.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I had hoped against hope that the bill for cars for amputees and paraplegics would come up for action today, as recommended yesterday by the gentleman from Massachusetts. I realize that the House has had a very trying day, and I hope that the bill can be taken up on Monday. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] tells me the report on the bill was not ready until today, but that he has just filed it, so that will be printed and ready for Monday.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HAGEN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in three instances and include newspaper articles and letters.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska (at the request of Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts) was given permission to extend his remarks and include a letter.

Mr. PITTENGER (at the request of Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper item.

Mr. MCCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an address recently made by Dr. Joseph F. Thorning. I am advised by the Public Printer that the extension will cost $90. I ask unanimous consent, notwithstanding the cost, that the extension may be made.

The SPEAKER. Notwithstanding the cost, and without objection, the extension may be made.

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN, indefinitely, on account of illness in the family.

SENATE ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 78. An act for the relief of the estate of William Edward Oates;

SENATE

MONDAY, JULY 29, 1946

Rev. Samuel W. Irwin, D. D., Washington, D. C., member, Louisiana Methodist Conference, retired, offered the following prayer:

Divine Father, though Thou dwellest in unmeasured space and dost live in timeless duration, Thou art not far from any one of us. In Thy wisdom Thou dost aid in every constructive human task, for the world struggling to be made is Thy world and Thou wouldst call us to join Thee in its redemption.

Give, we pray, to leaders around the earth and to us, a faith that rejoices to work with Thee in every effort at human betterment—to banish fears, to grant occasion to live and help live, to offer equal liberty to each.

Let us look upon human life with reverence and upon our own life with dedication. In a world so alarmed, may we sow peace. In a world material and selfish, let us scatter the finest of the spiritual. In an hour dark yet lined with hope, let us go radiantly. Thou dost go before, bearing the weak ones of the stricken places upon Thine arms, hiding the terrified who have no other recourse under the shadow of Thy compassion. In our own strong young land wouldst Thou grant wisdom, unselfish vision, and the Christian will to make things right on every obligation to our fellow man, that a kingdom might dwell among us of law and justice, of worship and honor and faith, of brotherhood and peace.

Through Him that loves us. Amen.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. HILL:

S. 2493. A bill to authorize the President to appoint Lt. Comdr. Paul A. Smith as United States representative to the Interim Council of the Provisional International Civil Aviation Organization, or as alternate to the United States representative, without affecting his status and perquisites as an officer of the Coast and Geodetic Survey; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

(Mr. WAGNER introduced Senate bill (S. 2494) to authorize the redemption and retirement of the capital stock of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and appears under a separate heading.)

REDEMPTION AND RETIREMENT OF CAPITAL STOCK OF FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to introduce for appropriate reference a bill to authorize the redemption and retirement of the capital stock of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, and for other purposes, and I request that the bill, together with an explanatory statement be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be received and appropriately referred, and the bill and explanatory statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 2494) to authorize the redemption and retirement of the capital stock of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The explanatory statement presented by Mr. WAGNER is as follows:

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, the bill which I am introducing today would authorize the Board of Directors of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation to retire the capital stock of the Corporation at such times as the Board shall determine, out of the assessments hereafter paid by insured banks. No such retirement could be made at any time if the effect thereof would be to reduce the net worth of the Corporation below $1,000,000,000. Moreover, the Board of Directors would retire the capital stock only to the extent that the assessments paid by insured banks exceed the amount required, in the judgment of the Board, for the adequate protection of insured depositors and the sound operation of the Federal deposit insurance system. Thus the Board of Directors would retire the capital stock, having in mind the needs of the Corporation for the safety and the security of insured depositors.

The Government has a capital investment in the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation of $150,000,000. Under the bill this capital investment would be returned to the Government and would become available for further reduction of the public debt. In addition, the retirement of the stock held by the Treasury would eliminate the Government's subsidy of the Federal deposit insurance system and would permit the system to operate as a mutual insurance fund. Not only would the Board be authorized to return the $150,000,000 to the United States Treasury but it would have authority to retire the capital stock of $139,000,000 which the Federal Reserve banks hold and which represents the amount they invested in the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation in 1934. After all the stock has been retired, the Corporation would be self-sustaining and would be a mutual-deposit insurance fund financed solely by the insured banks. It would, however, remain administered as at present, that is, by a board of directors appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate.

The Corporation's power to issue obligations, should the need therefor arise, is in no way changed by this bill but is retained at its present level, notwithstanding that its capital stock is partially or wholly retired.

In addition, the bill proposes to increase the compensation to be paid to the two appointive members of the Corporation's Board of Directors so that it will be on a par with the salaries paid to the Comptroller of the Currency and to the members of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System. Each member of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System receives $15,000 a year and the Comptroller of the Currency also receives $15,000 a year. On the other hand, the two appointive members of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation's Board receive only $10,000 a year. These officials should be paid on a uniform basis and for that reason the bill proposes to increase the salaries of the two appointive members so that they will be in line with the salaries paid to the other banking officials.

I think this bill is, on its face, so manifestly meritorious and noncontroversial that it should receive unanimous approval. It is most desirable that we authorize the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation to begin to repay to the Treasury the money which the Government made available to inaugurate the Federal deposit insurance system. Now that the Corporation's net worth is approaching $1,000,000,000 it is time that the Government's investment be returned so that it may be available for further reduction in the public debt, and so that the Federal deposit insurance system may eventually become a mutual-insurance fund financed by the banking system but administered by officials appointed by the Government.

When the permanent Federal deposit insurance system was inaugurated in 1935, it began with a capital of $289,000,000 invested on behalf of the United States Treasury and the Federal Reserve banks. Since that time the Corporation has had a total income of $713,300,000 of which $563,600,000 represents assessments paid by the insured banks and $149,700,000 represents income from investments and from other sources. The expenses of the Corporation during the entire period of its existence total $73,400,000 of which $41,600,000 represents administration expenses and $31,800,000 represents deposit insurance losses and expenses. The balance of the net income, namely, $639,900,000 has been added to surplus so that as of December 31, 1945, the Corporation's total capital and surplus amounted to $929,200,000. In the current year the Corporation will reach a billion dollar net worth, and when that occurs it seems feasible for it to start repaying the Government's capital investment out of the assessments received from insured banks so that eventually the Corporation will be subsidy free. At the rate the Corporation is now collecting assessments, that is, about $100,000,000 a year, it could repay the Government its $150,000,000 investment in about 2 or 3 years and still retain a $1,000,000,000 insurance fund. The entire capital of $289,000,000 could be repaid at this rate in 4 or 5 years. At the end of that period we would have a $1,000,000,000-insurance fund entirely free of Government subsidy and built up by our insured banking system. This is a goal which I believe all of us would like to see achieved. Now that the opportunity is at hand to start this program, the necessary statutory authority embodied in the bill which I am proposing should be enacted.

The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation has done an excellent job; it has helped to bring the bank depositors of this country out of the doldrums into which they fell in the early 1930's and has restored in them a feeling of confidence and security in our banking structure. I think this confidence will be increased if they are made aware that the successful operation of the Federal deposit insurance system to date makes it possible for the Corporation to return the original capital investment so that the system depends entirely upon the insured banks themselves.

One aspect of this successful operation which is most impressive has to do with the statistics of bank suspensions. From 1865 until 1933, a period of 69 years, we had 18,844 bank suspensions, involving close to $10,000,000,000 of deposits—an average for that period of 273 bank suspensions per year, involving $142,000,000 of deposits. For the 12 years since Federal deposit insurance we have had only 338 banks suspend, involving a total of $157,000,000 of deposits—an average for that period of only 28 suspensions per year with $13,000,000 of deposits involved. For the past 2 years there has not been a single involuntary bank closing.

Despite the fact that this bill comes before us rather late in this session, I feel justified in submitting it to the Senate because, believing as I do that it is wholly noncontroversial, I am confident it can be enacted in short order. There has been much talk in recent weeks about recapturing from Government corporations excess Government funds to augment the Treasury's balances and make further reduction in the public debt possible. This bill may prove to be the first step in such a program and for that reason is even more deserving of our prompt consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BALL. Reserving the right to object, why does the distinguished Senator from Kentucky want the consideration of the calendar postponed?

Mr. BARKLEY. Because I wish to make a motion to proceed to the consideration of a bill which, if the motion is agreed to, I shall then ask that its consideration be laid aside temporarily, so that the calendar may be called.

Mr. BALL. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is heard.

The clerk will state the first bill on the calendar.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 47) to amend the Interstate Commerce Act as amended.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if we are going to have a call of the calendar, I think there should be a quorum, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 47) to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, was announced as first in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

The resolution (S. Res. 83) to change the reference of Senate bill 541 to amend the Civil Aeronautics Act, as amended, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce to the Committee on Commerce was announced as next in order.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, I inquire where is the call to start, at the beginning of the calendar?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the call begin where we left off at the last call of the calendar. It is my purpose to ask a little later that a call be had of measures which have been passed over heretofore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I did not hear the request.

Mr. BARKLEY. The request was that we begin the call of the calendar where we left off on July 17, which would be with Calendar No. 1756, Senate bill 2401. I stated that later I proposed to have the bills behind that number also called for consideration.

Mr. ANDREWS. Does the Senator mean later today?

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not sure we will get to it today, though that is possible; certainly before we adjourn.

Mr. ANDREWS. I should like to say to the Senator that Calendar No. 494, Senate bill 1250, relating to the damages in connection with the Mediterranean fruitfly, has been on the calendar for over a year, and I have been waiting for it to be reached, not desiring to call it up as a special order.

Mr. BARKLEY. All the bills on the calendar back of the number where I asked that the call begin today will be called. I am not sure that we can do that today. I hope we can, but I am not certain of it.

Mr. ANDREWS. Let me state the difficulty about the situation, so far as I am concerned. An identical bill is now on the calendar of the House, and if we wait until tomorrow to call up the Senate bill, it will be too late to have it approved and signed, so I should like to have the bill considered and acted upon today, when we complete the calendar. The bill has been pending on the calendar for nearly 3 years, waiting until the end of the war, and it has the approval of the joint committee which investigated the matter. I do not feel that there should be any real opposition to it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I assure the Senator that I shall do the best I can to have the preceding bills called at the earliest possible moment. Of course, if there is objection to my request, it will be necessary to start at the beginning of the calendar and call measures on the calendar many of which have been called and passed over before.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I think that in 2 years I have taken up less time on the floor than any other Member of the Senate, and I should like to have this bill enacted before I leave the Senate. I am pledged to do it. I should like to have the bill considered, and I know that if the anti-poll-tax bill, or some other fool measure, is brought up, it can be debated until the end of the session, and a number of bills, including mine, which are important will fail.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, let me ask the leader——

Mr. BARKLEY. I shall cooperate to the fullest of my ability to see that the senior Senator from Florida has a chance to have his bill considered. Under the rule, the calendar must be called. I requested that the call begin with the beginning of the calendar, but I am now asking that the call begin with Calendar No. 1756.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. May we rely on the assurance that if we comply with the request and start on page 9, Calendar No. 1756, before this session is over the calendar will be called once again?

Mr. BARKLEY. Absolutely.

Mr. WHERRY. We can absolutely depend on that?

Mr. BARKLEY. That is my purpose.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, before a conclusion is reached on that point, may I offer a suggestion to the leader? I wish to say that I concur very heartily with what my colleague the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS], has said about Calendar No. 494, Senate bill 1250. Why could we not have an understanding that if we begin the call somewhere in the calendar other than at the beginning, when we finish the calendar today we may revert to the first part of the calendar and call the measures from that point?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if we have to do that, I think we might as well begin at the beginning now.

Mr. PEPPER. It will not take so very long, I think.

Mr. BARKLEY. It will take no more time to do it that way than to go back, so I withdraw my request and ask that the clerk begin the call with the first bill on the calendar.

INCREASE IN PAY OF MILITARY AND NAVAL FORCES

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have Calendar No. 1186, Senate bill 1357, to increase the pay of the military and naval forces while on sea duty or duty beyond the continental limits of the United States or in Alaska, recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs. A similar House bill was passed some time ago, therefore I ask that this bill be removed from the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will proceed with the call of the calendar.

RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The resolution (S. Res. 83) to change the reference of Senate bill 541 to amend the Civil Aeronautics Act, as amended, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce to the Committee on Commerce, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I ask that the resolution go over. It involves committee jurisdiction, and the chairman of neither committee involved is in the Chamber at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being heard, the resolution will be passed over.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 101) to prohibit discrimination in employment because of race, creed, color, national origin, or ancestry was announced as next in order.

Mr. RUSSELL. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1125) to increase the compensation of the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the Vice President of the United States, Senators, Representatives in Congress, Delegates from Territories, the Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico, and members of the Cabinet was announced as next in order.

Mr. REVERCOMB (and others). Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 83) to authorize the Federal Works Administrator to advance discretionary apportionment funds to be used for the purpose of making plans for the National Memorial Stadium as a postwar project was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

CLAIMS FOR DAMAGES CAUSED BY MEDITERRANEAN FRUITFLY

The bill (S. 1250) for the relief of certain claimants who suffered losses and sustained damages as the result of the campaign carried out by the Federal Government for the eradication of the Mediterranean fruitfly in the State of Florida was announced as next in order.

Mr. TAFT and other Senators. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I should like to give an explanation of Senate bill 1250 now, or ask that we return and take it up for consideration after the call of the calendar is concluded. This is too important a bill to be ignored simply by some Senator asking that it go over. We cannot afford to continue to postpone action on the bill. I hope the Senator who objected will withdraw his objection so that the bill may now be considered on its merits.

Mr. President, I wish to say that a great deal of money has been spent to investigate this subject and to obtain the facts. A joint committee of Congress went to Florida and made a study of the situation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, objection has been made, and the bill will have to go over.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I should like to have a chance to make an explanation of the bill.

Mr. TAFT. I shall be glad to withdraw my objection for that purpose.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I wrote a letter to each Member of the Senate more than 10 days regarding this bill, and attached to the letter an explanation of the findings of the joint Senate and House committee which made a detailed investigation of all these claims. I know there are many who think that when something happens in Florida it is not necessary to pay much attention to it. We have been treated in that manner regarding this bill and other matters. As I stated, a detailed investigation was made by the joint committee. The President of the United States had recommended an appropriation of $10,000,000 for the purpose of eradicating the citrus fly—the Mediterranean fruitfly. In the meantime an investigation was made by the joint congressional committee. Action was postponed for a time. For a long time we tried to secure a full examination and explanation of the situation. In fact, the Secretary of Agriculture, under a special resolution, appointed five men to make investigations of these losses and to establish the standard of the losses for each kind of fruit and vegetable destroyed.

After that report was made, the Senate and the House passed Senate Joint Resolution No. 40, under which a committee was appointed, among whose members were former Senator Schwartz, of Wyoming, the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY], and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], who is now absent from the Senate, and for whose return I have been waiting in order to call up the bill for consideration. As I understand, he is still in the Pacific, or, perhaps, in Europe. The committee went to Florida and held hearings on the basis of the specifications set forth in the report made by the Department of Agriculture after it had made its investigation. One hundred and seventeen witnesses were heard by the committee. Hearings were held at five or six different places in the Citrus Belt. The committee returned and recommended that the claims be paid. The claims were small. The claims for damage to citrus fruits, avocados, and various kinds of vegetables were made on the basis of less than half the amount that would have to be paid for like quantities of fruits and vegetables now.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ANDREWS. I am glad to yield.

Mr. LUCAS. How many claims were involved in this investigation, and what was the total amount that the committee said the claimants should be paid.

Mr. ANDREWS. There are in all about 7,000 claims. Many of the claimants are old people. Many of them originally came from all the States of Senators present, and they lived in homes established on groves of from 10 to 20 acres. Many thousands of them lost their groves by reasons of this infestation. At the present time I am very doubtful that claims could be established for anywhere near the original amount.

Mr. LUCAS. What was that amount?

Mr. ANDREWS. An appropriation was provided in the amount of $10,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the claims. To indicate to the Senate how very particular we were in respect to verifying the claims, I will show how the investigation was made. This damage occurred during the depression, when vegetables and fruits were not worth much

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Florida has expired.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I renew my objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On objection, the bill will go over.

The clerk will state the next business on the calendar.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 518) to provide for the issuance of permits for the use of live decoys in the taking of ducks was announced as next in order.

Mr. WHITE. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 958) to provide for more effective inspection and supervision by the Congress with respect to the administration of the laws of the United States was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 2504) to discontinue certain reports now required by law was announced as next in order.

Mr. LUCAS. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 825) to establish a Research Board for National Security was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, action is being taken so quickly that we cannot follow what is being done. What happened with respect to Calendar 516, Senate bill 958?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill was objected to, and went over.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska withhold objection to Calendar 517, House bill 2504?

Mr. WHERRY. I did not object. Some other Senator did. And Calendar No. 549, Senate bill 825, the next bill on the calendar, was also objected to.

DISCONTINUANCE OF CERTAIN REPORTS NOW REQUIRED BY LAW

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, with reference to House bill 2504, I will say that I have no personal interest in it whatever. The bill passed the House of Representatives during the last Congress, and died on the Senate Calendar. The bill passed the House of Representatives again during the present session of Congress. It has been on the Senate Calendar for a year's time. I realize that when one first looks at the bill one might have questions concerning it. I wish to ask the Senator who objected to the bill to please examine the bill and the report carefully. It is a bill which in my opinion ought to be passed, because unless we pass the bill it will mean that the Government will continue to spend a great deal of money in a very wasteful manner.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I should like very much to have a further explanation of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL] is recognized to make an explanation.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, at the present time there are some 330 statutory provisions requiring the preparation and submission to the Congress by various agencies and departments of the Government of various monthly and annual reports. Usually only one of these provisions applies to one department. The very provision that applies to one department may be contained in some other law which applies to several departments, and the result is that there is a great deal of duplication of work.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, now that I know the provisions of the bill, I wish to state that I have no objection to it.

Mr. HILL. I thank the Senator from Nebraska.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 2504) to discontinue certain reports now required by law was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS PASSED OVER

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 25) favoring an extension of the air-transportation system in the United States to small cities and towns was announced as next in order.

Mr. TAFT. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The concurrent resolution will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 172) to investigate certain economic questions in the Pacific Coast and Rocky Mountain States resulting from termination of the war was announced as next in order.

Mr. DOWNEY and Mr. TAFT. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 92) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relative to voting qualification was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 7) making unlawful the requirement for the payment of a poll tax as a prerequisite to voting in a primary or other election for national officers was announced as next in order.

Mr. RUSSELL. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

AUTHORIZATION FOR EMPLOYEES OF IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION SERVICE TO MAKE ARRESTS—BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 386) to amend the law relating to the authority of certain employees of the Immigration and Naturalization Service to make arrests without warrants in certain cases and to search vehicles within certain areas was announced as next in order.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, was objection made to House bill 386?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection was made by the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the Bureau of Immigration is very desirous of having this bill enacted into law. I do not have the facts before me at the present time, but the failure to have such a law upon the statute books now is rendering practically impossible of enforcement the immigration laws. Under the existing system, if a truck loaded with persons who have evaded the immigration authorities at the border in Mexico, for example, by swimming the river, is traveling through the State of Texas it is impossible under the present conditions to capture such individuals who are slipping into this country. I do not know, Mr. President, of any small bill that is more vital to the enforcement of the immigration laws than is this measure. The members of the Committee on Immigration went into this measure very fully. It was reported unanimously. It applies only to certain areas contiguous to the border of the United States.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. REVERCOMB. The purpose of the bill is to permit searches and seizures without warrants. The authority is unlimited, and would permit the search of any plane coming into this country. The Senator knows that I do not wish to do anything that would interfere with the enforcement of the immigration laws. But a bill which gives an officer the blanket right of search without warrant is not a sound bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. If the Immigration authorities are compelled to obtain warrants when a plane comes into this country from Cuba, it means that all the passengers in the plane may land in this country without let or hindrance, and can be admitted here without any obstacles being interposed.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. CORDON. I should like to add my comment to that of the Senator from Georgia. I know of no State in the United States today where arrests cannot be made without warrants in cases of felony. That is the generally accepted law. In this instance I can conceive of no greater emergency than that which exists with reference to the entry of aliens into this country. I hope the objection will be withdrawn.

Mr. RUSSELL. I sincerely hope that the Senator from West Virginia will withdraw his objection.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I ask that the bill be passed over temporarily.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF LAW RELATING TO ABANDONMENT OF CONDEMNATION PROCEEDINGS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2938) to amend the Code of Laws of the District of Columbia, with respect to abandonment of condemnation proceedings, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia, with an amendment in section 1, on page 2, line 8, after the name "District of Columbia," to insert "Provided further, however, That no such owner shall be entitled to such reimbursement in any case where the proceeding is abandoned at the request or with the consent of the owner of such property."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

TERMS OF OFFICE OF MEMBERS OF THE FEDERAL POWER COMMISSION—BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1289) to amend section 1 of the Federal Power Act with respect to the terms of office of members of the Federal Power Commission was announced as next in order.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Let the bill go over.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, all the bill does is to make it possible for members of the Federal Power Commission to hold over until their successors are qualified. The House has passed House bill 3704, Calendar No. 1086. I was about to ask that the House bill be substituted for the Senate bill, and passed.

Mr. REVERCOMB. The bill as written permits a hold-over for an indefinite length of time. It permits any member of the Federal Power Commission whose term of office has expired to continue to serve as a member of the Commission for an unlimited time without reappointment.

Mr. WHEELER. Similar laws are in effect with respect to the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Federal Communications Commission, and many other agencies.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I ask that the bill be passed over temporarily.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

RESOLUTION AND BILLS INDEFINITELY POSTPONED

The resolution (S. Res. 207) to discharge the Committee on Military Affairs from further consideration of joint resolution (S. J. Res. 116) to direct and require the discharge of certain members of the armed forces, to prohibit the drafting of certain persons into the Army or Navy, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, since the purposes of Senate Resolution 207, Calendar No. 872; Senate bill 1357, Calendar No. 1186; and Senate bill 1869, Calendar No. 1188, have all been accomplished by other legislation, I ask unanimous consent that those measures be taken from the calendar and indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, I submitted Senate Resolution 207 in the first instance. It is entirely satisfactory to me to take it from the calendar, because the purpose of that resolution has now been fulfilled.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, Senate Resolution 207, Senate bill 1357, and Senate bill 1869 will be indefinitely postponed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1248) to establish a Bureau of Scientific Research, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. TAFT. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

HEALTH PROGRAMS FOR GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES

The bill (H. R. 2716) to provide for health programs for Government employees was announced as next in order.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, before any action is taken on this bill I ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the bill which is upon the calendar. I act upon the direction and authorization of the Civil Service Committee in offering this amendment, and I ask that it be read from the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from California will be stated.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator how long this amendment is, and whether it is of such a nature that it ought to be adopted on the call of the calendar?

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, the bill is most important. Every industrial group in America, every business group, and every labor group has approved it. Extensive hearings have been held, and the bill has been unanimously approved by the members of the committee, including both Democrats and Republicans. The amendment is brief, and expresses the whole purpose.

At one time the distinguished Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO] objected to the bill, and it has been held up since that time.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOWNEY. I yield.

Mr. BILBO. What is it proposed to do?

Mr. DOWNEY. At the instigation and direction of the heads of agencies, and with the approval of the Public Health Service and the approval of Congress through an appropriation, the creation of emergency mental and dental facilities would be permitted in each of the departments of the Government. The service would be similar to what we have in the Senate. Physicians would be assigned to establish health and safety standards and to make free examinations. Nothing could be done without an appropriation by Congress.

The hearings on this bill extended over a period of several months. The National Association of Manufacturers, the National Safety Council, and other organizations approve the bill. The labor groups approve such a bill. Practically every great industry in the United States has emergency medical service.

The amendment is self-explanatory. I ask that the amendment be accepted by unanimous consent, that the bill be passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2716) to provide for health programs for Government employees, which had been reported from the Committee on Civil Service with amendments.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, I offer the amendment in the nature of a substitute, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from California will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That, for the purpose of promoting and maintaining the physical and mental fitness of employees of the Federal Government, the heads of departments and agencies, including Government-owned and controlled corporations are authorized, within the limits of appropriations made available therefor, to establish by contract or otherwise, health-service programs which will provide health services for employees under their respective jurisdictions: Provided, That such health-service programs shall be established only after consultation with the Public Health Service and consideration of its recommendations, and only in localities where there are a sufficient number of Federal employees to warrant the provision of such services, and shall be limited to (1) treatments of on-the-job illness and dental conditions requiring emergency attention; (2) preemployment and other examinations; (3) referral of employees to private physicians and dentists, and (4) preventive programs relating to health: Provided further, That the health program now being conducted by the Tennessee Valley Authority and by the Panama Canal and Panama Railroad Company shall not be affected by the provisions of this act: And provided further, That such health programs as are now being conducted for other Federal employees may be continued until June 30, 1947. The Public Health Service, when requested to do so, shall review the health-service programs being conducted by any department or agency under authority of this act and shall submit appropriate comment and recommendations. Wherever the professional services of physicians are authorized to be utilized under this act, the definition of "physician" contained in the act of September 7, 1916, as amended (U. S. C., 1940 edition, title 5, sec. 790), shall be applicable.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I do not understand the reason for an amendment in the nature of a substitute. The bill before us was reported from the committee with several amendments. I am interested only because the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] was interested in the committee amendments. They are written just as he wanted them. I do not understand why an amendment in the nature of a substitute is offered.

Mr. DOWNEY. I shall be glad to explain the reason. The bill as reported from the committee gives primary direction to the Civil Service Commission. Objection was made on the ground that the primary initiating power should be the Public Health Service. Following that objection, the bill was again referred to our committee, and there was an additional hearing, in which practically all the members of the committee participated. It was finally decided that the primary responsibility under the terms of the bill should be vested in the Public Health Service rather than the Civil Service Commission. That decision having been made at a meeting of the committee, I was directed to offer this amendment in the nature of a substitute, which clarifies the bill and definitely restricts it in certain ways. It merely substitutes the Public Health Service for the Civil Service Commission as the dominating agency.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. DOWNEY. I yield.

Mr. BALL. Would the amendment the Senator has proposed permit the deduction from the salaries of Federal employees of payments to a Blue Cross hospital plan?

Mr. DOWNEY. No; it has nothing to do with that. All it would do would be, in the case of the large governmental agencies, to permit establishment of a physician or a dentist or facilities for emergency treatment and care of the employees, exactly as we have provided in the case of the Senate and in the case of the House of Representatives of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from California.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

JOINT RESOLUTION AND BILLS PASSED OVER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the next measure on the calendar.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 85) proposing to amend the Constitution of the United States to exclude aliens in counting the whole number of persons in each State for apportionment of representatives among several States was announced as next in order.

Mr. McCARRAN. Let the joint resolution be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 948) conferring jurisdiction upon the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of California to hear claims for damages as a result of a flood in Yuba County, Calif., was announced as next in order.

Mr. McCARRAN. Let the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 3704) to amend section 1 of the Federal Power Act with respect to the terms of office of members of the Federal Power Commission was announced as next in order.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Let the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

AWARD OF THE DODECANESE ISLANDS TO GREECE

The resolution (S. Res. 82) favoring the award of the Dodecanese Islands to Greece was announced as next in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Inasmuch as the purpose of the resolution has already been accomplished——

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I do not think the purpose has been accomplished because I think the resolution covers more than the Dodecanese Islands.

Mr. PEPPER. Let me say that the resolution was reported unanimously, or without objection, by the Foreign Relations Committee. It is the same resolution which former Senator Lodge introduced in the Senate and which the Senate passed in the early twenties.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no objection to the resolution.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I find that I am mistaken. The resolution does refer only to the Dodecanese Islands.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thought it referred only to the Dodecanese Islands. They have already been awarded to Greece by the Foreign Ministers, but not, as I understand, by the Peace Conference as yet. Is that correct?

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I would simply suggest that, although the Foreign Ministers have agreed to award the Dodecanese Islands to Greece, that action has not been made final. The Peace Conference is now in session in Paris. I see no harm in adopting the resolution.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 82) was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that Northern Epirus (including Corytsa) and the 12 islands of the Aegean Sea, known as the Dodecanese Islands, where a strong Greek population predominates, should be awarded by the peace conference to Greece and become incorporated in the territory of Greece.

RESOLUTIONS AND BILL PASSED OVER

Mr. OVERTON. Let the resolution be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be passed over.

The resolution (S. 245) increasing the limit of expenditures for the investigation of the better mobilization of the material resources of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. BALL. Let the resolution be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 5594) to reserve for the use of the United States all deposits of fissionable materials contained in the public lands was announced as next in order.

Mr. CORDON. Let the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

RAILROAD BRIDGE ACROSS THE ALLEGHENY RIVER AT WARREN, PA.

The bill (H. R. 4190) granting the consent of Congress to the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad bridge across the Allegheny River at or near Warren, Pa., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 5316) to repeal the law permitting vessels of Canadian registry to transport iron ore between United States ports on the Great Lakes was announced as next in order.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Mr. President, since this bill has been on the calendar, certain transportation problems have arisen and are now receiving careful consideration. So, under the circumstances, I think it would be well that the bill be passed over, and I so request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being heard, the bill will be passed over.

DETAIL OF MILITARY AND NAVAL MISSIONS TO FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS

The bill (S. 1847) to amend the act of May 19, 1926 (44 Stat., pt. 2, p. 565), as amended by the act of May 1935 (49 Stat. 218) providing for the detail of United States military and naval missions to foreign governments was announced as next in order.

Mr. TAFT. Let the bill be passed over.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, before the bill is passed over, I should like to make an explanation.

Mr. TAFT. I withdraw my objection for the purpose of enabling the Senator to make his statement.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Under present legislation the President of the United States is authorized, upon application from the foreign governments concerned, and whenever in his discretion the public interests render such a course advisable, to detail officers and enlisted men of the United States Army and Navy to assist the Governments of the Republics of North America, Central America, and South America, and of the Republics of Cuba, Haiti, Santo Domingo, and the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands, and, during war or a declared national emergency, the governments of such other countries as the President deems it in the interest of national defense to assist in military matters.

During the war, by Public Law 722 of the Seventy-seventh Congress, approved October 1, 1942, the President was also given authority to send military and naval missions to the governments of such other countries as he might deem to be in the interest of national defense.

Senate bill 1847 is a measure to enact into permanent legislation the authority granted to the President during the war. It will authorize the President to detail military and naval missions to any foreign government whenever, in his discretion, the public interest renders such a course advisable.

Mr. President, enactment of the bill is recommended by the State Department, the War Department, and the Navy Department, and your committee concurs in the view that it is desirable legislation.

An identical bill has already been passed by the House of Representatives, and is on our calendar. Moreover, as chairman of the subcommittee of the Foreign Relations Committee, I am handling two other bills of the same nature, which were recommended by the President of the United States, by the State Department, the War Department, and the Navy Department. If, for example, this bill does not become law, one of the outstanding requests made of us by General Marshall, who now is in China, will not be complied with, and the desired result will not be accomplished.

There is in the committee report a letter from General Marshall to me.

Mr. President, if this bill can be passed, the need for the other two will not be so great. There is no chance of passing the other two in this Congress. Therefore, I trust that the Senate will pass this bill.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I shall object to the bill. I feel very strongly that we should not be sending military missions all over the world to teach people how to fight in American ways. We have done that in the case of South American countries and the Philippines, and I am certainly not in favor of having us undertake military operations all over the world, until the United Nations has a chance to establish itself and until we have an opportunity to operate through it.

So, Mr. President, I object to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being heard, the bill will be passed over.

The clerk will call the next measure on the calendar.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1271) to provide for cooperation with State agencies administering labor laws in establishing and maintaining safe and proper working conditions in industry was announced as next in order.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 5433) to amend section 540 of title 10 and section 441 (a) of title 34 of the United States Code providing for the detail of United States military and naval missions to foreign governments was announced as next in order.

Mr. TAFT. Let the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF PERNICIOUS POLITICAL ACTIVITIES ACT

The bill (H. R. 1497) to amend subsection 9 (a) of the act entitled "An act to prevent pernicious political activities," approved August 2, 1939, as amended, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. President, this bill was before the Committee on Privileges and Elections. As chairman of the committee, I was instructed to report it favorably. However, two Senators, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], drew attention to a desirable amendment, namely, on page 1, in line 10, to strike out the words "employees of the United States Government, including the." In other words, the amendment would limit the bill to the employees of the Alaska Railroad.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. President, I now offer the amendment which I have just stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 1118) to amend the Hatch Act was announced as next in order.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Let the bill be passed over.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. President, I should like to make an explanation, if I may do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Consideration of the bill has been objected to. Does the Senator who objected withdraw his objection temporarily?

Mr. REVERCOMB. I withdraw it temporarily, until the statement can be made.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. President, several bills to the same effect or with the same wording have been introduced in the Senate and the House. This one is now ready for action. It has met with the approval of the committee and it has received the earnest recommendation of the chairman of the Civil Service Commission, for the reason that before the passage of the Hatch Act the Commission had certain discretionary powers in respect to punishing offenders who broke the rules and regulations. By the passage of the Hatch Act, that discretionary power was taken away; and in every instance in which there was a violation of the provisions of the Hatch Act, the Commission had to discharge the offending employee, with no possibility of reemployment. In many cases that seemed to be too severe a penalty to impose.

For example, an employee might distribute some political cards in a political campaign for a friend of his who was running for office. That would be a violation of the Hatch Act. But the penalty of discharge of the employee with no possibility of his being reemployed seems to be too severe. The bill makes it possible for the Commission to use discretion in assessing punishment.

Mr. President, I hope that the objection of the Senator will be withdrawn.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, I feel that if this bill to amend the Hatch Act is passed, we might as well abolish the Hatch Act. The very purpose of the act is to prevent pernicious political activities. If we are going to make punishment for such activities too light and put absolute discretion in the Civil Service Commission with reference to the punishment to be assessed, we might as well abolish the entire act. I must ask that the bill go over.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. President, the Commission already has such powers. Such powers reside in the State officials. This bill would give similar powers to the Federal Commission.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, this bill has great merit. The interpretations and decisions of the Hatch Act have been, in certain instances, very severe. Allow me to give one illustration:

A man was appointed acting postmaster in a community in Massachusetts. At the time of his appointment, he was a member of the local Democratic town committee. He asked whether he should resign, and he was told by the post-office inspector that it was not necessary to resign until he had received a notice to take an examination for permanent appointment. Later, when he was ready to take the examination, some of his political enemies objected on the ground that he had been a member of a political committee. He was denied the right to take the examination and was forbidden from ever thereafter being considered for the postmastership. The Post Office and the Civil Service Commission regretted the situation very much, but they said they had no discretion in the matter, and I believe they favor this bill.

Mr. CORDON. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is heard. The bill will be passed over.

SIMPLIFICATION OF ADMINISTRATION OF INDIAN AFFAIRS

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 4386) to facilitate and simplify the Administration of Indian Affairs.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, this bill was passed by the Senate on June 14 and the amendments to the bill were agreed to. The bill was subsequently reconsidered at the request of the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BUSHFIELD]. In the interim, I consulted with him, and on his behalf I now offer an amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs were agreed to when the bill was originally considered by the Senate. The amendment now offered by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] in behalf of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BUSHFIELD] will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, in line 6, after the words "Indian Affairs", it is proposed to strike out the period, insert a comma, and the following:

Insofar as such powers and duties relate to action in individual cases arising under general regulations promulgated by the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of Indian Affairs pursuant to law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

TIME LIMIT ON INSTITUTION OF CERTAIN ACTIONS

The bill (H. R. 2788) to limit the time during which certain actions under the laws of the United States may be brought was announced as next in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Over.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator who made the objection withhold it long enough for me to make an explanation of the bill?

Mr. BARKLEY. I withhold my objection long enough for that purpose. I am frank to say, that if it is a controversial bill it should be considered aside from a call of the calendar, if considered at all.

Mr. WHERRY. I deeply appreciate the remarks of the able majority leader. The bill has been controversial; but, after consideration of the bill was objected to some weeks ago, the proponents of the measure went to the Department of Justice and conferred with officials there. A bill has now been drawn which limits the provisions of the act only to violations under the Fair Labor Standards Act and also the Walsh-Healey Act. The bill, as now drawn by the Department of Justice, eliminates any action which might be instituted in the antitrust division, and I am quite satisfied that the proponents generally of the bill have accepted the amendments. The bill has been printed and lies on the desks of Senators. I feel that it should be taken up at the present time.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is obvious that we have not had an opportunity to read the amendment to which the Senator has referred, and I ask that the bill be passed over temporarily.

Mr. WHERRY. Only temporarily?

Mr. BARKLEY. I should like to have an opportunity to examine the amendment.

Mr. WHERRY. I may say further, if the Senator from Kentucky will permit me, that I do not want to throw a wrench into the machinery of calling the calendar. But I feel that after the majority leader has seen the amendment he will agree that the bill should be considered. If I can obtain consideration of the bill only by moving to have it considered, I shall do that. I think it is quite evident that if the bill is not now considered it will not be considered at this session of Congress. If the majority leader will take the matter up with the Department of Justice I am sure that he will be agreeable to the Senate considering the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. I might be agreeable to considering the bill. I have not had a chance to examine it.

Mr. TUNNELL. Mr. President, in order that I may be notified, I wish to make an objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, if Senators are going to object to a consideration of the bill I shall avail myself of the privileges under rule VIII and move to take up the bill. I was agreeable to the request of the majority leader that the bill be passed over temporarily, but if there will be afforded no opportunity to take up the bill now, I am sure that no such opportunity will be available during the remainder of the session.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it seems to me that the Senator's attitude is not a reasonable one. We are calling the calendar under the rule which provides that bills may be considered to which there is no objection. I have merely asked that the bill may be passed over temporarily. But any other Senator on the floor has the right to make objection.

Mr. WHERRY. I understand that. Will the distinguished Senator from Delaware withhold his objection until we can give the matter further consideration before the call of the calendar is completed?

Mr. TUNNELL. I object now. I do not know whether I shall be present if the bill is taken up later.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator will not object to the Senate taking up the bill when the majority leader is ready to return to it, will he?

Mr. TUNNELL. I am objecting now.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I hope we may proceed with the calling of the calendar and not be required to stop for the purpose of arguing whether bills shall be taken up, such as this one, because objection has been made.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered at the conclusion of the call of the calendar at which time Senators will be free to object. When consideration of the calendar has been completed the bill will then be ready for consideration.

Mr. BARKLEY. Under the same rules?

Mr. TAFT. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be temporarily passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2126) to provide for the disposal of materials or resources on the public lands of the United States which are under the exclusive jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior was announced as next in order.

SELF-LIQUIDATION OF GREAT LAKES-ST. LAWRENCE BASIN

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 104) approving the agreement between the United States and Canada relating to the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Basin with the exception of certain provisions thereof; expressing the sense of the Congress with respect to the negotiation of certain treaties; authorizing the investigation through the Department of State and with Canada of the feasibility of making the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence seaway self-liquidating; and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WHITE. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 6741) relating to the operation of section 8 of the Federal Airport Act with respect to the fiscal year 1947 was announced as next in order.

Mr. BALL. I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota, who made the objection, kindly withhold it in order that I may make an explanation which I think will clear away any objection?

Mr. BALL. I withhold it for that purpose, but, as I recall this bill was called a few days ago and we went over it pretty thoroughly, and I think several Senators on this side strongly opposed the bill.

Mr. McCARRAN. Very well. If the Senator is of that frame of mind, and will object notwithstanding an explanation, I shall not take up the time of the Senate in explaining it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

BRIDGE ACROSS RIO GRANDE—RECOMMITTAL OF BILL

The bill (H. R. 1212) authorizing the State of Texas, acting through the State Highway Commission of Texas, to operate a free bridge across the Rio Grande was announced as next in order.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that that bill be recommitted to the Committee on Commerce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill is recommitted to the Committee on Commerce.

LANDS IN CUSTODY OF NATIONAL PARK SERVICE

The bill (S. 1839) to provide basic authority for the performance of certain functions and activities of the National Park Service was announced as next in order.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. O'MAHONEY subsequently said: Mr. President, may I inquire what disposition was made of Calendar No. 1602, Senate bill 1839, to provide basic authority for the performance of certain functions and activities of the National Park Service?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill went over.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I wonder if the Senator or Senators who asked that the bill go over will indulge me while I make an explanation?

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, as I understand, the objection which was made was withdrawn, and that the bill was passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No. To Calendar No. 1602, Senate bill 1839, objection was made by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. REVERCOMB].

Mr. REVERCOMB. I withdraw the objection for the purpose of permitting the Senator from Wyoming to make a statement.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, identical bills were introduced on this matter in the Senate and in the House of Representatives. The House bill is H. R. 6629, which passed the House on July 16. I find upon examination of the record that in the House amendments were made which eliminated the objectionable features to which some of us on the Public Lands Committee of the Senate made allusion at the time the bill was previously called, as for example, the Senate bill provides authority for the acquisition of lands or interests therein within any of the national parks or monuments. That has been stricken out by the House, and in the manner in which the bill has passed the House I think it meets all objections. I hope, therefore, Mr. President, that the bill now be considered and passed in the form in which it passed the House.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, this bill was called to my attention by another Member of the Senate, and I made objection to it. As I recall one of the principal bases of objection arose out of subsection (1), on page 4 of the bill, authorizing the "acquisition of lands or interests therein within any of the national parks, monuments, or other permanently established areas administered by the National Park Service."

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That has been eliminated by the House bill, and, if I am permitted to do so, I shall substitute the House bill for the Senate bill.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Am I to understand, then, that no authority is to be given to the National Park Service to acquire "lands or interests therein with any of the national parks, monuments, or other permanently established areas administered by the National Park Service?"

Mr. O'MAHONEY. None whatever. That authority has been eliminated.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I withdraw my objection, in view of the statement of the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I ask that the Senate consider the bill, and I shall then request that House bill 6629, which passed the House on July 16, be substituted for Senate bill 1839, and that the Senate bill be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1839) to provide basic authority for the performance of certain functions and activities of the National Park Service.

Mr. CORDON. I ask the Senator from Wyoming whether the House bill makes amendments other than the one striking out subsection (i) of the Senate bill?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes. The House made another amendment by striking out section (k) providing payment to school districts serving the areas.

Mr. CORDON. Those are the only two amendments—the one striking out subsection (i) and subsection (k).

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is correct; and on page 3, in lines 1 and 2, to strike out after the words "National Cemetery."

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that House bill 6629 be substituted for the Senate bill and be considered at this time.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 6629) to provide basic authority for the performance of certain functions and activities of the National Park Service was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, Senate bill 1839 will be indefinitely postponed.

BASIC AUTHORITY, BUREAU OF RECLAMATION

The bill (H. R. 5654) to provide basic authority for the performance of certain functions and activities of the Bureau of Reclamation was announced as next in order.

Mr. CORDON. Over.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator who objected to House bill 5654 withhold it for a moment. The bill proposes to grant basic authority to the Reclamation Bureau for the performance of certain functions. I may say that the Senate had this bill under consideration some days ago, and there was objection to its passage. Since then I have conferred with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN], and I understand there is now no further objection to the passage of the bill. It is similar to a bill passed last year to obviate certain nuisance points of order in connection with the Department of Agriculture appropriation bill. Being in charge of the Interior Department appropriation bill, I would appreciate it very much if the bill could be passed.

Mr. CORDON. It was under a misapprehension that I asked that the bill go over. I have no objection to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANCIS T. LILLIE AND LOIS E. LILLIE

The bill (H. R. 4466) for the relief of Francis T. Lillie and Lois E. Lillie was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Be it enacted, etc., That there are hereby established the offices of two additional Assistant Secretaries of Agriculture, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The salaries of the Assistant Secretaries of Agriculture, including the Assistant Secretary established by the act of February 9, 1889 (25 Stat. 659), shall hereafter be $10,000 each per annum. The Assistant Secretaries of Agriculture, as well as the Under Secretary provided for by the act of March 26, 1934 (48 Stat. 467), shall perform such duties as may be required by law or assigned by the Secretary and, in addition, shall perform any duties vested in the Secretary of Agriculture by law, regulation, or otherwise, which may be assigned to them by the Secretary, and, while so acting, their act shall be deemed to be the act of the Secretary. Each Assistant Secretary, in the order prescribed by the Secretary, shall perform the duties of the Secretary in case of the death, resignation, absence, or sickness of the Secretary and the Under Secretary, or, as the case may require, the ranking Assistant Secretary or Assistant Secretaries.

PAYMENT FOR LOGGING TIMBER FOR MENOMINEE INDIANS

The bill (S. 1418) to authorize the payment of certain sums to jobbers in connection with their logging of timber for the Menominee Indians on the Menominee Reservation during the logging season was announced as next in order.

Mr. TAFT. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE subsequently said: Mr. President, while I was called from the Chamber momentarily, Calendar No. 1755, Senate bill 1418, was passed over. I ask unanimous consent to recur to that bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I wish merely to make a very brief explanation of the bill, and then I feel there will be no objection to it.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I am told that I objected, but I had no intention to object to this bill, and, if I was the one who objected, I withdraw the objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not know who it was that objected.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If objection is withdrawn, I shall not burden the Senate with an explanation.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to pay to the Menominee Indian Mills to the credit of the several accounts of Herman Fredenberg; Walter J. Peters, Sr.; Charles J. Frechette; Joe Gristeau, Jr.; James Tebeau; Joe Caldwell, Sr.; John R. Pecore; Roy Oshkosh; Louis Tucker, Jr.; James Warrington; Alexander Waupoose; Bernard Grignon; Earl Vaughn;

Louis Washinawatok; Reuben Long; Nahpone Perote; George Smith; Louis Corn; Paul Vigue, Sr., and Louis Vigue, operating as a partnership; Dan Wescott and Paul Vigue, Jr., operating as a partnership; and the estates of George Irving; Louis Kinepoway; John Tucker, Sr.; Dominic Worden; John Mosehart; George Caldwell; John Okimosh; Anton Shawanometta; Mrs. Lillian Oshkosh, out of the Menominee 4 percent fund, the sum of $1 for each 1,000 feet of timber respectively logged by said parties on the Menominee Reservation during the logging season of 1934–35 according to the schedule prepared by the Menominee Indian Mills which schedule shall be approved by the general council of the Menominee Tribe. Said amounts shall be credited against the amounts, if any, respectively owed the Menominee Indian Mills by said parties without taking into account any procedural defenses of a personal nature which might have been interposed in an action at law to collect such debts, and the balance, if any, shall be paid to said parties or their heirs: Provided, however, That the foregoing amounts shall be in full payment of any and all claims which said parties may claim to have by reason of promises made by officers of the Menominee Indian Mills for the logging of timber during the logging season of 1934–35.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the payment of certain sums to jobbers in connection with their logging of timber for the Menominee Indians on the Menominee Reservation during the logging season, 1934–35, and for other purposes."

ACTING ASSISTANT SURGEONS IN THE NAVY

The bill (S. 2401) to amend the act of May 4, 1898 (30 Stat. 369), as amended, to authorize the President to appoint 250 acting assistant surgeons for temporary service was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of May 4, 1898, entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes" (30 Stat. 369), as amended by the act of March 18, 1940 (54 Stat. 54), and as further amended by the act of March 17, 1941 (55 Stat. 43), is hereby further amended so that the last paragraph of the appropriation for the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery (30 Stat. 380) shall read as follows:

"The President is hereby authorized to appoint for temporary service 250 acting assistant surgeons, who shall have the rank and compensation of assistant surgeons: Provided, That not more than 250 of such acting assistant surgeons may be serving in the naval service at any one time: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy, in time of war or declared national emergency, may appoint, for temporary service with the compensation of assistant surgeons, such acting assistant surgeons as the exigencies of the service may require."

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, what became of order of business 1752, Senate bill 2033? Was that passed over?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It went over.

AVIATION FACILITIES AT THE UNITED STATES NAVAL ACADEMY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2367) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to construct aviation facilities at the United States Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md., and for other purposes, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to provide by contract or otherwise for the construction of aviation facilities, at the United States Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md., including the necessary buildings, quarters, collateral public works facilities and equipment and the acquisition of the necessary land, at a cost not to exceed $12,000,000.

SEC. 2. The provisions of section 3 of the act of April 25, 1939 (53 Stat. 591), shall be applicable to this project.

SEC. 3. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to effectuate the purpose of this act.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I thought that bill was recommitted to the committee at the request of the Senator from Massachusetts. May we have an explanation of it? I thought it was sent back to the committee.

Mr. WALSH. No; not this bill.

The purpose of the bill is to authorize the establishment of an airport and the necessary appurtenant facilities at Annapolis, Md., which would be used for flight indoctrination of midshipmen at the Naval Academy.

Under the terms of the bill the Secretary of the Navy is provided the authority to acquire the necessary land and to construct such collateral buildings, quarters, equipment, and public works facilities as are necessay to establish an airport at the Naval Academy. A maximum cost limitation of $12,000,000 is prescribed.

Section 2 authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to employ architectural or engineering firms for the design or plans for this project, but provides that the fee for such services shall not exceed 6 percent of the estimated cost of the airport.

The construction of an airport at the Naval Academy is considered essential to the training of midshipmen. The acquisition of land and the commencement of construction must be undertaken in the very near future to assure the readiness for use of the airport in 1948.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2432) to enable the Department of State more effectively to carry out its responsibilities in the foreign field by means of (a) public dissemination abroad of information about the United States was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

REORGANIZATION OF THE FOREIGN SERVICE OF THE UNITED STATES

The bill (S. 2451) to improve, strengthen, and expand the Foreign Service of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I think we should have an explanation of the bill. It contains 105 pages, and it seems to be a very important measure. I doubt that it should be passed on the call of the consent calendar. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, there is on the calendar an identical House bill, Calendar No. 1805, House bill 6967. I ask that the House bill be substituted for the Senate bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, I do not object to the substitution, but I object to the passage of the bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thought the Senator wanted an explanation.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I am perfectly willing that the bill be discussed, but I do not think it should be passed on the call of the consent calendar.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, this is a comprehensive measure and is rather voluminous. It provides for a general reorganization of the State Department Foreign Service. It provides for increased compensation and increased opportunities for promotion. It is designed to put into the hands of the State Department authority to meet demands now being made on our Government in the foreign field.

The House Committee on Foreign Affairs had hearings on the bill and gave it very careful attention. It received the approval of every member of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, Republican as well as Democrats. I cannot, of course, within the time allowed, 5 minutes, explain every paragraph, every provision, and every phrase in the bill, but the State Department is very anxious to have it passed at the earliest possible date, and I think that on the whole it is a meritorious measure.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Its importance is one of the reasons why I think we should not pass it during the consideration of the Consent Calendar. I know that if the able Senator from Texas cannot explain it in 5 minutes no one could do so. I think we should give some consideration to an important bill of this kind, and I ask that it be passed temporarily to the foot of the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over temporarily.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I ask the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations if it is not true that the volume of the bill is caused not entirely by new legislation, but by the fact that it codifies and revises the laws relating to the Foreign Service. There are approximately 70 different existing statutes which are brought forward and reduced, in respect of overlappings and duplications, and otherwise revised in order that the law may be brought up to date. That accounts for the size of the bill, rather than the new matter, does it not?

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator from Vermont for his very clear explanation. The provisions of law relating to the foreign service are not only in many cases brought forward, but necessarily some changes had to be made in them, and some modifications and amendments. There is nothing radical about the bill. It is merely a renovation, a bringing up to date, of the basic regulations of the Department of State.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. REVERCOMB. This is, however, a bill reorganizing the foreign service of this country?

Mr. CONNALLY. That is true.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Were there extensive hearings before the Senate committee?

Mr. CONNALLY. Not before the Senate committee; there were before the House committee.

Mr. REVERCOMB. There were no hearings before the Senate committee?

Mr. CONNALLY. We had the State Department representatives before us, but we did not have extensive hearings, because it was late in the session, the pressure was tremendous, and we had to get action promptly. We are trying to get action here promptly in order to get the bill through at this session.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Will the Senator tell us who represented the State Department?

Mr. CONNALLY. The Secretary of State, for one. He did not appear at the hearings, but he made a very insistent request. One of the Assistant Secretaries appeared before us, and a number of the lesser employees, who explained the different provisions.

Mr. REVERCOMB. It is a very important bill, and I do not think its passage would be unduly delayed if it were put at the foot of the calendar.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the Senator make a temporary objection?

Mr. REVERCOMB. A temporary objection at this time.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. What is the disposition to be made of the bill? I could not hear.

Mr. CONNALLY. It is to be passed over temporarily.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Does that mean it will not be acted on at this session?

Mr. CONNALLY. It will mean it will go to the foot of the calendar, and we will take it up later if we can.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I have read the bill. It is a very important measure, but there is not much new in it. The object is to bring some order into the department, to simplify the classification system, and provide better salaries, but not anything extreme; the salaries are not too high. I think it is very important that the bill be passed before final adjournment. It has already passed the House. I have talked to members of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House, who practically rewrote the bill, went into it very thoroughly in many of the details, and studied it with extreme care. I happen to know that all the members of the committee, of both parties, were for it when it came from the committee.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas is familiar with it, but many other Senators are not. One of the reasons why I object to it is that there comes before us a bill to reorganize the whole Foreign Service, and Senators should have an opportunity to give some consideration to an important subject of this kind.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me say to the Senator from West Virginia that the House report contains in parallel columns the old laws and the proposed law, so that any Senator can examine the report and in a very short time discover that there is nothing in the bill that is revolutionary or radical. It merely brings the laws up to date. As the Senator knows, foreign governments have some very able and very aggressive representatives, and we want our own Foreign Service to be kept up to a high standard of efficiency in order to represent efficiently the interests of the people of the United States.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, does the bill create a new college or new service school?

Mr. CONNALLY. I think it is a departmental school.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. It is merely within the department.

Mr. CONNALLY. It is an intradepartmental school. It is very desirable to train these men.

Mr. TAFT. I was merely inquiring. I was curious to know what sort of training the department was supplying, whether there was to be a new university.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. It is comparable to the school under the FBI, if the Senator is familiar with that. The bill does not set up an Annapolis or separate institution at all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia objects to the bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the Senator from West Virginia persist in his objection?

Mr. REVERCOMB. Yes; I ask that it go over temporarily.

CANCER RESEARCH

The bill (S. 1875) to authorize and request the President to undertake to mobilize at some convenient place in the United States an adequate number of the world's outstanding experts was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, this is the so-called cancer bill. The bill authorizes the President to assemble experts from all over the world and to follow the course that he deems best in correlating public and private research in the United States in an effort to discover the cause and find the cure for cancer, and to correlate and to coordinate research in that field among the nations of the world.

When Senators reflect that 175,000 men, women, and children in the United States, according to past history, will die this year of cancer, I think I am justified in saying that if it is felt that the bill should require further consideration than is now possible, I shall give notice that I will move at the earliest opportunity to bring the bill before the attention of the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. May I inquire of the Senator whether this is the same bill that the House defeated a few days ago?

Mr. PEPPER. The House failed to take up the bill on a motion to suspend the rule, but the House has not considered the bill on its merits.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUFFMAN in the chair). On objection, the bill will be passed over.

BACHELOR OF SCIENCE DEGREE FOR GRADUATES OF UNITED STATES MERCHANT MARINE ACADEMY

The bill (H. R. 5380) to provide for the conferring of the degree of bachelor of science upon graduates of the United States Merchant Marine Academy was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 1751) to authorize the course of instruction at the United States Merchant Marine Academy to be given to not exceeding 20 persons at a time from American Republics other than the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

INCLUSION OF EDUCATION AND TRAINING PERIODS AS SERVICE IN MERCHANT MARINE

The bill (H. R. 6263) to amend the act of June 23, 1943, so as to authorize inclusion of periods of education and training in the Army Transportation Corps civilian marine school as "service in the merchant marine" was announced as next in order.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maryland give us an explanation of the bill?

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Mr. President, sometimes it happens that those who are really members of the merchant marine have been loaned to the Army Transportation Corps, and while there, have been put into civilian marine schools. The only purpose of the bill is to provide that members of the merchant marine who are in temporary service with the Army Transportation Corps, if they should be attending civilian marine schools, shall be regarded as having received education and training as though they were attending their own schools in the merchant marine.

Mr. REVERCOMB. We know that under the GI bill of rights men who went into schools prior to being called into active service were not considered to be in the service, even though they were at that time in the Army. Would the bill provide for giving preference to these men?

Mr. RADCLIFFE. No. If they were going to merchant marine schools that would be considered service. For instance, if a member of the merchant marine were to attend a school of the merchant marine, such as the Merchant Marine Academy at Kings Point, that would be regarded as service. All the bill provides is that members of the merchant marine who are in the Army Transportation Corps and attending a civilian school under the direction of the Army Transportation Corps shall be regarded as being in the service just as though they had attended the school at Kings Point.

Mr. REVERCOMB. In other words, attendance at an Army Transportation School is under the bill to be regarded the same as attendance in the merchant marine school?

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Yes.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 6263) to amend the act of June 23, 1943, so as to authorize inclusion of periods of education and training in the Army Transportation Corps civilian marine school as service in the merchant marine was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RECOGNITION OF SERVICES OF MERCHANT SAILORS

The bill (H. R. 6488) to amend the act to provide for the issuance of devices in recognition of the services of merchant sailors was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXEMPTION OF CERTAIN VESSELS FROM FILING PASSENGERS LISTS

The bill (H. R. 6148) to exempt certain vessels from filing passengers lists was announced as next in order.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of why certain vessels should be exempted?

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Mr. President, this bill has reference to ships on the Great Lakes. For a long period it was not customary to require that they should furnish their passengers lists. Some time ago, as the result probably of an inadvertence, that exemption was left out of the law. All the bill would do would be to provide that the ships plying on the Great Lakes between Canada and the United States shall not have to supply the ordinary passengers lists. It is a matter of convenience, and I think everyone is in accord with the idea that the regulation is an entirely proper one.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RADCLIFFE. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. I have examined the bill and I agree with the Senator from Maryland that it merely affects the Great Lakes, and should be passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 6148) to exempt certain vessels from filing passengers lists was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISPOSAL OF CERTAIN SURPLUS PROPERTY TO MARITIME ACADEMIES

The bill (H. R. 6408) to authorize the War Shipping Administration and the Maritime Commission to make available certain surplus property to certain maritime academies was announced as next in order.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, under the existing law with respect to surplus property the War Shipping Administration and the Maritime Commission would first have to declare it surplus, and it would then automatically come under the War Assets Administration. Do I understand that this measure would make an exception to the act?

Mr. RADCLIFFE. To a certain extent, yes. The maritime academies have to use various materials in connection with their courses of study. If, instead of their having to buy these materials, or to secure them in some other way, the material is available, it would seem reasonable and economical to place them at the disposition of these academies. There is no doubt that in the course of studies in the maritime academies these materials are necessary.

Mr. REVERCOMB. This measure in effect gives a preference, then, to the maritime academies with respect to any property which may be declared surplus by the War Shipping Administration and the Maritime Commission? It gives them a priority over them?

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Yes. It gives a preference so the maritime academies may use them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 6408) to authorize the War Shipping Administration and Maritime Commission to make available certain surplus property to certain maritime academies was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MOSES TENNENBAUM

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2485) for the relief of Moses Tennenbaum, which had been reported from the Committee on Immigration with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That in the administration of the immigration laws, relating to the issuance of immigration visas for admission to the United States for permanent residence and relating to admissions at ports of entry of aliens as immigrants for permanent residence in the United States, the provisions of section 3 of the Immigration Act of 1917 (39 Stat. 875), as amended (U. S. C., title 8, sec. 136 (e)), which exclude from admission into the United States "persons who have been convicted of or admit having committed a felony, or other crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude" shall not hereafter be held to apply to Moses Tennenbaum on account of offenses alleged to have been committed in connection with obtaining a passport or a visa for admission to the United States. If he is found otherwise admissible under the immigration laws, an immigration visa may be issued and admission granted to Moses Tennenbaum under this act upon application hereafter filed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

ADMISSION TO THE UNITED STATES OF VIRGINIA HARRIS CASARDI

The bill (H. R. 5278) to legalize the admission to the United States of Virginia Harris Casardi was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROTECTION OF NATIONAL FOREST LANDS IN LAWRENCE COUNTY, OHIO

The bill (H. R. 6298) to protect and facilitate the use of national forest lands in township 2 north, range 18 west, Ohio River survey, township of Elizabeth, county of Lawrence, State of Ohio, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PARKER RIVER NATIONAL WILDLIFE REFUGE, MASS.—BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 4362) to abolish the Parker River National Wildlife Refuge in Essex County, Mass., was announced as next in order.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Over.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold objection so I may make an explanation?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I withhold my objection temporarily.

Mr. WALSH. The Department of the Interior undertook to establish a wildlife refuge in Essex County, Mass. It met with violent protests. The people in that locality based their objections on a variety of grounds; claimed that the establishment of this wildlife refuge would interfere with their clam taking and fishing and other activities in which they engage. The whole country has been practically unanimous in its opposition. The bill asking that the action of the Department of the Interior be repealed passed the House and is now here in the Senate. The Governor of the Commonwealth and all the officials of Essex County and the local communities are opposed to the establishment of this refuge. To the credit of the present Secretary of the Interior let it be stated that he took the position that he did not intend to insist on forcing a wildlife refuge on communities that did not want them. While he thought those who objected made a mistake, and overestimated the harm that would follow, he was of the opinion that if the officials of the State and of the county and the people generally did not want it, he did not think it ought to be established. But there are many people, sportsmen and others, outside the area in question, who would of course like to have the refuge established.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. Can the Senator tell us whether this refuge has actually been established, and if so, how much money has been spent on it?

Mr. WALSH. Some property was purchased. The bill seeks to undo what was done and to abolish the refuge. The refuge was established to the extent of the purchase of some property and certain planning; but there has been no development of the refuge in the way of providing feed and other facilities.

Mr. FERGUSON. How much money has been expended by the Government, and what would be the loss to the Government?

Mr. WALSH. There would be no loss to the Government. Whatever the Government has paid would be paid back by the people who have sold their places already. There would be no loss to the Government.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Normally I do not like to object to a bill relating to the State of my distinguished colleague. However, I served as a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. A representative of the Fish and Wildlife Service appeared before the committee, and the bill was discussed. Unfortunately at that time the able Senator from Massachusetts was otherwise engaged and could not be present.

Mr. WALSH. My colleague [Mr. SALTONSTALL] was present representing both of us and we had sent several communications to the chairman of the committee and had several conferences.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I understood at that time that the Fish and Wildlife Service had completed the purchase of the refuge, and that it was in operation. I understand also that the Fish and Wildlife Service is not in favor of abolishing this refuge. I have received a large number of communications from sportsmen up and down the east coast who feel that it would be detrimental to the general conservation policy to abandon this refuge. For that reason, temporarily I shall have to object.

Mr. WALSH. Undoubtedly sportsmen who live outside that area would prefer to have all the wildlife refuges possible. I quote from the committee report with respect to certain features of this controversy which has caused very much opposition in this locality:

The initial mistake at Parker River was a failure to size up the environmental situation accurately and to realize that its peculiarities called for rather extensive adaptation of technical methods. At the same time, there was a serious miscalculation in the field of public relations: It was not foreseen that a 12,000-acre refuge, quite appropriate to more spacious regions, would be entirely out of scale in populous Essex County and would come into direct conflict with many established uses of land and water.

This second mistake would have been less damaging if promptly corrected. The Wildlife Service might well have used the early protests as an opportunity for wider discussion of its purposes and methods, for rechecking its own information, for feeling out where the trouble lay, and modifying its plans to increase public support. The important thing at this stage was to establish the principle of waterfowl management on a scale which public opinion was prepared to accept. Expansion would have followed naturally as the benefits were demonstrated.

Instead, the Service continued to underestimate the validity of the protests and to steadily widen the gap between itself and public understanding. Its policy, whether intentional or merely inept, was to listen to objections but never explain its decisions, to ignore important segments of local information and opinion, to take refuge in generalities, and to promise benefits it could not be sure of producing. When pressed, it charged bias and untruthfulness against all who questioned the soundness of its plans. Moved more by pride of opinion that by generally accepted fact it finally pushed ahead to a forcible seizure of land which shocked the community in which it hoped to work.

It has staged a convincing demonstration, not of waterfowl management but of the ills which may be expected to accompany remote control of a matter which is essentially local and within the normal field of State administration.

This is particularly unfortunate because there are sound ideas behind the national waterfowl program. There is no question that broad control of migratory waterfowl is a proper Federal function. There is no question that Federal refuges, operating in sparsely settled regions, have been the chief factor in saving an important natural resource. There is no question that some of the methods of refuge management should be tried out in New England. The sole issue is whether or not this trial of methods shall be fitted to the actual conditions and needs of Massachusetts.

Shall the first unit in this difficult New England environment be experimental in size and purpose and so planned that it does not destroy or disturb existing uses of land and water until its own value has been demonstrated?

Or shall the whole standard program, its suitable and unsuitable parts alike, be applied by force on 20 square miles with such disregard of local custom that the final result is a set-back in public opinion for the very idea of game management?

The Senator does not know when the same question may arise in the State or community. The point I am making is that if the State, county, and city officials and the inhabitants in general do not want it, it ought not to go there.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

MRS. MARY D. JOHNSON

The bill (H. R. 4608) for the relief of Mrs. Mary D. Johnson was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 6, to strike out:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 3, after "SEC.", to strike out "12" and insert in lieu thereof "10."

The next amendment was, in section 2 of title II, under the heading "The United States Courts of the District of Columbia Building," on page 10, line 3, after the words "committee of", to strike out "five" and insert "six"; and in line 11, after the word "Board", to insert "The Commissioner of Public Buildings."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3 of title II, on page 10, line 24, after the word "Arts", to insert "and by the Public Buildings and Grounds Committees of the Senate and House of Representatives."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4 of title II, on page 11, line 11, after the word "Street", and insert "Provided, That the said Commissioners are hereby authorized to continue to lease such land for parking purposes and to receive and use for expenses of the District of Columbia any income derived therefrom, until such time as the use of the land is required by the Federal Government for the new court building."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.—

DISPOSITION OF CERTAIN PUBLIC LANDS IN OKLAHOMA

The bill (H. R. 3593) relating to the disposition of public lands of the United States situated in the State of Oklahoma between the Cimarron base line and the north boundary of the State of Texas was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BOUNDARIES OF WIND CAVE NATIONAL PARK, S. DAK.

The bill (H. R. 7004) to revise the boundaries of Wind Cave National Park in the State of South Dakota, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BENEFITS TO CERTAIN NAVAL PERSONNEL UNDER NAVAL RESERVE ACT

The bill (H. R. 7039) to further amend section 1304 of the Naval Reserve Act of 1938, as amended, so as to grant certain benefits to naval personnel engaged in training duty prior to official termination of World War II was announced as next in order.

Mr. LANGER. Let the bill go over.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, let me say to the distinguished Senator from North Dakota that if the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] will make an explanation, I do not believe there will be any objection to the bill. I wish to offer an amendment to the bill, which I have discussed with the Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota objected.

Mr. HILL. I do not believe that the Senator from North Dakota would wish to object if he understood the bill. Will he withhold his objection until the Senator from Massachusetts makes an explanation?

Mr. LANGER. My objection stands.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, there are two laws relating to the rights of Naval Reservists on temporary duty. One is Public Law 38, which gives to Reservists on temporary duty the right to the same compensation which civil-service employees receive in case of injury, and the same benefits in case of death. During the war, of course, all the Reservists had the same rights as regular naval officers. In 1941 a law was enacted giving those who had served on temporary duty the benefits accorded civil-service employees.

There is a gap between the two laws, inasmuch as there are certain Reservists who, now that the war is over, will not be entitled to any benefits unless this bill is enacted.

Mr. HILL. Is not this the situation? Whereas we are now at peace so far as the fighting is concerned, from a legal standpoint we are still at war. If a young naval aviator were to go on active duty today and engage in flying activities, as he must do if he is to be worth anything to the Government, and he should be injured, he would be in the position of not being entitled to any benefits under the Employees' Unemployment Compensation Act because we are at war, and those benefits do not apply to him. He would not be entitled to the benefits which the law would give him if we were at peace, because legally and technically we are not at peace. So what the bill does is simply to accord to young Reserve officers the benefits which they would have under the Employees' Compensation Act for injuries incurred in line of duty if we were technically and legally at peace. That is the purpose of the bill, is it not?

Mr. WALSH. The Senator has stated it accurately.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. WALSH. Will the Senator offer his amendment?

Mr. HILL. I send an amendment to the desk. Am I to understand that the Senator from North Dakota still objects to the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota objected to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from North Dakota will not object. The same situation occurs in the Army as in the Navy. The purpose of the bill is to help the Reserve officers who wish to continue their training. Certainly we do not expect them to continue their training if there is no compensation in case of an accident merely because we are technically still at war. I will say to the Senator from North Dakota that cases similar to the ones described arose prior to the war, and we got into a great deal of trouble because the Federal Government was not legally obligated even to pay for hospital expenses, and we had to pass quite a number of private claim bills. I believe that this is a very meritorious measure. If the Senator from North Dakota understood the objective as I do, I feel sure that he would withdraw his objection.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, in view of the statement of the distinguished Senator, I withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7039) to further amend section 304 of the Naval Reserve Act of 1938, as amended, so as to grant certain benefits to naval personnel engaged in training duty prior to official termination of World War II, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 304 of the Naval Reserve Act of 1938, as amended, is hereby further amended as follows: Insert the following new proviso immediately before the final proviso of the said section: "Provided further, That any member of the Naval Reserve performing active duty with or without pay for periods of 30 days or less, training duty with or without pay, drills, equivalent instruction or duty, appropriate duty, or prescribed duty, or while performing authorized travel to or from such duties, prior to the official termination of World War II, shall be entitled to all the benefits provided by this section to members of the Naval Reserve in time of peace."

SEC. 2. This amendment shall be effective as of December 1, 1945.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I offer the amendment, which I have sent to the desk and ask to have stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, after line 7, it is proposed to add the following section:

On page 2, after line 7, to insert the following new section:

"SEC. 3. The act entitled 'An act to extend the benefits of the United States Employees' Compensation Act to members of the Officers' Reserve Corps and of the Enlisted Reserve Corps of the Army who are physically injured in line of duty while performing active duty or engaged in authorized training, and for other purposes,' approved July 15, 1939 (U. S. C., 1940 ed., title 5, sec. 797), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

" 'SEC. 2. As used in this act, the term "in time of peace" shall include that period after September 8, 1945 (the date of formal surrender by Japan), which is prior to the first day on which the United States is, by the action of the Congress or the President, or both, no longer engaged in any war in which the United States is engaged on the date of enactment of this section.' "

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the amendment is acceptable to me.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I offer the amendment not only on behalf of myself, but also on behalf of the distinguished Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY], who is very much interested in the bill and in the adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama on behalf of himself and the Senator from South Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I raised the objection because of the speech delivered by the distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] on Saturday. At that time he stated that in his opinion the war should have been declared over a long time ago. I objected in view of the fact that he had made that statement.

PROTECTION OF NATIONALITY OF UNITED STATES NATIONALS COMPELLED TO VOTE IN A FOREIGN STATE

The bill (H. R. 434) to provide that nationals of the United States shall not lose their nationality by reason of voting under legal compulsion in a foreign state was announced as next in order.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas explain House bill 434, please? I do not quite understand it.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I shall be glad to state the purpose of the bill. The act of 1940 contained a provision to the effect that anyone who voted in a foreign election would lose his American citizenship. The fact of the matter is that immediately after that law went into effect, the war was on and there was no practical way for people living in other countries to know about this law.

We have several letters from the State Department on that point. All persons who are involved whose cases came to my attention, I believe—approximately 30 or 40—were American women who had married men living in England or Australia or, I think, in one or two instances in Denmark. The bill is restricted to those persons who have voted in such elections in countries which were not at war with us prior to the enactment of this bill. It does not affect anyone from now on.

We felt, as did the State Department, that those persons had not had adequate knowledge of the provisions of the law of 1940 regarding this matter. I think there are very good grounds for that, because it was impossible for the new law to be stated in the foreign newspapers or for anyone in a foreign country to know about it.

The bill is very limited in its application, and it will not apply from now on.

Mr. HAWKES. In other words, it affects only women who married foreigners and were living in foreign countries. Is that correct?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. So far as I know, they are women. There may be a few cases of men; but so far as I know, only women are involved.

Mr. HAWKES. I thank the Senator. I did not understand the situation.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. For example, some of them voted in the last election, a year ago, in England, and thereby lost their American citizenship. I think it is uncontroverted that they did not know about this provision of law, which was enacted just prior to the war.

Mr. HAWKES. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill H. R. 434, which had been reported from the Committee on Immigration with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That section 323 of the act of October 14, 1940 (54 Stat. 1149), entitled "An act to revise and codify the nationality laws of the United States into a comprehensive nationality code," as heretofore amended, is hereby further amended by adding thereto the following paragraph:

"A person who, while a citizen of the United States and prior to the effective date of this amendment, has lost citizenship of the United States by voting in a political election in a foreign state other than a state at war with the United States during the Second World War may, if he so desires, be naturalized by taking, prior to 1 year from the enactment of this amendment, before any naturalization court specified in subsection (a) of section 301, or before any diplomatic or consular officer of the United States abroad, the oaths prescribed by section 335. Certified copies of such oath shall be sent by such diplomatic or consular officer or such court to the Department of State and to the Department of Justice. Such persons shall have, from and after naturalization under this section, the same citizenship status as that which existed immediately prior to its loss."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act to provide for the expeditious naturalization of former citizens of the United States who have lost United States citizenship through voting in a political election in a country not at war with the United States during the Second World War."

OVERTIME COMPENSATION FOR CERTAIN CIVILIAN EMPLOYEES

The bill (H. R. 4720) to amend the act of December 7, 1944, relating to certain overtime compensation of civilian employees of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, may we have an explanation?

Mr. DOWNEY. I shall be very happy to make an explanation.

I think I am correct in stating that the total amount involved is only $2,823.86. This bill arises from a rather complicated provision of the Pay Act of 1942 limiting overtime compensation. Apparently, although 32 railroad clerks were entitled to overtime compensation to this extent, they were caught under certain technicalities of the law which are too abstruse for me to understand. It is the opinion of both committees that have heard the evidence in this matter that these 32 railroad clerks are entitled to a payment of approximately $2,800 for overtime work which they have performed. I hope the bill may be passed without objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMPENSATION, ETC., OF VETERANS DURING HOSPITALIZATION, ETC.

The bill (H. R. 6811) relating to veterans, pension, compensation, or retirement pay during hospitalization, institutional or domiciliary care, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BALL. Let the bill be passed over.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I hope the Senator who has asked that the bill be passed over will reserve his objection temporarily, until I can explain the bill.

Mr. BALL. Very well.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, this bill has two sections. It is very important. It is true that it will cost the Treasury a considerable amount of money. I shall explain section 2 first, because it is the simplest one to explain. It will increase by 20 percent the pensions and compensation of all veterans of World War I and World War II. There is a companion bill, which we shall reach shortly. It is Calendar No. 1847, I believe, which would provide increased pensions for Spanish-American War veterans. This bill applies to veterans of World War I and World War II.

As I have said, section 2 increases the compensation of such veterans by 20 percent, and it is estimated to cost, in the year 1947, $285,000,000. Section 2 will cost that amount of money.

As to section 1, let me say that under the present law if a veteran goes to a hospital and is without dependents—either dependent children or a wife or dependent parents—if he is suffering from a service-connected military disability he will receive only $20 of his disability pay, regardless of what the amount may be. Twenty dollars is the maximum amount which such a veteran may receive while in a hospital. If he is suffering from a non-service-connection disability, the ceiling is $8.

Under the provisions of this bill the limit would be $30, or 50 percent of whatever the disability allowance may be.

Another provision authorizes lump-sum payment if the veteran is discharged from the hospital. Another provision would prohibit any deduction until the veteran had been in the hospital for 6 months. If the veteran is in the hospital for the first 6 months he will receive all of his allowances. At the end of 6 months the limitation will go into effect.

Mr. President, I hope the objection to consideration of the bill will not be pressed. I think enactment of the bill is extremely important, and I believe it to be extremely fair and equitable. It was passed by the House, and it has been approved by the Senate Finance Committee. In the committee we went into the bill rather carefully.

So I hope the objection will be withdrawn.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I simply wish to add that I hope the bill will be passed. The Senator from Colorado and the other members of the committee have given a great deal of time and thought and study to the bill. It has been prepared with great care, and it has been gone over carefully, with special consideration to the rights of the veterans and the rights of the taxpayers.

I think the bill is an excellent one and I think it is excellently worked out. It will be a great disappointment to the veterans if the bill is not passed at this session.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I thank the Senator for his statement.

The veterans' organization have been very zealous for some time in urging passage of the bill. They have made a long study of the problem, and they know, because of the rising cost of living, how very necessary it is that some of these very low pensions be increased by at least 20 percent.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I simply wish to emphasize the point the Senator from Colorado has just made, namely, that in view of the rise in the cost of living, it seems obvious that a 20-percent increase in compensation to veterans is not out of line. As a matter of fact, it is conservative, being less than the increase which has occurred in the cost of living.

Certainly, it seems to me, insofar as section 1 is concerned, under present conditions we should be willing to increase the amount of money veterans may receive when they are hospitalized.

I certainly hope that the Senator from Minnesota will feel that he can withdraw his objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President——

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. What is the cost of this bill, per annum?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The cost of section 2 of the bill is $285,000,000 for the year 1947.

Mr. TAFT. Will the cost gradually increase hereafter? I assume that it will.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Of course, if new pensions are allowed and if additional compensation is allowed, there might be an increase in the cost. However, the death rate among veterans receiving such compensation is rather high. So I should be inclined to think the cost now stated for 1947 will be close to the maximum cost. Section 1 of the bill would cost a little more than $13,000,000.

Mr. TAFT. The two sections together will cost approximately $300,000,000 a year now, and that cost will gradually increase as time passes; will it not?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The two together will cost very nearly $300,000,000 annually, but I cannot agree with the Senator that the cost will continue to increase. However, if the high cost of living continues to increase, we should really do something worth while for the men who served and suffered in their service. We will have to increase their compensation so that they will have sufficient to cover their living expenses. I remind the Senator that there are men who are receiving as little as $11.50 in compensation each month. Certainly, a 20 percent increase in that amount will not be very much of an increase.

Mr. BALL. How much will the 20 percent increase the present allowance for total disability?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The disability allowances range from $11.50 to a total maximum of $300 a month. The total maximum is for blindness, amputations, and other total disabilities of that nature. Three hundred dollars is not too much in cases of that kind.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks a table showing the present rates of compensation, ranging from $11.50 to $300 a month.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Comparison of rates for wartime and peacetime service-connected disabilities with rates proposed in H. R. 3908, 79th Cong.—Con.

(n) Anatomical loss of two extremities so near shoulder or hip as to prevent use of prosthetic appliance, or suffered anatomical loss of both eyes, monthly pension	$265.00
(o) Suffered disability under conditions which would entitle him to 2 or more rates in (l) to (n), no condition being considered twice, or suffered total deafness in combination with total blindness with 5/200 visual acuity or less, monthly pension	300.00
(p) In event disabled person's service incurred disabilities exceed requirements for any of rates prescribed, Administrator, in his discretion, may allow next higher rate, or intermediate rate, but in no event in excess of	300.00

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, does this bill apply only to the allowances made to veterans who may have service-connected disabilities?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. No. It applies to all veterans of World War I and World War II who receive pensions or compensation. Section 2 (C) of the bill applies to both service-connected disability and disability nonconnected with military service.

Mr. WALSH. And it includes dependents.

Mr. BALL. What about the cost under section 2 of the bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The cost under section 2 of the bill will be the greatest.

Mr. BALL. Does the bill apply to allowances only to disabled veterans?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. BALL. Does it cover service-connected disabilities only?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The veteran must already be receiving disability payments. The bill does not extend the disability laws of the Government, or change them. Persons coming under the bill must have a disability before the 20 percent increase would become effective.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, according to the explanation given by the Senator from Colorado, the bill would provide for the payment of $300,000,000; but I shall not object.

Mr. LANGER. Would the bill permit an increase to be granted to the young men who are attending college?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The bill provides for an increase of 20 percent in the present disability payments and pensions. The bill does not provide for any bonus for any college students.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks a description of the bill.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RÉSUMÉ OF H. R. 6811

Section 1 provides that veterans having neither wife, child, nor dependent parent, who is being furnished hospital treatment, institutional, or domiciliary care by the Veterans' Administration that any pension, compensation, or retirement pay otherwise payable shall continue without reduction under the following conditions:

1. Will draw full compensation or pension until the first day of seventh month after date of approval of act or date of admission, whichever date is later.

2. After first date of seventh month if he receives over $30 payment, the payment will be reduced by 50 percent but not less than $30.

3. If the veteran is discharged from hospital on medical advice, a lump-sum payment of the money withheld will be made.

4. If the veteran leaves hospital against medical advice, lump-sum payment of money withheld will be deferred for 6 months. If upon subsequent readmission to hospital payment will be reduced effective on date of admission (not wait 6 months). If discharged upon medical advice veteran will receive full sum in lump payment.

5. In case of death provision is made for lump-sum payment to certain relatives, namely, widow, child, father, mother, brother, sister, etc. If no such person exists to receive the lump-sum payment there may be paid only so much of the lump sum as may be necessary to reimburse the person who bore the expense of last sickness or burial. Claims for payment of lump sum must be made within 5 years after death except in case where claimant be under legal disability at time of death of veteran.

6. In the case of incompetent veterans, payments are subject to same provisions as in the case of the competent veterans except that:

(a) No lump-sum payment will be authorized until after the expiration of 6 months following a finding of competency.

(b) There is retained limitation under existing law that where the estate of an insane veteran derived from any source equals or exceeds $1,500, further payments will not be made until estate is reduced to $500.

(c) At the discretion of the Administrator, payment can be made to the chief officer of institution where veteran is maintained for use of veteran and proper accounting made, or can be paid to the guardian.

7. Existing laws pertaining to apportionate pension of a veteran while being hospitalized are retained in this bill.

Section 2 authorizes an increase of 20 percent of all monthly rates of compensation and pension payable to veterans of World Wars I and II and the dependents of such veterans, which are payable under laws or regulations administered by the Veterans' Administration. This increase does not apply to subsistence allowance under Public Law No. 16 or Public Law No. 346, as amended (GI bill), nor does it apply to retirement pay.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6811), which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 2, line 19, after the word "termination," to insert "or in the event of his prior death, as provided in paragraph (2) hereof;" on the same page, in line 21, after the words "pay of" to strike out "such" and insert "any"; on the same page in line 22, after the word "veteran" to insert "leaving against medical advice or as the result of disciplinary action"; and on the same page, in line 23, after the word "upon" to strike out "any future" and insert "a succeeding."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, in line 17, after the words "shall be" to strike out "deemed by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to be insane" and insert "rated by the Veterans' Administration in accordance with regulations as being incompetent by reason of mental illness."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, in line 1, after the word "such" to strike out "insane" and insert "incompetent"; on the same page, in line 6, after the words "of any" to strike out "such" and insert "incompetent"; on the same page, in line 10, after the words "veteran is" to strike out "maintained" and insert "hospitalized."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 14, to insert the following:

(F) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section or any other provision of law, no reduction shall be made in the pension, compensation, or retirement pay of any veteran for any part of the period during which he is furnished hospital treatment, or institutional or domiciliary care, for Hansen's disease, by the United States or any political subdivision thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on the same page, in line 22, to strike out "(F)" and insert "(G)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I wish to ask the majority leader what are his intentions with respect to continuing to call the calendar after the conclusion of the morning hour.

Mr. BARKLEY. I shall ask unanimous consent that the call of the calendar be continued until concluded.

Mr. WHERRY. Very well.

RUSSELL-MAJORS-WADDELL NATIONAL MONUMENT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 147) to provide for the establishment of the Russell-Majors-Waddell National Monument which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, with an amendment on page 1, in line 6, after the words "firm of", to strike out "Russel" and insert "Russell-"; on page 2, in line 7, after the words "constitute the", to strike out "Russel" and insert "Russell-"; on the same page, in line 20, after the words "firm of", to strike out "Russel" and insert "Russell-"; and on page 3, at the beginning of line 2, to strike out "Russel" and insert "Russell-", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to acquire, on behalf of the United States, by gift or purchase, the site of the home of Alexander Majors and corral for mules and oxen used by the firm of Russell-Majors-Waddell near Eighty-fifth and State Line Road in Jackson County, Mo., and Johnson County, Kans., together with such land or interests in land and any improvements thereon, as the Secretary may deem necessary to carry out the purposes of this act. In the event the Secretary is unable to acquire such property, or any part thereof, at a reasonable price, he is authorized and directed to condemn such property, or any part thereof, in the manner provided by law.

SEC. 2. The property acquired under the provisions of section 1 of this act shall constitute the Russell-Majors-Waddell National Monument and shall be a public national memorial to said firm and the members thereof.

The Director of the National Park Service, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, shall have supervision, management, and control of such national monument, and shall maintain and preserve it in a suitable and enduring manner which, in his judgment, will provide for the benefit and enjoyment of the people of the United States.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to—

(1) Maintain, either in an existing structure acquired under the provisions of section 1 of this act or in a building constructed by him for the purpose, a museum for relics and records pertaining to the firm of Russell-Majors-Waddell and members thereof, and for other articles of national and patriotic interest, and to accept on behalf of the United States, for installation in such museum, articles which may be offered as additions to the museum; and

(2) Construct roads and mark with monuments, tablets, or otherwise, points of interest within the boundaries of said Russell-Majors-Waddell National Monument.

SEC. 4. There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the establishment of the Russell-Majors-Waddell National Monument."

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, what is the calendar number of this bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Calendar No. 1781.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I shall not exercise my right to object to this bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. I was about to ask the author of the bill to explain it, but he is not present.

AMENDMENT OF DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE ORGANIC ACT OF 1944

The bill (S. 2404) to amend section 502 (a) of the Department of Agriculture Organic Act of 1944 was announced as next in order.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, this bill affects three cities in the Tennessee Valley area. Under present law, cities may not borrow money from the TVA Authority Fund with which to extend their lines into rural areas. This bill merely gives such power to three towns in that area. It affects the towns of Athens, Ala., Sheffield, Ala., and Bolivar, Tenn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 2404) to amend section 502 (a) of the Department of Agriculture Organic Act of 1944 was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 502 (a) of the Department of Agriculture Organic Act of 1944 (Public Law 425, 78th Cong., 58 Stat. 739, 740), as amended by Public Law 563, Seventy-eighth Congress (58 Stat. 925), is further amended by inserting after the words "to cooperative associations" the words "and municipalities", and by inserting after the words "said cooperative associations" a comma and the words "and municipalities to the extent that such indebtedness was incurred with respect to electric transmission and distribution lines or systems or portions thereof serving persons in rural areas."

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 6097) to amend the act of March 10, 1934, entitled "An act to promote the conservation of wildlife, fish, and game, and for other purposes," was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERTON. Over.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, if my able colleague and most agreeable seat mate will withhold his objection, I should like to make a brief statement with regard to this bill.

It is sponsored by the Izaak Walton League of America. It came before the Senate on a former occasion and objections were made to it. The bill was recommitted to the committee, and hearings were held. During the holding of the hearings testimony was heard from the Chief of Engineers, General Wheeler. After hearing the testimony of General Wheeler, the committee made some amendments to the bill. The committee agreed on some amendments which it thought would prevent future objection. For example, on page 7 of the bill, in its original text, the War Department was directed to give full consideration to the needs of fish and wildlife resources. The committee struck out the words "and directed" so that the language now reads, in part, "that Department is hereby authorized to give full consideration and recognition to the needs of fish and other wildlife resources," and so forth.

Further down on the same page the committee inserted, in line 6, new language as follows: "with due respect to the needs of navigation and flood control". That language means that the Chief of Engineers is authorized to give due respect to the needs of navigation and flood control but does not direct him to do so. The Chief of Engineers thought that with these amendments in the bill the Department would not object to it.

Mr. President, I hope that the bill will be passed, because it is one which is being supported by sportsmen and Izaak Walton League members throughout the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. OVERTON. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, is there any particular part of the bill to which the Senator objects?

Mr. OVERTON. My objection to it is that it is not possible to regulate dams and reservoirs under such a method as is proposed in the bill. The amendment adopted provided that it should not interfere with the regulation of dams for navigation and flood-control purposes. The multiple-purpose dams are created for purposes other than navigation and flood control. For instance, that is true of the Snake River and Columbia River developments, in the latter of which the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CORDON], who I see on his feet, is interested. Those dams could not be operated and maintained at uniform levels without considerable loss of other benefits on the projects. It is imposible to operate dams in that manner.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield.

Mr. CORDON. Would the Senator's objection be removed if a motion were made that all of section 7 be eliminated from the bill? Personally, I think it would be a better bill without that section.

Mr. OVERTON. I should have no objection if all of section 7 were eliminated, and were not restored in conference between the two Houses.

Mr. CORDON. I doubt if that could be done now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the call of the calendar under the rule is ended.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed with the call of the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Under the rule under which the Senate is now proceeding, there will not be time for any extended debate. I should regret very much if section 7 were eliminated, but I doubt if the bill can be passed, with the present sentiment obtaining in the Senate, without eliminating the section. I regret that very much, but there is no chance to debate it and have it go back to the House and be passed at this session.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, if there is no objection, I move that the bill be amended by striking out all of section 7.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I suggest that the bill be further amended by renumbering the sections. If one section is stricken out, it will be necessary to renumber the other sections.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection the clerk will renumber the sections.

The question is on the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

COLUMBIA RIVER BRIDGE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2358) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act approved June 13, 1934, as amended, and heretofore extended by acts of Congress approved August 30, 1935; January 27, 1936; August 5, 1937; May 26, 1938; August 5, 1939; December 6, 1940; July 14, 1941; May 3, 1943, and July 16, 1945, authorizing the Oregon-Washington Bridge Board of Trustees to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Columbia River at Astoria, Clatsop County, Oreg., be, and is hereby, revived and reenacted: Provided, That this act shall be null and void unless the actual construction of the bridge referred to be commenced within 1 year and completed within 3 years from the date of approval hereof.

SEC. 2. The first section of the act approved June 13, 1934, as amended, is further amended (1) by striking out the words "and L. D. Williams, chairman of the Board of County Commissioners of Pacific County, Wash., and his successors in office, or the chairman of the Board of County Commissioners of Wahkiakum County, Wash., and his successors in office" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "L. D. Williams, chairman of the Board of County Commissioners of Pacific County, Wash., and his successors in office, or the chairman of the Board of County Commissioners of Wahkiakum County, Wash., and his successors in office, the chairman of the State Highway Commission of the State of Oregon, and his successors in office, and the acting director of the Department of Highways of the State of Washington, and his successors in office"; and (2) by striking out the words "in trust for Clatsop County, Oreg., Pacific County, or Wahkiakum County, Wash., and the city of Astoria, Oreg." and inserting in lieu thereof the words "in trust for Clatsop County, Oreg., Pacific County, or Wahkiakum County, Wash., the city of Astoria, Oreg., the State of Oregon, and the State of Washington."

SEC. 3. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, I move that the bill be amended on page 1, line 6, after the name "December", to strike out "6" and insert "16", so that it will read "December 16", instead of "December 6."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REORGANIZATION OF FOREIGN SERVICE OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I now call the attention of the Senator from Texas to calendar 1760, Senate bill 2451, to which he asked a moment ago that we revert. I have contacted the able Senator from West Virginia [Mr. REVERCOMB] on the subject. He complained chiefly because the bill was of such length and complexity that he felt we should not pass it on a mere call of the calendar. But I have discussed with him the importance of action, particularly in view of the fact that the House has acted, and he is prepared to withdraw his objection. I suggest, therefore, that we proceed with action on the House bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator very much. I do not see the Senator from West Virginia present.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am authorized to speak for him.

Mr. CONNALLY. Then I ask unanimous consent that the Senate revert to Calendar 1805, House bill 6967.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection the bill (H. R. 6967) to improve, strengthen, and expand the Foreign Service of the United States and to consolidate and revise the laws relating to its administration was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection Senate bill 2451 will be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. REVERCOMB subsequently said: Mr. President, I understand that Senate bill 2451, Calendar 1760, was passed over temporarily.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill was passed over temporarily.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I understand it was passed over, and subsequently passed.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] assured us that the Senator from West Virginia would have no further objection.

Mr. REVERCOMB. That is correct; but I desire to make a statement at this time. As I said before, the bill, which deals with the reorganization of the Foreign Service is an extensive bill of some 106 pages. I asked that it go over temporarily at the time that I made the objection to the bill so that it might be further considered by Senators. I have talked to members of the Foreign Relations Committee and they advise me of the necessity of immediate passage of the bill. Relying, as I feel justified in doing, on able committee members, I withdrew my objection to consideration of the bill. I feel, however, Mr. President, that it is not the best way to legislate, particularly on so important a subject as this. In this instance, because of the importance of enactment of the measure and the apparent need of prompt enactment, I have withdrawn my objection to the bill, and the bill has been passed.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator from West Virginia very much for his explanation.

PROTECTION OF SHORES OF PUBLICLY OWNED PROPERTY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2033) authorizing Federal participation in the cost of protecting the shores of publicly owned property, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment of the committee was on page 1, after the word "cost," to insert a proviso as follows: "Provided further, That where a political subdivision has heretofore erected a sea wall to prevent erosion, by waves and currents, to a public highway considered by the Chief of Engineers sufficiently important to justify protection, Federal contribution toward the repair of such wall and the protection thereof by the building of an artificial beach is authorized at not to exceed one-third of the original cost of such wall, and that investigations and studies hereinafter provided for are hereby authorized for such localities."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will not the Senator from Louisiana explain the bill? I had understood a general beach erosion study was being made.

Mr. OVERTON. Such a study is being made. A beach erosion board has been created, but the purpose of this bill is to give some relief to certain portions of beaches which have been eroded. It relates to cases where public property is involved, and where the State or local community has put up two-thirds and the Federal contribution will be only one-third. That is the main purpose of the bill. There are not many cases to which the bill will be applicable. It will apply only where there is involved public property which has to be protected.

There is an amendment to the bill which applies to a public highway which has been protected by the construction of a sea wall, and further protection is required.

Mr. TAFT. I notice that the War Department says in its report that the proposal is not in accord with the program of the President.

Mr. OVERTON. Perhaps they do say that; I do not recall.

Mr. TAFT. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is heard.

Mr. OVERTON. I think the people on the lake shores are very much interested in the bill. I hope the Senator will give it further consideration.

Mr. TAFT. I shall be glad to go over it.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Ohio can see his way clear to withdraw his objection. The people of New Jersey are very much affected by the bill, and they have asked that it be passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio withdraw his objection?

Mr. TAFT. No, I insist on it temporarily.

Mr. OVERTON. If this legislation had been in force heretofore, the bill in which the Senator was interested a year or so ago would have been passed.

Mr. TAFT. I do not think it would have applied to that.

Mr. OVERTON. I think it would have.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being heard, the bill will be passed over.

Mr. TAFT subsequently said: Mr. President, some time ago I objected when Calendar 1785, H. R. 2033, was reached. I have read the report and desire to withdraw my objection. I will say to the Senator, however, that the bill applies only to publicly owned property, to a very small proportion of the coast line. It would not cover the particular part of the coast to which the Senator from Louisiana referred. I rather believe, however, that the policy of the Federal Government participating in improving State-owned property will be extended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2033) authorizing Federal participation in the cost of protecting the shores of publicly owned property, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 1, line 12, after the word "cost", to insert: "Provided further, That where a political subdivision has heretofore erected a seawall to prevent erosion, by waves and currents, to a public highway considered by the Chief of Engineers sufficiently important to justify protection, Federal contribution toward the repair of such wall and the protection thereof by the building of an artificial beach is authorized at not to exceed one-third of the original cost of such wall, and that investigations and studies hereinafter provided for are hereby authorized for such localities."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 1, after the word "specifications", to insert a colon and the following:

Provided, That the construction of improvement and protective works may be undertaken by the Chief of Engineers upon the request of, and contribution of required funds by, the interested State, municipality, or other political subdivision.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 3, line 8, before the word "estuaries", to insert "lakes,".

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill (H. R. 2033) was read the third time and passed.

PREFERENCE FOR VETERANS IN ACQUIRING VESSELS

The bill (H. R. 4842) to amend the act of April 29, 1943, so as to afford a preference for veterans in acquiring certain vessels was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUSQUEHANNA RIVER BRIDGE

The bill (H. R. 5537) granting consent of Congress to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania to construct a highway bridge across the Susquehanna River was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONVEYANCE TO IPSWICH, MASS., OF LIGHTHOUSE PROPERTY

The bill (H. R. 5932) providing for the conveyance to the town of Ipswich, in the State of Massachusetts, of lighthouse property at Castle Neck, for public use, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONVEYANCE TO ATLANTIC CITY OF LIGHTHOUSE PROPERTY

The bill (H. R. 6023) providing for the conveyance to the city of Atlantic City, in the State of New Jersey, of lighthouse property at Atlantic City for public use was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INTERCHANGE OF PROPERTY BETWEEN ARMY AND NAVY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6057) to amend the act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat. 132), relating to the interchange of property between the Army and the Navy so as to include the Coast Guard within its provisions.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, for some reason or other the Navy Department objects to the bill. Let me ask the Senator to let it be passed over temporarily until I can find out what the objection is.

Mr. OVERTON. I was not aware of their objecting to the bill. It seems to me it was an oversight to pass the original statute permitting the interchange of property between the Army and the Navy and omitting the Coast Guard. Perhaps it was because the Coast Guard in the meantime had gone under the jurisdiction of the Treasury Department. I did not know of any objection by the Navy Department.

Mr. WALSH. I was apprised of it this morning. I suggest that the bill be passed over for the time being, and I shall take the matter up with the Navy Department.

Mr. OVERTON. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over temporarily.

TUG FORK BRIDGE, KENTUCKY AND WEST VIRGINIA

The bill (H. R. 6223) to authorize the highway departments of the States of Kentucky and West Virginia to construct a bridge across Tug Fork was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INCREASE OF EFFICIENCY OF COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY

The bill (H. R. 6644) to increase the efficiency of the Coast and Geodetic Survey was announced as next in order.

Mr. HART. Over.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Mr. President, was there objection to consideration of the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut objected.

Mr. HART. I have to object to the bill. The title of the bill is "To increase the efficiency of the Coast and Geodetic Survey." In my estimation the most important feature of the bill will decrease their efficiency. The law governing promotions would be decidedly changed. The current law governing promotions in the grades of captain and commander provides for such promotions by selection upward. The proposed bill would change that so as to make the promotions really made by seniority, rather than by selection. The Coast and Geodetic Survey has been following the Navy's methods, and in my estimation such a departure should not now be made.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Connecticut will not press his objections. There is no reason why the officers of the Coast and Geodetic Survey should not be on the same basis as officers in the Army, Navy, and Coast Guard. This bill has been studied very carefully by the House, was passed by that body, and was considered carefully in the Commerce Committee of the Senate. It does nothing more than to seek equality. It is unreasonable to expect that officers in the Coast and Geodetic Survey should not have the same opportunity for promotion, advancement, and compensation, and the same facilities as are generally accorded to those in certain other branches. It is my impression that all the bill does is to put them on an equal basis with the others referred to.

Mr. HART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RADCLIFFE. I yield.

Mr. HART. That is the point, I will say to the Senator from Maryland, that the bill changes that relationship very materially. The officers now seem to be on exactly the same footing in promotions as the officers of the Navy. This bill would change that situation very materially by making the system one of promotion by seniority rather than by election upward.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. The basis provided by the bill is one which is customary. There was no objection raised in the Commerce Committee, as I recall, and none in the House of Representatives. I hope the Senator will not feel that he is obliged to press his objection.

Mr. HART. Mr. President, I shall object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being heard, the bill is passed over.

ERADICATION OF PREDATORY SEA LAMPREYS OF THE GREAT LAKES

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 366) authorizing and directing the Director of the Fish and Wildlife Service of the Department of the Interior to investigate and eradicate the predatory sea lampreys of the Great Lakes was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GRANTING OF CERTAIN PROPERTY TO COMMONWEALTH OF PENNSYLVANIA

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 370) granting certain property to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and relinquishing jurisdiction therein was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TRUST ASSOCIATION OF H. KEMPNER

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 334) for the relief of the Trust Association of H. Kempner, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance, with amendments, on page 2, line 6, after the word "The", to strike out "Secretary of the Treasury" and insert "Alien Property Custodian"; and in line 18, after the words "to be", to strike out "Trust Association of H. Kempner" and insert "Secretary of the Treasury", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims (a) to hear the claims of the Trust Association of H. Kempner, of Galveston, Tex., against the Government of Germany and nationals of Germany for reimbursement for losses alleged to have been sustained as a result of the sale of certain cotton by such trust association to certain mills in Germany during the years 1928 and 1924, and to determine the amounts of any such losses, and (b) to determine the total of the various amounts wrongfully paid out of the Trust of Germann & Co. while its property was being administered by the Alien Property Custodian.

SEC. 2. The Alien Property Custodian is authorized and directed (a) to credit the Trust of Germann & Co. with an amount equal to any amounts found by the Court of Claims under clause (b) of the first section of this act to have been wrongfully paid out of such trust, and to charge such sum against the German special-deposit account, created by section 4 of the Settlement of War Claims Act of 1928, or against any other funds or property of the Government of Germany or of nationals of Germany in the possession or under the control of the Government of the United States or which may hereafter come into the possession or under the control of the Government of the United States, and (b) to pay, to the Secretary of the Treasury, out of such special-deposit account or such other funds, the amount so credited to the Trust of Germann & Co. and so charged against such special-deposit account or such other funds, or so much thereof as does not exceed the amount of any losses found by the Court of Claims under clause (a) of the first section of this act to have been sustained by the Trust Association of H. Kempner: Provided, That such payment shall not be made unless and until such trust association executes and delivers to the said Trust of Germann & Co. a complete assignment of all claims and demands of the said Trust Association of H. Kempner against the Government of Germany and nationals of Germany arising out of the sale of such cotton during the years 1923 and 1924.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, in line 17, after (b) it is proposed to insert "The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EMERGENCY RELIEF FOR CERTAIN CITIZENS OF HAWAII

The bill (H. R. 6918) to provide emergency relief for the victims of the seismic waves which struck the Territory of Hawaii, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

ACQUISITION OF CERTAIN LANDS AT HILO, HAWAII

The bill (H. R. 6610) to waive certain restrictions of the Hawaiian Organic Act relating to land exchanges, for the acquisition of certain lands at Hilo, Hawaii, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF HAWAIIAN ORGANIC ACT

The bill (H. R. 3361) to amend paragraph (1) of section 73 of the Hawaiian Organic Act, as amended, was announced as next in order.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], were the subcommittee which looked into this matter. The Senator from West Virginia will remember that the Senator from Maine very recently returned from the Hawaiian Islands and heartily approved all three bills dealing with the Hawaiian Islands.

Mr. REVERCOMB. What would the bill provide with respect to the Hawaiian Organic Act? How would it amend that act in any particular?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, if the Senator from Arizona will permit me——

Mr. HAYDEN. Certainly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator will find on page 2 of the report, which is a reprint of the House report, the following:

The bill is the outcome of a situation that exists as a direct result of the war.

The Territory of Hawaii, acting under authority of the organic act, sold a piece of land in the industrial area of Honolulu to one of the large canning companies under the conditions that within a specified period a warehouse would be constructed on this property. The company fully intended to carry out this condition of purchase but was prevented from doing so by the outbreak of war. The land was taken over by the United States Navy for storage space and, in consequence of this and conditions resulting from the war, the company was unable to proceed with the construction of the warehouse.

The enactment of this legislation would protect purchasers in their title to lands in purchases of this kind and would moreover assure the Territory that the conditions of the sale would be carried out in the proper time.

The legislation has the approval of the administrative officials of the Territory of Hawaii.

It is recommended with the amendments, by the Acting Secretary of the Interior, in a letter dated December 14, 1945, addressed to the chairman of the Committee on the Territories.

It is my understanding that the House bill does contain the amendments recommended by the Secretary of the Interior.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 3361) to amend paragraph (1) of section 73 of the Hawaiian Organic Act, as amended, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONAL COMMISSIONED OFFICERS

The bill (H. R. 6817) to provide for the appointment of additional commissioned officers in the Regular Army, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, this is a vitally important bill. It is thoroughly consistent with the last action which Congress took with regard to the size of the Army. It will be necessary for the Army to expand its officer personnel in order to meet the requirements of the law as it is. Without this measure the Army would be held back several months in obtaining the number of officers required. The bill has passed the House and was reported unanimously by the Senate Committee on Military Affairs. It has of course not only the hearty recommendation of the War Department and General Eisenhower, but word coming from the Army officials is that without it the whole progress of reorganizing the new Army would be stymied.

Mr. FERGUSON. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment on page 2, line 1, to strike out:

(c) Section 8 of the said act is amended by deleting therefrom the words "one thousand and fifty-four" and substituting therefor the words "two thousand one hundred and eight."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill (H. R. 6817) was read the third time and passed.

DEVELOPMENT OF GEORGE WASHINGTON MEMORIAL PARKWAY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2286) to amend the act entitled "An act for the acquisition, establishment, and development of the George Washington Memorial Parkway along the Potomac from Mount Vernon and Fort Washington to the Great Falls, and to provide for the acquisition of lands in the District of Columbia and the States of Maryland and Virginia requisite to the comprehensive park, parkway, and playground system of the National Capital," approved May 29, 1930, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, at the end of the bill to insert a new section 3, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section (a) of the act entitled "An act for the acquisition, establishment, and development of the George Washington Memorial Parkway along the Potomac from Mount Vernon and Fort Washington to the Great Falls, and to provide for the acquisition of lands in the District of Columbia and the States of Maryland and Virginia requisite to the comprehensive park, parkway, and playground system of the National Capital," approved May 29, 1930 (46 Stat. 482), is amended by striking out the third proviso and by striking out of the fourth proviso the words "and the construction of said roads."

SEC. 2. Section 1 (b) of such act is amended by striking out the last sentence thereof.

SEC. 3. So much of section 1 (b) of such act as precedes the first proviso thereof is amended to read as follows:

"(b) For the extension of Rock Creek Park into Maryland, as may be agreed upon between the National Capital Park and Planning Commission and the Maryland National Capital Park and Planning Commission, for the preservation of the flow of water in Rock Creek, for the extension of the Anacostia Park system up the valley of the Anacostia River, Indian Creek, Paint Branch and Little Paint Branch, the Northwest Branch and Sligo Creek; of the Oxon Run Parkway from the District of Columbia line to Marlboro Road; and of the George Washington Memorial Parkway up the valley of Cabin John Creek, Little Falls Branch, and Willet Run, as may be agreed upon between the National Capital Park and Planning Commission and the Maryland National Capital Park and Planning Commission, $1,500,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. GREEN. The Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS] is temporarily absent from the Senate Chamber. I shall be glad to answer any questions I can.

Mr. CORDON. I am particularly interested in knowing what is stricken out by section 1 of the bill?

Mr. GREEN. The bill is now a consolidation of two bills, one having the same number, S. 2286, and the other being S. 2402. The language is simplified and combined. That is the reason for the new language in italics, in the committee amendment.

Mr. CORDON. I am unable to understand what is intended to be meant by a provision striking from the third proviso and from the fourth proviso the words "and the construction of said roads." What was intended to be changed by that language, if the Senator can advise us? I am reading from lines 6, 7 and 8, on page 2.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I am not a member of the committee, but the report seems to indicate that when the act was originally passed it prohibited the use of Federal moneys for highway construction, or Federal aid for highway construction, on the Virginia side, but permitted it on the Maryland side. These amendments are designed to make possible the expenditure of Federal aid funds on both sides of the river. Is that correct?

Mr. GREEN. The Senator from Wisconsin is correct. For some reason which we find it impossible to discover there was a distinction made between the lands for the George Washington Memorial Parkway on the Virginia side and the lands on the Maryland side. This bill does away with the discrimination, and makes it possible for lands on both sides to be used under the same terms, for the same highway. There is no reason for the distinction.

Mr. CORDON. I have no objection to the bill.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. As I understand this bill, it does nothing more than to place Maryland and Virginia on an equality with each other?

Mr. GREEN. It raises Maryland to equality with Virginia in this particular.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. We in Maryland claim equality and even superiority in some respects now, but we like to see that equality maintained in each and every nook and corner.

Mr. GREEN. This bill simply provides for equality in one particular.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 (a) of the act entitled "An act for the acquisition, establishment, and development of the George Washington Memorial Parkway along the Potomac from Mount Vernon and Fort Washington to the Great Falls, and to provide for the acquisition of lands in the District of Columbia and the States of Maryland and Virginia requisite to the comprehensive park, parkway, and playground system of the National Capital," approved May 29, 1930 (46 Stat. 482), is amended by striking out the third proviso and by striking out of the fourth proviso the words "and the construction of said roads."

SEC. 2. Section 1 (b) of such act is amended by striking out the last sentence thereof.

SEC. 3. So much of section 1 (b) of such act as precedes the first proviso thereof is amended to read as follows:

"(b) For the extension of Rock Creek Park into Maryland, as may be agreed upon between the National Capital Park and Planning Commission and the Maryland National Capital Park and Planning Commission, for the preservation of the flow of water in Rock Creek, for the extension of the Anacostia Park system up the valley of the Anacostia River, Indian Creek, Paint Branch and Little Paint Branch, the Northwest Branch and Sligo Creek; of the Oxon Run Parkway from the District of Columbia line to Marlboro Road; and of the George Washington Memorial Parkway up the valley of Cabin John Creek, Little Falls Branch, and Willet Run, as may be agreed upon between the National Capital Park and Planning Commission and the Maryland National Capital Park and Planning Commission, $1,500,000."

ELIMINATION AND RETIREMENT OF REGULAR ARMY OFFICERS, ETC.

The bill (S. 1974) to provide for the selection for elimination and retirement of officers of the Regular Army for the equalization of retirement benefits for members of the Army of the United States and for other purposes was announced as next in order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Let the bill go over.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado objected. Does the Senator withdraw his objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I withhold my objection temporarily, but I shall still object to it.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Colorado will withdraw his objection so that this bill may be passed. The House has passed House bill 7063, Calendar No. 1899, a bill to provide for the selection for elimination and retirement of officers of the Regular Army. The bill under discussion includes the National Guard, Reserve officers, and Reserve enlisted personnel. I believe that the only way we can reach a solution in these late days of the session is to have the bill sent to conference, so that we may meet with the House conferees and see if we cannot arrive at something tangible for the good of the Army.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, that is the very reason I have objected to Senate bill 1974. I am afraid it will go to conference, and that the House version will be adopted. The language of Senate bill 1974 as it came to the committee is satisfactory; but if the bill were to go to conference and the House version were adopted, as I am afraid it would be, I do not know of any way it could be stopped when a report from the conferees came before the Senate.

The House bill on this subject opens the door for all sorts of things. If the Senate wishes to be high-pressured, Senators will learn what high pressure really means if the House version is adopted. That is the reason why I am objecting. If I thought that Senate bill 1974 could be approved as it came from the committee, I certainly would not object to it. But my understanding is that a majority of the members of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs are very anxious to have Senate bill 1974 go to conference, and then adopt the House version. The House version is totally unacceptable.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I hope that in the closing days of the Congress the Senate will either send this bill to conference or have a vote on the House bill. The Senator from Colorado well knows that I believe in the House version. I believe in the Senate bill as it was originally introduced. So far as high pressure is concerned, I have been a Member of the Senate for 6 years, and every day there is a new high pressure. It is about time to do something for the National Guard and the Reserve—those who made up not only the reserves of the Army but the reserves of the Navy, and who did a large share of the fighting in this war. So I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection and at least let the bill go to conference. After it comes back from conference we can decide what to do.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, I join the Senator from South Carolina in urging the earliest consideration of this bill. I hope that my able friend from Colorado will withdraw his objection and let the bill go to conference. I realize that the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate made changes and reported the bill to the Senate in its present form. I realize that the House bill is somewhat different. The purpose of the bill is to authorize the retirement of men no longer useful for the service, and to induce men, particularly Reserve officers in the National Guard, to go into active service and be ready for active service in the strong and effective army we are trying to build up for the future. I believe that the bill is very important in connection with building up a strong army, and because of its importance I hope it may be passed and go to conference. If the conferees fail to submit a satisfactory report, of course the Senate will not agree to the conference report. I should like to see the bill passed.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, the outstanding difference between the Senate bill and the House bill is this: The Senate bill provides for the future, and is a bill for incentive purposes, to help build up the Army of the United States and its reserve components. Members of the Senate committee objected to the Senate bill as originally introduced, and we have taken out of it practically all the features which have to do with the past. The bill as it stands is a bill to help the Army in the future. That is what the Army primarily wishes. That is what we hope we can get in the building up of the Army of the future. If the bill could be passed with the understanding that the Senate conferees would have to stand by the action of the Senate on the Senate bill, perhaps that would solve the difficulty. The conference could then be successful only if the Senate provisions were to prevail. That is about the only way I know of to bind our conferees.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. Does the Senator know the attitude of the War Department and the Chief of Staff with regard to these two bills?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. The general attitude is that the War Department would rather have the House bill as it is, because there are persons whom the War Department wishes to reward for past services.

Mr. AIKEN. What is the argument for the House bill? Does it take care of more deserving members of the reserve and the National Guard?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. That is true. Probably the Senator from South Carolina can answer the question better than I can.

Mr. AIKEN. What is the reason for opposing the Senate bill?

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, the House bill is the same as the bill which was originally introduced in the Senate. The Senate bill was changed by the committee. It is not an officers' bill. It takes in both enlisted men and officers. An agreement was arrived at after a period of several months. General Eisenhower agreed to it. General Paul agreed to it. All the high officials in the Army with whom I have spoken, and all the National Guard representatives and reserve officers, representatives whom I have consulted have told me that they agree to it. The President of the United States agreed to it.

Mr. AIKEN. As I understand, the House bill represents a meeting of the minds after months of difference.

Mr. MAYBANK. The House bill is the same as the Senate bill as originally introduced. The Senate bill has been amended by the committee.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, the Senator says that General Eisenhower agreed to the bill. I was told by General Collins that General Eisenhower was finally sold on the bill because it would help to build up the Army, the National Guard, and the Reserve Corps in the future. That is not the part to which the Senator from Colorado is objecting. What I am particularly objecting to is the handsome rewards proposed to be given for past services. The bill has two purposes. The first is to help build the Army for the future. I enthusiastically favor that part of the bill. However, the other part, to pay generous rewards for services which have been rendered, is the part to which I object. The part which I favor is the part which General Eisenhower favors.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. Does the bill reward members of the National Guard and Reserve officers more handsomely than members of the Regular Army are rewarded under existing laws and regulations?

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. The rewards to enlisted personnel of the Reserves and officers and enlisted personnel of the National Guard are in no way comparable to the rewards in the Regular Army. So far as gratuitous hand-outs are concerned, I would not support any such measure. The committee studied it for many months. Everyone knows what the National Guard did.

The former Governor of Vermont, the present junior Senator from Vermont [Mr AIKEN] well knows what the National Guard did. Every Senator knows what the National Guard has meant to this country both in time of war and in time of peace, and all of us know what the Reserves have meant to the country. But, of course, some people in the United States do not want the Reserves or the National Guard to get anything. I do not allude to my friend, because of course he is in favor of future payments.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I fail to see why the National Guard or the Reserves should not receive rewards in proportion to what the rewards would have been if the members of the National Guard had been members of the Regular Army.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, it seems to me that there is no objection to Senate bill 1974; but if a conference is held on the bill, I believe there will be some objection to the conference report.

Inasmuch as there is no objection to Senate bill 1974, I think we should pass it. Then, of course, the Senate conferees would urge the Senate bill in the conference, and if the conferees reported a measure which did not satisfactorily meet the views of the Senators who objected, we could decide on the floor of the Senate whether the conference report should be adopted. The conferees might report Senate bill 1974, which, as I understand, is not objected to by anyone.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I think the Senator's last statement is entirely correct, and I think we should emphasize that fact. The Senate bill has general support.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I favor the Senate bill as reported by the Committee on Military Affairs, but I do have apprehension about the House bill. In fact, I have apprehension as to what might happen if the bill went to conference at this time. I think the bill should go over until we can sit down and work out an arrangement whereby we can pass the Senate bill. So I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being heard, the bill will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 4982) to enable the Department of State more effectively to carry out its responsibilities in the foreign field by means of (a) public dissemination abroad of information about the United States, and so forth, was announced as next in order.

Mr. TAFT. Let the bill be passed over.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, before we proceed further, I should like to make an explanation. I feel sure that those who object to House bill 6967 have the same idea with respect to House bill 4982. The bill comes under the State Department's plan for reorganization, and it includes features which have to do with advertising, publicity, and the explaining of America's aims throughout the world.

Mr. President, the failure to pass the bill at this time will mean that we shall only half-heartedly enter into the great scheme of trying to make the world a world of peace.

This bill probably is as essential as any other bill we can think of. If we are to carry through the President's program and the State Department's program with regard to the activities of the State Department, I trust that Senators will withdraw their objections and will permit the bill to be considered and passed and become law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. TAFT. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being heard, the bill will be passed over.

ADDITIONAL INDUCEMENTS FOR CAREERS IN THE MILITARY OR NAVAL SERVICES

The bill (S. 2460) to provide additional inducements to citizens of the United States to make a career of the United States military or naval service, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I think both the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee and the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee should make explanations of the bill.

So far as the bill applies to the Navy, a bill S. 1438 was passed by the Senate some months ago, and went to the House of Representatives, where an amendment was attached. The amendment would give for enlistment in the Army the same inducements that were provided for enlistment in the Navy.

The amendment was added in an attempt to make the same conditions applicable to the Army. However, the amendment was poorly drawn. It was offered on the floor of the House.

When the bill came to the Senate, instead of accepting the Army amendment offered on the floor of the House, I sent it to the Committee on Military Affairs, for it to study and to report as to whether the amendment should be accepted or rejected. Unfortunately, the Army authorities took a long time to study and consider the bill. Due to the fact that the naval bill amended the Naval Reserve Act which the Navy has had for some time, and due to the fact that the Army had nothing comparable to the Naval Reserve, the Army authorities decided to attempt to set up some organization which would be comparable to what we know as our Fleet Naval Reserve. In any event, very recently the Army and the Navy have gotten together, so as to bring about the same conditions and the same privileges and the same rights in respect to that situation.

The bill is for the purpose of inducing enlistments. So far as I am able to speak for the Navy, the original bill was one of the most forward-looking bills that has ever been introduced, to invite young men to join the Navy, to give them a naval career, to provide for their advancement, and to provide for the granting of commissions. The bill has been very favorably received by the enlisted men of the Navy.

The original naval bill provided that at the end of 16 years the naval enlisted man could transfer to the Reserves and could be given a certain amount of pay on retirement. Unfortunately, that provision was not acceptable to the Army, as applied to it. The Army authorities thought 16 years would be too soon for men who had entered the Army to be transferred to a Reserve organization. So that feature has been eliminated—to my very great regret. I am hopeful that the 16-year provision may be restored later.

In order that legislation might be obtained at this session of the Congress I consented to the drafting of a new bill. The bill is most important and most desirable—in fact, the delay in obtaining action upon the measure has been detrimental to obtaining enlistments, for any young man who might have considered entering the naval service during the last number of months could not know under what conditions he would enter.

So it is essential that the bill be passed.

Mr. President, the Senator from Utah and I have agreed upon certain amendments which I am to offer, so as to make the bill conform to certain needs of the Navy which unintentionally were overlooked in drafting the substitute bill in the Military Affairs Committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 4, in line 7, after the word "be", to strike out "accounted" and insert "counted."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I now offer the amendments, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated. They merely seek to preserve existing rights.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3 in line 14, between the word "all" and the word "service", it is proposed to insert "active."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 4, in lines 12 and 13, it is proposed to strike out the following: "and if they shall have completed a total of 20 years or more of active service their pay shall be computed in the manner prescribed in section 204 of this act as amended."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 11, in line 13, following the word "Act", it is proposed to strike out the period, and to insert "except as otherwise provided in section 3."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 11, in line 16, following the word "Act" and the period, it is proposed to insert the following:

Retired enlisted personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps, personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps who are members of the Fleet Reserve or Fleet Marine Corps Reserve, and personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps who become eligible and who apply for transfer to the Fleet Reserve or Fleet Marine Corps Reserve shall receive an opportunity to elect to receive retained and retired pay under the provisions of this act or to receive such pay under the provisions of law in effect immediately prior to the date of enactment of this act, and these persons shall be entitled to receive the pay elected.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further amendments to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4 of the Naval Reserve Act of 1938 (52 Stat. 1176) is hereby amended by inserting after the words "insular possessions of the United States" a comma and the following: "including citizens of the Philippine Islands who are members of the naval service at the time independence of the Philippine Islands becomes effective."

SEC. 2. Section 204 of the Naval Reserve Act of 1938 (52 Stat. 1179) is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 204. Members of the Navy who first enlisted in the Navy after July 1, 1925, or who reenlisted therein after July 1, 1925, having been out of the Regular Navy for more than 3 months, may upon their own request be transferred to the Fleet Reserve upon the completion of at least 20 years' active Federal service. After such transfer, except when on active duty, they shall be paid at the annual rate of 2½ percent of the annual base and longevity pay they are receiving at the time of transfer multiplied by the number of years of active Federal service: Provided, That the pay authorized in this section shall be increased 10 percent for all men who may be credited with extraordinary heroism in the line of duty: Provided further, That the determination of the Secretary of the Navy as to the definition of extraordinary heroism shall be final and conclusive for all purposes: Provided further, That the pay authorized in this section shall not exceed 75 percent of the active-duty base and longevity pay they were receiving at the time of transfer: Provided further, That all enlisted men transferred to the Fleet Reserve in accordance with the provisions of this section and of sections 1 and 203 of this act shall, upon completion of 30 years' service, be transferred to the retired list of the Regular Navy, with the pay they were then legally entitled to receive: Provided further, That nothing contained within this section shall be construed to prevent persons who qualify for transfer to the Fleet Reserve under the provisions of section 203 of this act from being transferred in accordance with the provisions of this section if they so elect: Provided further, That a fractional year of 6 months or more shall be considered a full year for purposes of this section and section 203 in computing years of active Federal service and base and longevity pay: And provided further, That the provisions of this section shall apply to all persons of the class described herein heretofore or hereafter transferred to the Fleet Reserve, except that no increase in pay or allowances shall be deemed to have accrued prior to the date of the enactment of this amendment. For the purposes of this section, all active service in the Army of the United States, the Navy, the Marine Corps, the Coast Guard, or any component thereof, shall be deemed to be active Federal service."

SEC. 3. Title II of the Naval Reserve Act of 1938 (52 Stat. 1178) is hereby amended by adding thereto a new section to read as follows:

"SEC. 208. Whenever enlisted men of the Fleet Reserve, transferred thereto after more than 16 years' service, or enlisted men transferred from the Fleet Reserve to the retired list of the Regular Navy; perform active duty after July 1, 1925, such active duty, except that which they are required to perform in time of peace under section 206 of this title, shall be included in the computation of their total service for the purpose of computing their retainer or retired pay when in an inactive-duty status, and in the computation of their retainer or retired pay all active duty so performed subsequent to the effective date of transfer to the Fleet Reserve or to the retired list shall be counted for the purpose of computing percentage rates and increases with respect to their retainer or retired pay and shall be based on the enlisted pay received by them at the time they resume an inactive-duty status, including increases in consequence of advancement in rating, longevity, and extraordinary heroism: Provided, That such pay shall not exceed 75 percent of the base and longevity pay of the highest rating to which entitled under the provisions of this section: Provided further, That active duty performed during any period of national emergency declared by the President shall be considered for the purpose of this section as not being active duty in time of peace required by section 206: Provided further, That nothing contained in this section shall operate to reduce the retainer or retired pay and allowances to which any enlisted man would otherwise have been entitled: Provided further, That a fractional year of 6 months or more shall be considered a full year for purposes of this section in computing years of active Federal service and base and longevity pay: And provided further, That persons of the classes described in this section who have been retired or returned to an inactive duty status prior to the date of approval of this section shall be entitled to the benefits of this section from the date of retirement or return to an inactive duty status."

In all other cases officers and enlisted men shall be retired in accordance with existing law providing for the retirement of officers or enlisted men."

SEC. 6. (a) Section 4 of the act approved October 6, 1945 (Public Law 190, 79th Cong.), is hereby amended to read as follows:

An enlisted man so transferred and retired shall receive, except when on active duty, monthly retired pay at the rate of 2½ percent of the base and longevity pay of the enlisted grade held at the time he made application for retirement multiplied by the number of years of active Federal service, not to exceed 30 years. SEC. 7. An enlisted man who is transferred to the Enlisted Reserve Corps pursuant to the provisions of section 6 of this act shall remain a member thereof until his active Federal military service performed prior to such transfer plus the period of his service in such corps equals 30 years, and while a member of such corps shall be subject to perform such periods of active duty as may now or hereafter be prescribed by law.

(a) Each enlisted man of the Regular Army retired under the provisions of section 6 of this act or the provisions of section 4 of the act approved October 6, 1945 (Public Law 190, 79th Cong.) who performs or has performed active military service subsequent to retirement shall, upon relief from such active duty, receive retired pay on the same basis as received by him prior to his recall to active duty, or in the amount resulting from a recomputation, as provided herein, whichever is the greater. Such recomputation shall be made in the same manner as provided in section 6 of this act on the basis of the enlisted grade held at the time of relief from active military service, or the enlisted grade in which originally retired, whichever is higher: Provided, That the service to be credited shall include periods of active Federal service subsequent to retirement: Provided further. That the retired pay shall not exceed 75 percent of the enlisted base and longevity pay he was receiving in his active-duty status.

(b) Each enlisted man of the Regular Army retired under the provisions of the act of March 2, 1907 (34 Stat. 1217; 10 U. S. SEC. 9. No back pay for any period prior to the date of enactment of this act shall accrue to any person by reason of the enactment of this act except as otherwise provided in section 3. No person, active or retired, of any of the armed forces, shall suffer, by reason of this act, any reduction in any pay, allowances, or compensation to which he was entitled upon the effective date of this act. Retired enlisted personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps, personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps who are members of the Fleet Reserve or Fleet Marine Corps Reserve, and personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps who become eligible and who apply for transfer to the Fleet Reserve or Fleet Marine Corps Reserve shall receive an opportunity to elect to receive retainer and retired pay under the provisions of this act or to receive such pay under the provisions of law in effect immediately prior to the date of enactment of this act; and these persons shall be entitled to receive the pay elected.

LUMP-SUM PAYMENTS FOR ACCUMULATED LEAVE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2523) to provide for lump-sum payment of compensation for accumulated leave.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, this bill is rather inconsequential. I shall be glad to explain it to the Senate; but it is my desire to obtain unanimous consent to attach to this bill an amendment which is of prime importance, and which I am sure every Senator will be interested in.

First, I shall make an explanation of the bill, to which I think there can be no objection, and then I shall explain the proposed amendment.

The bill itself affects approximately 100 Federal employees, and the amount involved is somewhat less than $17,000. These 100 employees were working under the Bituminous Coal Act of 1937, which, as I recall, was repealed in 1942. Due to the fact that that agency was closed, these employees had no opportunity to take their final leave; and due to a technical defect in the law, they were not able to get a lump-sum settlement. A lump-sum settlement is now provided for in the case of all other employees, generally.

So the purpose of this bill is merely to do away with the particular inequities as to these particular employees, at a cost of approximately $17,000.

Mr. President, I invite the most careful attention of the Senate to what I am now about to say. As Senators know, in the last 14 months we have passed two Federal pay bills which increase the compensation of Federal workers approximately 20 percent or 35 percent, the higher percentage being, of course, in the case of employees whose salaries are in the lower brackets. But at the time of the passage of each law, we imposed a ceiling of $10,000, so that any person in the Federal employment who was receiving $10,000 has received no increase of his compensation. Any employee who was earning more than $8,200 has, as a result of that ceiling, received less than his proportionate share of increase in pay, as fixed in the law.

As a result of that situation, a most lamentable and, I think, inequitable condition has come about, namely, that all the workers whose salaries were in the bracket from $8,200 to $10,000 have been squeezed together, so to speak, and in many cases in the same agency there have been a number of employees of different ability and rank who have been receiving the same salary. I believe that the reason Congress imposed that ceiling was because it felt that it was unwise to increase those salaries above $10,000 inasmuch as the Members of Congress were held to that limit. At least, the attitude of the Civil Service Committees was to the effect that as soon as the salaries of Members of Congress were raised, the salary limit of other persons might be lifted. So this morning I requested the Civil Service Committee of the Senate to give me authority to present an amendment to one of these bills which would lift the ceiling of $10,000. My request occasioned considerable discussion, and the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] made a suggestion which was accepted by the committee. He suggested that, in lieu of lifting the salaries, the ceiling itself should be lifted to $12,500. If the ceiling were merely lifted, the salaries of Cabinet officers would be increased, and the salaries of certain departmental officials would be increased, also.

The amendment which I was authorized to present would lift the ceiling to $12,500, which would result in a proper, logical, and mathematically graduated scale from $8,200 to $12,500, and would take care of all present difficulties.

The total cost of the amendment would be somewhat less than $1,000,000 annually. There are involved approximately 700 employees. Those employees are high career men who are receiving salaries from $8,200 a year up. Agency heads would also be involved.

I have felt that at the present time Congress should take this step for the reason that there is involved a moral question. Most of the Federal employees to whom I have referred have received no increase in salaries since 1937, and those in the low brackets have received a very minimum increase generally. If the Members of Congress, judges, and others receive increases in salary, a very unhappy situation will result from squeezing together the present levels of many salaries. The Civil Service Committee of the House favors this measure. I have consulted with nearly all the members of the Civil Service Committee of the Senate, some of whom were not present at the meeting of the committee, and they favor the measure. I have discussed it with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], and he stated to me——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I may favor the amendment. I should like to have it read so that we may know what it contains.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, in my time, I wish to ask a question of the Senator from California so that I may understand correctly his proposal. The general increases which have been granted to civil-service employees apply only to salaries up to $8,200. Am I correct?

Mr. DOWNEY. Yes; the only ones affected by this bill are those who were receiving more than $8,200 a year.

Mr. TAFT. I refer to the general increases heretofore granted. They have applied to those receiving less than $8,200 annually, have they not?

Mr. DOWNEY. No; the last increases, in effect, applied to all, but the ceiling was imposed so that the salary of no one could be increased to more than $10,000 a year. That meant that those whose salaries were brought up to $10,000 a year could receive no more than that. As a matter of fact, our increases in the higher brackets were less than in the lower brackets, proportionately speaking, and this measure would merely make it possible to grant the statutory increase without imposing a $10,000 ceiling.

Mr. TAFT. The persons who were receiving $10,000 a year would, under this measure, receive approximately how much?

Mr. DOWNEY. I have the figures before me. Those now receiving $10,000 a year would receive $12,369. Those now receiving $9,600 a year would receive, under this measure, $11,890.20.

Mr. TAFT. My feeling is that in the case of the upper salaries the Congress should determine by law what the figures shall be.

Mr. DOWNEY. I may say to the distinguished Senator that the figures to which I have referred are determined by law. This measure would merely make it possible to increase the pay of Federal employees who did not receive the raise which was generally provided.

Mr. TAFT. When the Congress, by law, creates a position and provides that the person filling the position shall receive an annual salary of $10,000, will his salary be increased according to the figures provided for in the measure to which the Senator has referred?

Mr. DOWNEY. Yes; if he is one of those affected by the increase in pay which was provided for by law. The bill does not affect Cabinet members. The Interstate Commerce Commission members are already receiving, I believe, from $12,500 to $15,000.

Mr. TAFT. The members of the National Labor Relations Board receive $10,000 a year. Would all their salaries be increased to $12,369, according to the Senator's figures?

Mr. DOWNEY. Their salaries would be raised to the same extent that the salaries of other employees in the upper brackets would be raised. I believe the increase is approximately 24 percent. The increase provided for under this measure would be less in the upper brackets than would be the increased cost in living. So there is really no increase in salary.

Mr. President, I ask that the amendment be stated.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, this is a very important subject and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Mr. President, in about an hour and a half I am to serve as a pall bearer at a funeral in Baltimore. I had thought we would have finished the calendar by this time, but that has not happened. There are four bills on the calendar still unacted upon. Orders No. 1867, 1886, 1887, and 1888, bills which I have reported to the Senate, and I desire to be present when they are under consideration on the floor. I shall not ask unanimous consent that they be taken up at this time out of order, but I do ask unanimous consent that when the bills are reached they be passed over, so that I may have an opportunity of bringing them up tomorrow or the following day.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Maryland to state the numbers.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Orders of Business 1867, 1886, 1887, and 1888.

Mr. GURNEY. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There being no objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from California.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert at the proper place in the bill a new section, as follows:

SEC. —. (a) Section 603 (b) of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1945, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"(b) Notwithstanding any other provision of this act, no officer or employee shall, by reason of the enactment of this act, be paid with respect to any pay period, basic compensation, or basic compensation plus any additional compensation provided by this act, at a rate in excess of $12,500 per annum."

(b) Section 7 of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1946 is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 7. Notwithstanding any other provision of this act, no officer or employee shall, by reason of the enactment of this act, be paid with respect to any pay period, basic compensation, or basic compensation plus any additional compensation provided by the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1946, as amended, at a rate in excess of $12,500 per annum."

(c) Clause (3) of section 102 (a) of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1945, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"(3) heads of departments or of independent establishments or agencies of the Federal Government, including Government-owned or controlled corporations, whose rate of basic compensation exceeds $12,500 per annum."

(d) Notwithstanding the provisions of section 102 (b) of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1945, as amended, the provisions of section 602 (b) of such act and the provisions of section 4 of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1946 shall apply to the rates of basic compensation of the members of the Tennessee Valley Authority and the chairman of the Advisory Board of the Inland Waterways Corporation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from California.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I wish to say just a word on this matter. This bill was placed on the calendar July 22, 1946. While I believe that many of our public servants are underpaid, and that it would be better for the Government to pay them higher salaries, thereby not only obtaining better men, but better service, I feel that this is no way to legislate. In the closing days of the session an amendment is proposed which would increase the salaries of some 700 employees, without any discrimination. It may be true that the matter has been before the committee, but the amendment was not attached to the bill as it was reported. Senators who have seen fit to be away temporarily, who have been given permission to leave for a few days, when they return will find that an amendment has been attached to the bill which involves a great amount to the Government, and a considerable increase in the salaries of those who would be affected. In my opinion it is not the way to legislate in the closing hours of the session. For that reason, Mr. President, I shall object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, I do not think the objection of the Senator goes to the bill itself.

Mr. FERGUSON. No; merely to the amendment. The committee had an opportunity to study the bill, and I have no objection to the bill, but I do object to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from California withdraw the amendment?

Mr. DOWNEY. Yes; I withdraw the amendment on objection being heard, and I ask for action on the bill.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I think the salaries of these officials should be raised, but dozens of different kinds of positions are affected. We have fixed certain salaries at from $10,000 to $12,000. In my opinion the proposal deserves more consideration. I think probably some of those who would be affected are entitled to a greater increase and others less. If the amendment is not agreed to, I think a study should be made immediately so that when we return a definite proposal may be made. I agree with the Senator in what he says: I do not like the idea of lump-sum increases for positions of an entirely different character, which have no relationship to each other at all. In some cases we fix $10,000 and in some $12,000, purely hit or miss. Since I have been a Member of the Senate no study has been made as to the proper way of fixing the compensation of officials in the class affected, and I think such a study should be made. I think some action should be taken during the recess to deal with the subject on a more scientific basis.

Mr. FERGUSON. I thank the Senator from Ohio. I think he has touched one weak spot, which I tried to suggest. I am in favor of certain salaries being increased even more than they have been, but I believe the Senate, through a committee, should give a thorough study to this matter, and that there should be no discrimination.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California withdraws his amendment.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, I wish to address a question to the Senator from California. Does the bill he is now asking to have passed deal only with those who work for the Bituminous Coal Commission?

Mr. DOWNEY. Yes.

Mr. REVERCOMB. How many employees would be affected?

Mr. DOWNEY. Less than a hundred.

Mr. REVERCOMB. How large an expenditure will be entailed?

Mr. DOWNEY. Less than $17,000. The bill merely provides an adjustment of accumulated leave to which the employees were entitled but which they did not get.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further amendment to be proposed the question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CORDON. I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator from California with reference to the bill. I endeavored to make the inquiry in adequate time. The Senator from California states that this measure—and it is clear that that statement is correct—applies only to the employees of the Bituminous Coal Commission. Is that due to some peculiar situation whereby only that group of Federal employees who were let out fell into a special category?

Mr. DOWNEY. Yes. I may say they were in a peculiar condition. The agency operating under the Bituminous Coal Act was wound up, so that the employees were unable to take their terminal leave, but worked during the period of time during which it was winding up its business. The general law which gives the right to the employee either to a lump sum payment for his leave or for the leave if he previously could not get it, did not apply to them, and this fairly makes provision for that situation.

Mr. CORDON. So far as the Senator knows, this is the only group in that peculiar position?

Mr. DOWNEY. Yes.

Mr. CORDON. These individuals have not been singled out from others who were in the same position.

Mr. DOWNEY. No.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of that bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas [Mr. O'DANIEL], who reported the bill, is not in the Chamber at the moment.

Mr. REVERCOMB. The bill says it is for the relief of certain postmasters. I do not want to object——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read the bill for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is authorized and directed to allow credit for payments of per diem made by postmasters acting under direction of the First Assistant Postmaster General to postal employees detailed to postal units at camps, posts, or stations to handle military mail or at civilian plants devoted to war production at rates not to exceed that provided and authorized by the act of December 7, 1945, Public Law 249, the credit to be allowed notwithstanding that the payments were made on orders issued retroactively by the Postmaster General.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, it seems to me that the bill is a validation of payments which have been made. I have no objection to it.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to the bill which I ask to have stated. I will say that the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia has approved the amendment. I offer the amendment at the request of the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER], who is not present. I also ask that there be printed in the RECORD a letter from the First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Mass., which explains the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter is as follows:

THE FIRST CHURCH OF CHRIST, SCIENTIST,
Boston, Mass., July 19, 1946.

Hon. THEODORE G. BILBO,
Chairman, Senate Committee on the District of Columbia, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR BILBO: This has reference to S. 1008, to amend the act entitled "An act to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to make regulations to prevent and control the spread of communicable and preventable diseases," approved August 11, 1939.

Although we appreciate the worthy purposes of the bill, we believe that without a proper amendment, it will unintentionally violate the right of religious freedom, as provided in the first article of the Bill of Rights of the Constitution of the United States. We, therefore, wish to offer an amendment which will in a simple way avoid a possible constitutional defect which might adversely affect the entire statute.

In the practice of their religion, Christian Scientists rely entirely upon prayer or spiritual means in dealing with human ailments. This fact is recognized by the statutes of most of the States of the Union, in particular by the Healing Arts Practice Act, District of Columbia, 1928, which reads as follows:

"The provisions of this act shall not be construed to apply * * * to persons treating human ailments by prayer or spiritual means, as an exercise or enjoyment of religious freedom: Provided, That the laws, rules, and regulations relating to communicable diseases and sanitary matters are not violated."

The bill (S. 1008) provides that any person believed upon "probable cause" to be affected by communicable disease may be removed by order of the health officer to such place or institution as he may designate. If a Christian Scientist were removed under the powers of this bill to a hospital or institution where there would be medical observation and supervision, it would nullify his right to be treated by prayer or spiritual means. In Christian Science, any mixing of medical or material means, including medical supervision or observation with Christian Science methods, tends to lower the effectiveness of treatment by prayer or spiritual means and even make it entirely ineffective. For this reason, to place a Christian Scientist in any type of medical institution would deprive him of the right of the free exercise of his religion. To avoid this situation, it is thought that your honorable committee will agree that the bill should be changed. We therefore propose that a new section be inserted on page 10 to follow section 10 to read as follows:

"With respect to all persons who, either on behalf of themselves or their minor children or wards, rely in good faith upon spiritual means or prayer in the free exercise of religion to prevent or cure disease, nothing in this act shall have the effect of requiring or giving any health officer or other person the right to compel any such person, minor child or ward, to go to or be confined in a hospital or other medical institution unless no other place for quarantine of such person, minor child or ward can be secured, nor to compel any such person, child or ward to submit to any medical treatment."

There are a number of precedents for the foregoing type of amendment. As an example, we would cite a paragraph from the regulations of the Indiana State Board of Health, Division of Communicable Disease Control, unanimously adopted on December 13, 1945:

"Exceptions in cases of persons having certain religious beliefs: With respect to all persons who either on behalf of themselves or their minor children or wards, rely in good faith upon spiritual means or prayer to prevent or cure disease or suffering, the following provisions shall apply: Nothing in any of the regulations of the State board of health shall have the effect of requiring or giving any health officer or other person the right to compel any such person, minor child or ward, to go to or be confined in a hospital or other medical institution, unless no other place for quarantine of such person, minor child or ward, can be secured; nor to compel any such person, child or ward to submit to any immunization; nor to compel any such person, child or ward to submit to any medical treatment; nor shall any such person, child or ward be compelled to submit to any medical test or examination except in the case of statutory requirements, and except in the case of nose and throat cultures for cases or carriers of diphtheria and stool and urine analyses for cases of carriers of typhoid fever, paratyphoid fever, or dysentery which are necessary to determine the eligibility for release from quarantine. Nothing contained in this regulation shall be construed to abridge the powers of the State or any local board of health or other public-health authority to establish quarantine, as provided by law, for the purpose of preventing the spread of communicable disease" (Regulation HCD 54).

The whole objective of our proposed amendment is not to escape the reporting of communicable disease, isolation and quarantine, as prescribed by the health regulations, but to provide for isolation in a home or suitable place other than a hospital or medically operated institution, and to avoid any compulsory medical treatment. Christian Scientists of the District of Columbia, as elsewhere, accept and strictly comply with the requirements of the law and the regulations of health officers. Compliance with these regulations is enjoined upon them through a pamphlet of instructions, issued sometime since, of which the health officer of the District of Columbia has a copy. We do, however, object and protest against being subject to arrest and imprisonment in such a manner that the treating of disease by prayer or spiritual means is interfered with and an essential element of the free exercise of our religion restricted or made void.

In addition, the bill in its present form might be considered unconstitutional for other reasons, namely, denial to the citizen of due process of law, and delegation of legislative power whereby the Commissioners of the District of Columbia legislate the cause or basis of the arrest and detention of the citizen.

Sincerely yours,

ARTHUR J. TODD,
Manager, Washington, D. C., Office.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 10, between lines 22 and 23, it is proposed to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 11. With respect to all persons who, either on behalf of themselves or their minor children or wards, rely in good faith upon spiritual means or prayer in the free exercise of religion to prevent or cure disease, nothing in this act shall have the effect of requiring or giving any health officer or other person the right to compel any such person, minor child, or ward, to go to or be confined in a hospital, or other medical institution unless no other place for quarantine of such person, minor child, or ward can be secured, nor to compel any such person, child, or ward to submit to any medical treatment.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, that bill appears to provide an increase in pensions in the Regular Army, the Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard. I should like to have an explanation of the bill, and to find where it fits into the general plan of disability benefits paid under the present law.

Mr. TUNNELL. The bill provides for increased pensions to members of the Regular Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard who became disabled by reason of their services during other than a period of war.

Mr. REVERCOMB. And what is the extent of the increase, may I ask the Senator?

Mr. TUNNELL. They receive 75 percent of the wartime rates for injury now, and the bill raises that to 90 percent. The bill has the endorsement of the Secretary of War. The committee has submitted a report on the measure, if the Senator would like to have it read.

Mr. REVERCOMB. The whole purpose is to increase the percentage of payment?

Mr. TUNNELL. Yes. The bill increases the percentage of payment to those who are injured in service during other than a period of war to 90 percent, instead of 75 percent.

PRESERVATION OF RECORDS OF DOMESTIC SOURCES OF ORE

The bill (H. R. 4562) to insure the preservation of technical and economic records of domestic sources of ores of metals and minerals was announced as next in order.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will some Senator advise us of the purpose of the bill?

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, this is a bill identical with one which passed the Senate in the last Congress. The House passed the same bill in the present session of Congress. The Senator will remember that after the last war there had to be disposed of many claims for relief of persons who produced various kinds of minerals, and a great deal of difficulty was encountered. In this war the Government spent many millions of dollars investigating various mineral deposits throughout the United States. The bill provides that the records which were made during the war with respect to mining operations undertaken because of the war be consolidated in the Bureau of Mines, with copies to be filed in the National Archives so that there will be a complete record.

Mr. REED. As I understand, the bill does not call for any considerable expense. It merely provides for gathering records in the Bureau of Mines and preserving them for further use. I have no objection to the bill.

Mr. REVERCOMB. The Senator has cleared up my difficulty. As I understand, no considerable expenditure is involved?

Mr. HAYDEN. No. The purpose of the bill is only to gather records and keep them in the proper office.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 4562) to insure the preservation of technical and economic records of domestic sources of ores of metals and minerals was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

That the act of April 6, 1938 (52 Stat. 201), as amended by the act of July 9, 1941 (55 Stat. 580), is hereby further amended by adding a new section thereto reading as follows:

"SEC. 3. In addition to the authority granted by this act to exchange the existing Coast Guard site (commonly known as the Base Six property) located at Fort Lauderdale, Broward County, in the State of Florida, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to sell and convey said property to the municipality of Fort Lauderdale, Broward County, Fla., at not less than its fair market value, as determined by the Board of Coast Guard officers referred to in section 1 hereof, and to devote the proceeds thereof, which proceeds are hereby appropriated, to the same purposes for which such property may be exchanged under the provisions of this act: Provided, That the municipality of Fort Lauderdale shall consummate such purchase not less than 6 months after the property is offered to said municipality for sale."

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, to the committee amendment I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated. It is a clarifying amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from Florida will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, line 11, after the word "thereof" in the committee amendment, it is proposed to strike out "which proceeds are hereby appropriated."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

EVACUATION CLAIMS COMMISSION—BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2127) to create an Evacuation Claims Commission under the general supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, and to provide for the powers, duties, and functions thereof, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, let the bill go over.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President——

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, does the Senator care to withhold his objection?

Mr. CORDON. I made no objection.

Mr. LANGER. I made the objection.

Mr. CORDON. I was about to ask for an explanation.

Mr. McCARRAN. I wonder if the Senator from North Dakota would care to hear an explanation.

Mr. LANGER. I have no objection to the bill if the words "of Japanese ancestry" are stricken. I will not vote for a bill to prefer the Japanese over every other nationality.

Mr. McCARRAN. This bill does not discriminate. It simply deals with the Japanese who were taken into custody at the time of the outbreak of the war. They were American citizens who lived in certain States in the West, and it is now sought to restore them to their homes.

Mr. LANGER. I shall object temporarily at least.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

REESTABLISHMENT OF OFFICES OF REGISTERS OF LAND OFFICES, ETC.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2442) to supersede the provisions of Reorganization Plan No. 3 of 1946 by reestablishing the offices of registers of land offices, and providing for appointment of the Director and Associate Director of the Bureau of Land Management, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments, on page 2, line 21, after the words "the rate of", to strike out "$12,000" and insert "$10,000"; and at the beginning of line 23, to strike out "$10,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$9,000", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions of section 403 of Reorganization Plan No. 3 of 1946—

(a) That offices of all registers of the district land offices, abolished by subsection 403 (d) of such plan, are hereby reestablished, subject to all provisions of law applicable thereto prior to the effective date of such plan: Provided, That registers of all land offices shall hereafter be under the Bureau of Land Management of the Department of the Interior: Provided further, That any register of a land office duly commissioned and serving at the time the offices of all registers of the district land offices were abolished by subsection 403 (d) of Reorganization Plan No. 3 of 1946 shall continue in office as the register of such land office, under this act, in the same manner and for the same period as if appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, on July 15, 1946, for a term expiring upon the date on which the commission held by such register on July 15, 1946, would have expired if Reorganization Plan No. 3 of 1946 had not become effective; and a new commission shall be issued to such register in accordance with the provisions of this subsection.

(b) The Director of the Bureau of Land Management of the Department of the Interior, and the Associate Director of such Bureau, shall be appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate. Such Director shall receive a salary at the rate of $10,000 per year; and such Associate Director shall receive a salary at the rate of $9,000 per year.

(c) The Director of the Bureau of Land Management shall perform, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, all executive duties appertaining to the surveying and sale of the public lands of the United States, or in anywise respecting such public lands, and, also, such as relate to private claims of land, and the issuing of patents for all grants of land under the authority of the Government; together with such other and further duties as the Secretary of the Interior shall designate.

(d) The Associate Director of the Bureau of Land Management shall be authorized to sign such letters, papers, and documents, and to perform such other duties as may be directed by the Director, and shall act as Director in the absence of that officer, or in case of a vacancy in the office of Director. The Associate Director shall also perform such other and further duties as the Secretary of the Interior shall designate.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALASKAN INTERNATIONAL HIGHWAY COMMISSION—BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 2871) to create a commission to be known as the Alaskan International Highway Commission was announced as next in order.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I shall ask that the bill be passed over, but I should like to make a brief explanation.

In 1938 the Congress, on the basis of a bill which I introduced in the House, created the Alaskan International Highway Commission, to study all phases of the highway to Alaska. That Commission, of which I had the honor to be chairman, was in existence for about 7½ years. We made several reports and surveys, and held many meetings with a similar commission appointed by the Canadian Government. Although I do not disagree with the basic purposes of the bill, it seems to me that there is no further need for an Alaskan International Highway Commission. The files are filled with reports. As I have pointed out, I do not object to the basic principles of the bill, but it seems to me that there is no need at this time for a further continuation of the International Alaskan Highway Commission. I voluntarily allowed the Commission to lapse last year. All that remains to be done in connection with the Alaskan highway is for the Canadian Government to act. There are sufficient facts available. The Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] is vitally interested in this subject.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, my understanding is that the Canadian Government is providing a Commission of this kind and that it is desirous of having a commission from the United States to join in studying the problem, with the idea of providing funds to carry out its share of the program.

Mr. MAGNUSON. In 1938, after the American Commission had been appointed, the Canadian Government appointed a like commission. The Canadians have allowed that commission to lapse, as our commission has been allowed to lapse. I believe that the Canadian Government is now willing to appoint direct representatives from the Department of External Affairs. The Secretary of State and the President of the United States are very familiar with the situation, and they are willing to appoint American representatives. I know how deeply interested the Senator from Montana has been in this question.

Mr. MURRAY. The Senator from Washington has been giving very careful study to this problem. Of course he has been familiar with it from its inception. I am perfectly willing that the bill should go over, but I wished to have the Senator from Washington explain the situation.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Since the creation of the first commission, of course, the military highway has been built. We on the west coast are anxious to have a connecting link with it. There are a great number of problems. Until Canada indicates that she is willing to do something in this connection, there is not much more to do.

The Governor of Alaska and I went to Ottawa about 90 days ago and had a conference with the Canadian Cabinet on this question. At that time we were told that the Canadian Government did not have the funds, and that it was obligated to maintain, if possible, the present military highway. They indicated that this was probably not the time to discuss the question. We made the plea that we would like to have some of the preliminaries out of the way and lay out a blueprint for the construction of connecting links, and further construction into the State of the Senator from Montana of major highways connecting with the military highway, if and when the Canadians are ready to join with us in an allocation of funds. It is a project which should be begun shortly. Upon my recommendation to the State Department, and upon Canada's acceptance regarding representatives to discuss the question further, I hope that I can prevail upon the Department to have the distinguished Senator from Montana appointed as one of our representatives, because he has shown a great deal of interest in the matter.

Mr. President, I ask that the bill be passed over.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, the military highway is now completed. As the Senator points out, the State of Washington and my State are desirous of having connecting links with it. I believe that it is of very great importance to the country that the road system be completed and placed in working order, because of the part it will play in national defense, and also in the development of trade relations between the two countries.

Mr. MAGNUSON. It is important that as soon as possible connecting links be built to furnish adequate highways from the present military highway to the State of Montana and eastern Washington. We have high hope that next year we can accomplish the job. In the meantime, we have all the engineering data. We have files and reports. We have held literally scores of conferences on the subject. I am hoping that next year the Dominion Government will see fit to join with us in finishing this great international highway system, which will give us a connecting link not only from the United States to Alaska, but, without any stretch of the imagination, the day is not far distant when a tunnel can be constructed under the Bering Sea and one can drive from this country to Asia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

EVACUATION CLAIMS COMMISSION

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to revert to Senate bill 2127, Calendar 1864, which was passed over temporarily on objection by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I accept the amendments proposed to be offered by the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, in view of the acceptance of the amendments, I withdraw objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, as a member of the Judiciary Committee, I do not feel that this bill has received adequate attention, in that when it came before the committee no hearings were held upon it by the subcommittee.

Under this bill we would transfer to the Interior Department the right to hear any and all claims for any damages up to $2,500, arising under certain circumstances. We would create as to the very agency which was responsible for the removal of those people into the camps and concentration areas, the right to award any compensation desired, up to $2,500. I do not feel that we have given this question proper attention.

Some day I think we shall have to provide compensation for all the wrongs that have been done to these people. But I think it should be done not through the Interior Department, but through the Court of Claims, so that the same persons who were responsible for the removal of these persons would not endeavor to compensate them.

This bill would not affect any places in the United States except the States named. If we are to compensate these persons for losses, we should do it in an orderly, judicial way, rather than to place the matter in the hands of the Department of the Interior.

For that reason, I am compelled to object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being heard, the bill will be passed over.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I should like to say just a word, if the Senator will withdraw his objection for a moment.

Mr. FERGUSON. I shall be glad to withdraw the objection temporarily.

Mr. McCARRAN. Let me emphasize to the Senator the reason why the bill was taken up by the full Judiciary Committee, and let me point out first that we had in attendance at that time a greater number of members of the committee than have been present at the meetings of the committee for a long time. As I started to say, the bill was taken up for the reason that a letter was received from the President of the United States, requesting immediate action on the bill.

As regards the fact that the Interior Department would administer this matter, let me say that the Interior Department had control over the camps where these Japanese people were held during the war, and therefore the Department has still continued to handle the matter and dispose of it.

If that explanation means anything to the Senator from Michigan, I wish he might see fit to let the bill be considered and passed at this time, with the amendments which have been offered by the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I feel, as I have felt in the past, and as I announced before the committee, where I expressed myself very freely, as I am doing now, that under the bill the Interior Department would adjust these claims up to a maximum amount of $2,500 in each case, and would continue to have charge of these matters. In total, an enormous sum of money would be involved. I do not feel that the Interior Department should be allowed to determine what should be done in such cases.

Personally, I had my say before the Judiciary Committee; and all who were there did. The President wrote a letter in which he urged that the bill be passed immediately. But the method proposed is not the way to enact such legislation. These matters should receive very careful attention from the committees, and should receive very careful attention on the floor of the Senate by all Members of the Senate.

Under the new reorganization law a new commission is to be created to hear claims; a new method of hearing claims is provided. These persons will be able to go before that new claims commission, just as all other persons in the United States will, rather than to go to the Interior Department.

So, Mr. President, for the reasons stated, I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being heard, the bill will be passed over.

ADJUSTMENT OF DIVIDEND RATE AND PREMIUM CHARGES OF FEDERAL SAVINGS AND LOAN INSURANCE CORPORATION

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4428) to adjust the rate of dividends paid by the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation on its capital stock and to decrease the premium charge for its insurance, which had been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency, with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 2, in line 2, to strike out "1945" and insert "1946."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, in line 4, to strike out "1945" and insert "1946."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, in line 20, to strike out "1945" and insert "1946."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further amendments to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

CANTON INSANE ASYLUM

The bill (S. 2426) providing for the conveyance to the city of Canton, S. Dak., of the Canton Insane Asylum, located in Lincoln County, S. Dak., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Public Buildings is authorized and directed to convey by quitclaim deed to the city of Canton, S. Dak., all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to all lands, including the buildings and other improvements thereon, constituting the old Canton Insane Asylum, located to the east of the city of Canton, Lincoln County, S. Dak.

SEC. 2. The lands conveyed pursuant to the provisions of the first section of this act shall be used by the grantee for park, recreation, airport, or other public purposes; and the deed of conveyance of such lands shall contain the express condition that if the grantee shall fail or cease to use such lands for such purposes, or shall alienate or attempt to alienate such lands, title thereto shall revert to the United States.

REESTABLISHMENT OF UNITED STATES EMPLOYEES' COMPENSATION COMMISSION

The bill (S. 2456) to provide for the reestablishment of the United States Employees' Compensation Commission with the same functions which it had prior to the time reorganization plan No. 2 became effective was announced as next in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of the bill. A few days ago we agreed to reorganization plan No. 2. It seems to me that before the reorganization is put into operation, this bill, if passed, would have the Senate amend that plan in some way. Therefore, I should like to have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I am glad to explain the bill. When this matter was heard before the Judiciary Committee, it was clearly established that the real objection to reorganization plan No. 2 was the proposal for the abolition of the United States Employees' Compensation Commission. It was a bipartisan commission created in 1916, and its members were approved by the Senate. It functioned as an independent agency from 1916 until the present time. All who appeared before the committee praised the work done by the Commission. They said it had been fair and had properly administered the law.

By the abolition of this Commission, we now would place in the hands of the Federal Security Administrator, if this bill is not passed, the full power to pass on all employees compensation claims. Naturally, he will be so engaged in other work, because of the many and difficult functions of the Federal Security Agency, that he personally will have no time to give to this particular work, which is very important. It covers the Coast Guard and those who have contracts and all United States employees, including all civil-service employees. So it is a very important measure.

In reorganization plan No. 2 we have authorized the Administrator himself to create his own appeal board of three members. The Senate will not pass upon those members. He will make the rules and regulations for them.

I spoke at length against the plan, because I felt that by abolishing this commission we would be making a grave mistake, and immediately, on behalf of myself and the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], I introduced this bill. I hope it will be passed.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, we debated reorganization plans No. 2 and No. 3, which were sent to us by the President under legislation which we enacted. We debated them on the floor of the Senate. Objection was made to approval of the plan, in part, if not chiefly, because it abolished the United States Employees' Compensation Commission and placed the functions of that Commission under the Federal Security Administrator, for it was provided that practically all of the organizations and the functions of the Government with regard to compensation and security and related matters should be under one department or one head.

The fact that the Federal Security Administrator is the head of the whole group, under the new plan, does not mean that he personally must pass on the claims.

I have sent for a copy of plan No. 2. As I recall, it provided that under the Federal Security Administrator there would be a functionary who would do these things. The board is to be set up by him, as I recall.

Am I mistaken about that, or have I stated the matter correctly?

Mr. FERGUSON. I think the Senator is mistaken about that. Appeal from the Administrator's action is to be made to a board.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, the Administrator himself cannot personally review all these matters. But my recollection is that the reorganization plan authorized him to set up a board to handle them, after they had reached him.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, it is to be an appeal board, which is practically equivalent to what the Senator has said.

Let me say to the Senator the question was under consideration; there was serious objection. If we do not permit this bill to be passed, I have very serious doubt whether we shall be able to get any reorganization bill at all passed, if it contains any objectionable features. I think this is the method by which to remove such objection.

Mr. BARKLEY. It seems to me rather incongruous that within a week or two after we have approved a plan of reorganzation by a vote of the Senate, we should whittle it down by a separate bill, so that it is not the reorganization which we approved.

I have found the provision as to the Compensation Commission:

> The functions of the United States Employees' Compensation Commission are transferred to the Federal Security Agency and shall be performed in such manner and under such rules and regulations as the Federal Security Administrator shall prescribe. Such regulations shall provide for a board of three persons to be designated or appointed by the Federal Security Administrator with authority to hear and, subject to applicable law, make final decision on appeals taken from the determinations and awards with respect to claims of employees of the Federal Government or of the District of Columbia. The United States Employees' Compensation Commission is abolished.

That does not say who is to hear or examine into the claims in a preliminary way. It provides the right of the board to have an appeal from the Administrator's decision—which means, of course, that the board can finally pass on the claims. It does not make very clear who would handle it, up to the Administrator. Of course, we all know that the Administrator himself cannot handle these claims in person.

I wish to be recorded as objecting to the practice, if this is to be regarded as a practice, of enacting legislation such as this after we have enacted a reorganization plan as requested by the President, for bills such as this one would strike it out piecemeal.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, is the Senator from Kentucky objecting to the bill?

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I am not objecting to the bill, but I am objecting to the practice.

Mr. FERGUSON. I agree with the Senator with regard to the matter of practice. I would not want to see such a practice established.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, the only way that a practice is established is to begin doing something which becomes a habit.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 2456) to provide for the reestablishment of the United States Employees' Compensation Commission with the same functions which it had prior to the time reorganization plan No. 2 became effective was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission, which was abolished by section 3 of reorganization plan No. 2 (transmitted to the Congress on May 16, 1946) is hereby reestablished. Such Commission shall be composed of three Commissioners to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The President shall designate one of the Commissioners as Chairman of the Commission. No Commissioner shall hold any other office or position under the United States. No more than two of said Commissioners shall be members of the same political party. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is unanimously passed.

POSTAGE ON DOMESTIC AIR MAIL

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5560) to fix the rate of postage on domestic air mail, and for other purposes.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the rate for air-mail postage is, at the present time, 8 cents an ounce. The question was raised in the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads as to whether the rate should be reduced to 6 cents or 5 cents. It was unanimously agreed that the rate should be reduced. The law provides that 6 months after the official cessation of hostilities the rate for air-mail postage shall be returned to what it was formerly, or 6 cents an ounce. Last year the Post Office Department made a profit of approximately $100,000,000. This year it is facing a deficit of from $160,000,000 to $180,000,000.

The majority of the members of the committee favored a rate of 6 cents an ounce. By the use of proxies, the rate of 5 cents an ounce was agreed to.

I am prepared to object, but I do not want to object. Therefore, I will ask the Senator from Arizona, who, I understand is in charge of the bill, if he will consent to an amendment on page 1, in line 3, and on page 2, in line 3, to change in each each instance the numeral "5" to "6"? I have talked with some of my colleagues with regard to the change, and they have agreed that they will raise no objection.

Mr. WHITE. The bill provides for a rate of 5 cents for each ounce or fraction thereof, instead of 6 cents, does it not?

Mr. REED. Yes. My suggestion is made because I should like to have the bill passed.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, obviously the 8-cent rate has not been producing the revenue which it should have produced. It is too high. The bill as reported by the committee provided for a 5-cent rate. If we cannot agree on 5 cents, I suggest that we try to agree on 6 cents. However, I should like to have the chairman of the committee express his views with regard to the subject.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, it is the opinion of the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads that a meritorious case was made out for a 5-cent rate. I believe that sufficient evidence was adduced before the committee to indicate that a rate of 5 cents would be better than a rate of 6 cents. However, we want to have legislation enacted which will lower the present rate. There can be no question about the fact that the 6-cent rate produced more revenue than has been produced by the 8-cent rate. While the rate was 6 cents, the Post Office Department was making more money than it has made since. During 1941, when the 6-cent rate was in effect, the revenue from air-mail postage amounted to $81,000,000. After the Congress passed the law providing for an increase of 2 cents in the air-mail postage rate the increase in revenue was only 2 percent. Since the war ended the decrease in revenue of the Post Office Department has been very pronounced.

Of course, I do not think it is quite fair to attribute to the air mail the fact that the Post Office Department will experience a deficit in its receipts. I think the Congress will be responsible for the deficit because it has passed three pay-increase bills since the rate on air-mail postage was increased to 8 cents. The Post Office Department is of the opinion that by reducing the present 8-cent rate to a rate much lower, the volume of air mail handled will increase to such an extent that it will result in greater revenue being received by the post office. It has been testified before the committee by businessmen throughout the country that the straight 3 cents an ounce for surface mail and 8 cents for air mail is too high. However, they believe that a 5-cent rate for air mail will again justify them in using air-mail services.

I should like to see a bill passed by Congress reducing the rate, and in that view the Post Office Department concurs. I believe my friend from Kansas feels the same way about it.

I am willing to accept an amendment making the rate 6 cents.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, many commercial clubs throughout my State are in favor of a 5-cent rate for air mail. They have asked me to object to the bill if the rate is to be any higher than 5 cents. So temporarily I shall object to an amendment changing the rate to 6 cents.

Mr. HAYDEN. If the rate were now made 6 cents, it would be in effect for at least a few months, and later Congress could change it. If no action is taken at all on this bill the constituents of the Senator from North Dakota will be compelled to continue to pay the 8 cents rate until Congress convenes next January. If the bill is now passed providing for a decrease in rate the Senator's constituents will have the advantage of a 6 cents rate—if that is the rate adopted—in the interim. I am satisfied that eventually a 5-cent rate will be adopted. But for the time being, instead of there being no reduction at all in the rate on air-mail postage I would rather see a rate of 6 cents adopted than a rate of 5 cents.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I never received such expressions of unanimity of opinion as those which I have received from the commercial clubs of my State. Those clubs are located in Bismarck, Fargo, and other cities and towns. The representatives of those clubs have told me to oppose any rate higher than 5 cents an ounce.

Mr. HAYDEN. I understand that very well, but those businessmen will be required to pay 8 cents for at least several months yet unless a lower rate is agreed to.

Mr. LANGER. Did not the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads vote almost unanimously in favor of a 5-cent rate?

Mr. CHAVEZ. No. The division was 7 to 5, as I now recall. There was a very pronounced division of opinion. As chairman of the committee I may say that I am in agreement with the Senator from Arizona. We must agree on a 6-cent rate, or the bill will fail of passage, and then everyone using the air-mail service will be required to continue paying the present 8-cent rate until Congress does something about it at some time in the future.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, this is a House bill, and action must be taken on it if there is to be any reduction whatever this year in the air-mail rate. If an objection is made to the bill and the bill is not passed, no legislation with reference to the subject will be enacted. I hope that the Senator from North Dakota will not object, and will agree to the proposal to amend the bill so as to provide for a rate of 6 cents.

Mr. LANGER. If the Senate agrees on the 5-cent rate now, the bill will not have to go back to the House.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true, but if some Senator objects to consideration of the bill, there will be no chance of getting even a 5-cent rate.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, is the bill now before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate is discussing it.

Mr. AIKEN. Why is it not proper to settle the matter by first voting whether or not we wish to agree to a 6-cent rate?

Mr. CHAVEZ. Because I have been informed that the opponents of the 5-cent rate are most anxious to debate the bill for 3 or 4 or 5 hours. I came to the conclusion that, rather than having the bill fail of passage, and the present 8-cent rate continued, it would be advisable to accept the proposal to make the rate 6 cents and discuss the matter with the House conferees.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The 5-minute rule is in effect.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the bill is before the Senate only on the reservation of an objection. The objection of any Senator will put the bill over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5560) to fix the rate of postage on domestic air mail, and for other purposes.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, on page 1, line 3, after the words "shall be", I move to strike out "5" and insert "6", and on page 2, line 3, after the words "rate of", to strike out "5" and insert "6."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I ask for a division.

On a division the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

WESLEY A. MANGELSDORF

The Senate proceed to consider the bill (H. R. 2480) for the relief of Wesley A. Mangelsdorf, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$9,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The resolution (S. Res. 196) proposing acceptance of compulsory jurisdiction of International Court of Justice by United States Government was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF FIRST WAR POWERS ACT, 1941

The bill (S. 2378) to amend the First War Powers Act, 1941, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is on the calendar an identical House bill, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 6890) to amend the First War Powers Act, 1941.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Ohio, does the House bill change my amendment?

Mr. HUFFMAN. The House bill is identical with the Senate bill.

Mr. WALSH. The House bill excludes the section I want excluded?

Mr. HUFFMAN. Yes; section 33.

Mr. WALSH. So that it is not necessary for me to renew my amendment.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, the committee struck out section 33, which was the section objectionable to the Senator from Massachusetts.

The House included language on page 11, line 25, and I think to make it clear we should add after the word "a" the words "interest or proceeds in respect of which a suit or" and the words "a suit" should be inserted.

Then on page 12, at the foot of the page, the words "or return of just compensation" should be stricken out.

Mr. HUFFMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I am glad to yield.

Mr. HUFFMAN. Is the Senator referring to the House bill or the Senate bill? Are we not considering the House bill instead of the Senate bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The House bill is before the Senate.

Mr. HUFFMAN. I shall refer to the lines in the House bill. The same amendment may be inserted in the House bill in line 25, page 4, to strike out the words "or for just compensation."

Mr. FERGUSON. On page 17, lines 15 and 16, it is proposed to strike out the words "or for just compensation in respect thereof."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator refer to that in the House bill?

Mr. HUFFMAN. That is in lines 15 and 16 on page 10 of the House bill.

Mr. FERGUSON. And on page 9 of the Senate bill, line 8, the words "a suit or", after the word "pending", should be inserted.

Mr. HUFFMAN. I do not have the corresponding place in the House bill, but it may be inserted at the appropriate place in the bill.

Mr. FERGUSON. In our report on page 6, lines, 1, 2, 3, 7 and 10, the words "just compensation" are mentioned. These references are I am sure inadvertent, and should be treated as eliminated from the report. They had reference to section 33 of the committee form of the bill, and section 33 was eliminated by an amendment.

Mr. HUFFMAN. Mr. President, with the former section 33 deleted, those words have no meaning, and they may be eliminated.

Mr. FERGUSON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. HUFFMAN. This I believe, makes the bill a clean bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator offer the amendments?

Mr. HUFFMAN. I should like to have the clerk state the amendments of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk has not the amendments before him.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I suggest that we pass the bill over until Senators can get together on the amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over temporarily.

REIMBURSEMENT OF STATES FOR TRAINING PROGRAMS FOR VETERANS

"(b) As used in this part the term 'Other training on the job' shall include courses offered by establishments approved by the appropriate agency of the State or the Administrator whenever such courses of training on the job are furnished in accordance with the following provisions:

"1. Any establishment desiring to undertake an on-the-job training program will be required to submit to the appropriate State approving agency a written application setting forth the course of training for each job for which a veteran is to be trained. The written application covering the training program will include the following:

"a. Title and description of the specific job objective for which the veteran is to be trained.

"b. Length of the training period.

"c. Schedule listing various operations for major kinds of work or tasks to be learned and showing, for each, job operations or work, tasks to be performed, and the approximate length of time to be spent on each operation or task.

"d. Wage or salary to be paid at the beginning of the training program, at each successive step in the program, and at the completion of training.

"e. Entrance wage or salary paid by the establishment to employees already trained in the kind of work for which the veteran is to be trained.

"f. Number of hours of supplemental instructions required.

"2. The appropriate approving agency of the State or the Administrator may approve the application of the establishment when such establishment is found upon investigation to have met or made provision for meeting the following criteria:

"a. The training content of the program is adequate to qualify the veteran for appointment to the job for which he is to be trained.

"b. There is reasonable certainty that the job for which the veteran is to be trained will be available to him at the end of the training period.

"c. The job is one in which progression and appointment to the next higher classification are based upon skills learned through organized training on the job and not on such factors as length of service and normal turn-over.

"d. The wages to be paid the veteran for each successive period of training are not less than those customarily paid in the establishment and the community to a learner in the same job and who is not a veteran and are in conformity with State and Federal laws and applicable bargaining agreements.

"e. The job customarily requires a period of training of not less than 3 months and not more than 2 years of full-time training.

"f. The length of the training period is no longer than that customarily required by the establishment and other establishments in the community to provide the trainee with required skills, arrange for the acquiring of job knowledge, technical information, and other facts which the trainee will need to learn in order to become competent on the job for which he is being trained.

"g. Provision is made for related instruction for the individual veteran who may need it.

"h. There is in the establishment adequate space, equipment, instructional material and instructor personnel to provide satisfactory training on the job.

"i. Adequate records are kept to show the progress made by the veteran toward his job objective and a periodic report showing the conduct and progress made in the course of training on the job will be provided for the Veterans' Administration.

"j. Appropriate credit is given the veteran for previous job experience, whether in the military service or elsewhere, his beginning wage adjusted to the level to which such a credit advances him and his training period shortened accordingly. No course of training will be considered bona fide if given to a veteran who is already qualified by training and experience for the job objective.

"k. A copy of the training program as approved by the State agency is provided to the veteran and to the Veterans' Administration by the employer.

"l. Upon completion of the training the veteran is given a certificate by the employer indicating the length and type of training provided and that the veteran has completed the course of training on the job satisfactorily.

"3. The Veterans' Administration is not authorized to award the benefits under this part, if it is found by the Administrator that the course of apprentice training or other training on the job fails to meet the requirements of this paragraph."

INTERNATIONAL COLLABORATION WITH RESPECT TO METEOROLOGY

MARKETING AND DISTRIBUTION OF AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6932) to provide for further research into basic laws and principles relating to agriculture and to improve and facilitate the marketing and distribution of agricultural products, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with amendments.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, this bill came over from the House some 2 or 3 weeks ago. It is a result of 2 or 3 years' work by the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives. It undertakes to merge two bills, one of which has been known commonly as the Flannagan bill, providing for research in production of agricultural crops, and a bill known as the Hope-Andresen bill, which provides for research into marketing and into the best ways of handling agriculture commodities.

Mr. President, the pending bill is of tremendous importance to the farmers of the United States. While there has been disagreement as to details, all the farm organizations have strongly supported the general principles enunciated in the measure.

We must realize that for several years the farmers have tremendously increased the production of food and fiber. It is estimated that today there are 3,000,000 more people living on the farms, who are necessary to be there in order to produce the food and fiber necessary to maintain life in this country. It is of the highest importance that greater research be made into the utilization of agricultural commodities, and into the methods of their marketing and preservation.

There is another reason why it is most important that the bill be enacted at this session of the Congress. Most of the funds must be matched by the several States. The State legislatures of 43 States will convene next January, and unless they are apprised of the fact that it is necessary for them to match under the terms of the pending bill, it will be 3 years before we will be enabled to embark on this most important work.

Mr. President, I wish to point out that title I of the bill expands and broadens the scope of research that is already authorized by law. It provides for an initial appropriation of $2,500,000 a year.

Furthermore, in title I there is an authorization of appropriation of $3,000,000 for the first year, with authority to increase it thereafter, to carry on further research in the utilization of agricultural commodities in order that new uses may be developed for those commodities, and therefore preserve the farmer's market.

Title II authorizes an initial appropriation, with authority to increase it thereafter, of $2,500,000 a year for the purposes of investigation and research into the distribution and marketing of agricultural products.

Up until now, Mr. President, the National Government has never engaged in research into the marketing and distribution of crops, and I regard this as being one of the most important features of the bill.

I certainly hope that there will be no objection to the consideration of the bill. As I stated, there was some disagreement between some of those interested in the legislation as to how clearly the bill should define the cooperating agencies within the several States set up to carry on this work.

The Senate committee adopted an amendment which undertook to define this work. Since then all the parties in interest, including the House authors of the bill, have gotten together and agreed upon substitute language. I know of no opposition anywhere to the bill if the substitute for the language of the Senate committee be adopted.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Will the Senator tell us where the amendment comes in and what the effect of it is?

Mr. RUSSELL. It comes in on page 15 of the bill and would be a substitute for the language of the committee amendment beginning in line 23. The amendment has the effect of eliminating the so-called veto power in the agencies of State governments as to where the work shall be done. The amendment reads as follows:

To the maximum extent practicable marketing-research work done hereunder in cooperation with the States shall be done in cooperation with the State agricultural experiment stations; marketing, educational, and demonstrational work done hereunder in cooperation with the States shall be done in cooperation with the State agricultural extension service; market information, inspection, regulatory work, and other marketing service done hereunder in cooperation with the State agencies shall be done in cooperation with the State departments of agriculture and State bureaus and departments.

Mr. President, I hope there will be no objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Does this bill in any way extend the power of the Department of Agriculture or the Commodity Credit Corporation to buy and sell, or is it strictly confined to research?

Mr. RUSSELL. It does not in any wise extend the power of the Department of Agriculture or any of its subdivisions.

Mr. TAFT. Either to buy or sell or regulate production?

Mr. RUSSELL. It does not to the silghtest degree make any such provision. It provides wholly for research.

Mr. TAFT. There are a couple of very general statements contained in the bill which I had not read with care, so I could not judge whether the language was sufficiently broad to cover other activities.

Mr. RUSSELL. It is strictly a research bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator has expired.

Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6932) to provide for further research into basic laws and principles relating to agriculture and to improve and facilitate the marketing and distribution of agricultural products, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with amendments.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I offer an amendment as a substitute for the committee amendment on page 15, beginning in line 23 and ending on page 16 in line 17, which I should like to have acted upon before the committee amendments are considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In title II, on page 15, at the end of the sentence in line 23, it is proposed to insert the following:

To the maximum extent practicable marketing research work done hereunder in cooperation with the States shall be done in cooperation with the State agricultural experiment stations; marketing, educational, and demonstrational work done hereunder in cooperation with the States shall be done in cooperation with the State agricultural extension service; market information, inspection, regulatory work, and other marketing service done hereunder in cooperation with the State agencies shall be done in cooperation with the State departments of agriculture, and State bureaus and departments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, there are a number of other committee amendments to be acted upon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the other amendments reported by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The first amendment was in title I, on page 2, line 10, before the word "employment", to strike out "full" and insert "maximum."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 15, after the figure "9", to strike out "(a)" and insert "(b)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 19, after the word "new", to insert "or expanded"; in line 19, after the word "markets", to insert "(domestic and foreign)", and in the same line, after the word "new", to insert "and expanded"; in line 22, after the word "and", to strike out "elsewhere" and insert "abroad."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 18, after the word "cooperative", to strike out "research", and in the same line, after the word "marketing", to insert "service and in marketing research"; on page 22, line 2, after the word "marketing", to insert "services and for marketing"; in line 5, after the word "specific", to strike out "research"; in line 11, after the word "cooperative", to strike out the word "research."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 25, line 12, after the word "products", to insert "fish and shell fish,".

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in title III, on page 26, line 22, after the word "program", to strike out:

The membership of such advisory committee shall consist of the following: One person from each of the general national farm organizations; one person from the National Association of Commissioners, Secretaries, and Directors of Agriculture; one person from the National Association of Marketing Officials; one person to represent State agricultural experiment stations; one person to represent State extension services, to be selected by the groups which each is to represent. For each of the following commodity groups: Fruits, vegetables, and nuts; livestock and wool; grains; cotton; tobacco; dairy products; forest products; and poultry and poultry products; the Secretary shall appoint two persons to represent producers, one person to represent distributors, and one person to represent processors. The Secretary shall also appoint two persons to represent retailers. In the selection of such members, due consideration shall be given to recommendations of the groups to be represented, and the representatives of producers shall be so selected as to afford cooperative associations of producers with adequate representation. One representative from the Department of Commerce, to be selected by the Secretary of Commerce, and one representative from the Interstate Commerce Commission, to be designated by the Chairman of the Commission, and such officials of the Department of Agriculture as the Secretary of Agriculture may designate shall be ex officio members.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 2, after the word "designate", to strike out "The committee shall meet at least once each year at the call of the chairman or of the executive committee. In order to facilitate the work of such advisory committee and to increase its effectiveness, an executive committee" and insert "The committee shall consist"; in line 8, page 29, after the word "organizations", to strike out the comma and "shall be created by and from the membership of such advisory committee"; in line 9, after the word "The", to strike out "executive"; in line 11, after the words "members of", to strike out "such advisory or executive committee" and insert "the committee"; in line 14, after the words "than the", to strike out "ex officio members" and insert "chairman."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill (H. R. 6932) was read the third time and passed.

AMENDMENT OF FIRST WAR POWERS ACT

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I should like at this time to refer back to Calendar No. 1875, Senate bill 2378. I think we could pass the bill if the Senate were to agree to certain amendments to a similar House bill and pass that bill.

I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 6893, which is No. 1892 on the calendar and is similar to the Senate bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6890) to amend the First War Powers Act, 1941.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I offer the following amendments, and ask for their adoption:

On page 2, line 13, after the article "a" to insert "suit or."

On page 4, line 24, after the article "a" to insert "suit or."

On page 4, line 25, after the word "return", to strike out "or for just compensation."

And on page 10, line 15, after the word "thereof" to strike out "or for just compensation in respect thereof."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendments offered by the Senator from Michigan.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, objection was made originally to consideration of the Senate bill. I want to be sure that the amendments take care of the situation. Under the measure as now amended an alien could bring no suit whatever, even though he were not an enemy alien, but were a resident of Great Britain, for example?

Mr. FERGUSON. That section has been stricken out.

Mr. TAFT. That section has been stricken out entirely?

Mr. FERGUSON. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill (H. R. 6890) was read the third time and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, Senate bill 2378 will be indefinitely postposed.

CONSTRUCTION OF NEW SCHOOL BUILDING IN HUNTER, WIS.

The bill (H. R. 6141) to provide funds for cooperation with the school board of Hunter School District for the construction and equipment of a new school building in the town of Hunter, Sawyer County, Wis., to be available to both Indian and non-Indian children, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALE OF LAND BELONGING TO ALICE SCOTT WHITE

The bill (H. R. 4114) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to sell certain land of Alice Scott White on the Crow Indian Reservation, Mont., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FINANCIAL AID TO THE REPUBLIC OF THE PHILIPPINES

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 181) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to render financial aid to the Republic of the Philippines, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I move that this joint resolution be indefinitely postponed, since the principle is embodied in a House amendment to Senate Joint Resolution 156, which has now been returned to the Senate with House amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York to postpone indefinitely Senate Joint Resolution 181.

The motion was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I now ask the Chair to lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives in which are set forth the House amendments to Senate Joint Resolution 156.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 156), which were on page 1, line 7, to strike out "1952" and insert "1947"; on page 2, line 1, to strike out "1952" and insert "1947"; on page 2, line 7, to strike out "1949" and insert "1947"; on page 2, after line 7, to insert:

SEC. 2. To furnish a market for loans guaranteed or insured under the provisions of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, as amended, Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized, under such terms and conditions and in such manner as it may determine, to purchase directly or through a subsidiary, loans so guaranteed or insured.

On page 2, after line 7, to insert:

SEC. 3. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is hereby authorized to lend or extend credit to the Government of the Republic of the Philippines in an amount or amounts not exceeding in the aggregate $75,000,000 at such time or times before July 1, 1947, and upon such terms and conditions as the Reconstruction Finance Corporation after consultation with the National Advisory Council on International Monetary and Finance Problems shall deem to be warranted by the financial position of the Government of the Republic of the Philippines: Provided, That the rate of interest to be charged in connection with any loan or extension of credit made pursuant to this section shall not be less than 2 percent per annum.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, Senate Joint Resolution 156, which passed the Senate on June 29, 1946, was a simple extension of the life and lending powers of the RFC, to June 30, 1952, and June 30, 1949, respectively. The House amendments, Nos. 1, 2, and 3, have the effect of extending the life and lending powers only to June 30, 1947.

House amendment No. 4 authorizes the RFC to purchase, directly or through a subsidiary, loans guaranteed or insured under the provisions of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944 as amended—the so-called GI bill of rights.

House amendment No. 5 inserts a new section authorizing a credit up to $75,000,000 to the Philippine Republic by the RFC, at interest rates not less than 2 percent per year. This is substantially the provision of Senate Joint Resolution 181 already reported by the Senate Banking and Currency Committee. The only difference is that the Senate resolution authorizes the credit to be advanced from the Treasury of the United States, whereas the House amendment gives this authority to the RFC.

I move to concur in the House amendments.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. REVERCOMB. As pointed out by the able Senator from New York, the measure on the Senate Calendar, Senate Joint Resolution 181, authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to lend up to $75,000,000 to the Philippine Republic.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. REVERCOMB. The change made in the House authorizes the RFC to make the loan up to $75,000,000.

Mr. WAGNER. That amendment was made in the House. The Philippine Republic is in great financial difficulty, and needs the $75,000,000 loan. If we do not agree to this amendment, and the matter has to go back to the House, the chances are that we will get no bill.

Mr. REVERCOMB. It seems to me better to provide a loan by the RFC than a loan under the terms of the Senate joint resolution.

Mr. WAGNER. The amendment was made on the floor of the House. I cannot tell the Senator why it was done, but it was done, and it is before us.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. In either case the International Advisory Council, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the head of the Federal Reserve bank, must be consulted. I see no difference between the two proposals, except that the RFC would make the loan instead of the Secretary of the Treasury. That is probably better.

Mr. WAGNER. There was no explanation given on the floor of the House. However, the loan is needed very badly. That is why I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I certainly hope the motion will prevail, because the situation confronting the Philippine Government is desperate, and action should be had at the earliest possible moment. I hope there will be no objection to the motion of the Senator from New York.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, I merely wish to make the observation that if we are to provide for a loan to the Philippines I believe that the amendment made in the House, providing that the loan be made through the RFC, is preferable to the terms of the Senate joint resolution, making the loan out of the Treasury upon such terms as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe. It seems to me that the loan had better be made by the RFC rather than out of the Treasury.

Mr. TAFT. There is one other thing that should be noted in agreeing to the House amendment and that is that we are extending the life of the RFC only to 1947, instead of 1952, as the Senate provided. I have no objection to that, but it is an important change.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New York.

The motion was agreed to.

TIME LIMIT ON INSTITUTION OF CERTAIN ACTIONS

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the majority leader and also the attention of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY], I ask unanimous consent to revert to House bill 2788, Calendar 1424, a bill to limit the time during which certain actions under the laws of the United States may be brought. I think the Senator from Nebraska has a suggestion for an amendment which might be satisfactory.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, may I ask if recurrence to this measure will occasion very long discussion?

Mr. McCARRAN. I do not believe so. If it did, I would not insist upon it.

Mr. GEORGE. There are some very important measures at the end of the calendar, and I have been patiently allowing recurrence to various orders on the calendar.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, this bill was passed over at my request a while ago, because I had not had an opportunity to look into an amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from Nebraska. I have now examined it, and I have also consulted other Senators. If the Senator from Nebraska will modify his amendment by striking out "two" and inserting "three" in each instance, so as to make the period of the statute of limitations 3 years instead of 2, I shall have no objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, that is satisfactory so far as the chairman of the Judiciary Committee is concerned.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will adopt the substitute, because if we must wait until the next session the period will be practically 3 years anyway, so we had better pass the bill today providing a period of 3 years, rather than wait and pass the bill at the next session.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, I entirely agree with what the Senator from Michigan has just said. I am in favor of adopting the compromise suggestion, making the period 3 years, and taking some action on the bill now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nevada that the Senate recur to House bill 2788, Calendar No. 1424.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2788) to limit the time during which certain actions under the laws of the United States may be brought, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from Kentucky will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That (a) section 16 (b) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended (U. S. C., 1940 ed., title 29, sec. 216 (b)), is amended by inserting at the end thereof a new sentence reading as follows: "No action may be maintained under this subsection in any court unless such action is commenced within 3 years after the cause of action accrued, except that if at any time during such 3 years proper process may not be served on the person liable by reason of his absence from the United States, the period of such absence shall be disregarded in computing such 3-year period."

(b) In the case of a cause of action under section 16 (b) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended, which accrued 18 months or more prior to the date of the enactment of this act, and which on such date of enactment was not barred by any applicable statute of limitations, may, notwithstanding the amendment made by subsection (a) of this section, be maintained under such section 16 (b) if commenced within 6 months after such date of enactment, except that if at any time within the period of limitation under this subsection proper process may not be served on the person liable by reason of his absence from the United States, the period of such absence shall be disregarded in computing such period of limitation.

(c) No liability for unpaid overtime compensation under section 16 (b) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended, accrued prior to the date of the enactment of this act, shall be predicated in any case where it shall appear by a preponderence of the evidence that the employer in good faith regarded the employees as employees with respect to whom the Interstate Commerce Commission has power to establish qualifications and maximum hours of service pursuant to the provisions of section 204 of the Motor Carrier Act, 1935.

(d) Section 16 of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended (U. S. C., 1940 edition, title 29, sec. 216), is amended by inserting at the end thereof a new subsection reading as follows:

"(c) No liability under subsection (b) shall be predicated in any case on any act done or omitted in good faith in accord with any regulation, order, or administrative interpretation or practice, notwithstanding that such regulation, order, interpretation, or practice may, after such act or omission, be amended, rescinded, or be determined by judicial authority to be invalid or of no legal effect."

SEC. 2. (a) Section 2 of the act of June 30, 1936, as amended, known as the Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act (U. S. C., 1940 edition, title 41, sec. 36), is amended by inserting "(a)" after "SEC. 2." and by inserting at the end thereof a new sentence reading as follows: "No action to recover any sum representing the amount of any deductions, rebates, refunds, or underpayment of wages or overtime compensation alleged to be due to any employee engaged in the performance of any contract to which this act is applicable may be maintained under this section in any court unless such action is commenced within 3 years after the cause of action accrued, except that if at any time during such 3-year period proper process may not be served on the person liable by reason of his absence from the United States, the period of such absence shall be disregarded in computing such 3-year period."

(b) In the case of a cause of action under section 2 of the act of June 30, 1936, as amended, known as the Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act, to recover any sum representing the amount of any deductions, rebates, refunds, or underpayment of wages or overtime compensation alleged to be due to any employee engaged in the performance of any contract to which such act is applicable, which cause of action accrued 18 months or more prior to the date of the enactment of this act, and which on such date of enactment was not barred by any applicable statute of limitations, may, notwithstanding the amendment made by subsection (a) of this section, be maintained under such section 2 if commenced within 6 months after such date of enactment, except that if at any time within the period of limitation under this subsection proper process may not be served on the person liable by reason of his absence from the United States, the period of such absence shall be disregarded in computing such period of limitation.

(c) Section 2 of such act of June 30, 1936, as amended, is further amended by inserting at the end thereof the following:

"(b) No liability under this section shall be predicated in any case on any act done or omitted in good faith in accord with any regulation, order, or administrative interpretation or practice, notwithstanding that such regulation, order, interpretation, or practice may, after such act or omission, be amended, rescinded, or be determined by judicial authority to be invalid or of no legal effect."

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the majority leader a question. As I understand, the period has now changed from 2 years to 3 years?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Is the so-called good-faith clause still in the bill?

Mr. BARKLEY. It is still in the amendment.

Mr. MAGNUSON. That appears to be satisfactory to all sides.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is so far as I can discover.

Mr. TUNNELL. Mr. President, I simply wish to say that the 3-year period is satisfactory to those on whose behalf I was objecting. Thirty-seven jurisdictions have a period of 3 years or more, so this provision meets a great deal of the objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill (H. R. 2788) was read the third time and passed.

MARINE INSURANCE IN THE CASE OF CERTAIN EMPLOYEES OF THE WAR DEPARTMENT

The bill (H. R. 1519) relating to marine insurance in the case of certain employees of the War Department who suffered death, injury, or other casualty prior to April 23, 1943, as a result of marine risks was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REEMPLOYMENT RIGHTS FOR PERSONS WHO SERVED IN THE MERCHANT MARINE—BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 3973) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide reemployment rights for persons who leave their positions to serve in the merchant marine, and for other purposes," approved June 23, 1943, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of the bill, to ascertain if the reemployment rights revert back so that in case an employer were sued by a person entitled to employment he could recover compensation up to the present time, even though the law was not previously in existence.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I understood that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE] asked that this bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This is one of the bills which the Senator from Maryland asked to have passed over. He was present when the first one was called.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, this bill was reported from the committee on Friday, and I am sure that the Senator from Maryland wishes to have the bill considered.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator from Maryland asked that it be not considered, because he was not able to be present.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, the request of the Senator from Maryland related not only to House bill 3973, but also House bill 1519, Calendar 1886, which was just passed by unanimous consent. I assume that the Senator from Maryland did not have any amendment to offer to House bill 1519.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Maryland had in mind that he was compelled to be temporarily absent, and that if an explanation were desired he would not be present to make it. However, I do not believe that he objects to the passage of the bill.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, as I understand, the unanimous consent agreement was that House bill 3973 would be passed over until the return of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Unless there is a distinct understanding that these bills will be brought up later, at the conclusion of the call of the calendar, or at some later date, I shall object to the request that they be passed over. They are very important bills.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, without an explanation at the present time, I do object.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from Maryland obtained unanimous consent to take up certain bills for consideration tomorrow. Therefore the bill would come up tomorrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Chair correctly recalls, there was an agreement that certain bills should be passed over until tomorrow.

The bill will be passed over.

IMPROVEMENT OF CREDIT SERVICES TO FARMERS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. RUSSELL submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5991) to simplify and improve credit services to farmers and promote farm ownership by abolishing certain agricultural lending agencies and functions, by transferring assets to the Farmers' Home Corporation, by enlarging the powers of the Farmers' Home Corporation, by authorizing Government insurance of loans to farmers, by creating preferences for loans and insured mortgages to enable veterans to acquire farms, by providing additional specific authority and directions with respect to the liquidation of resettlement projects and rural rehabilitation projects for resettlement purposes, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

S. C., 1940 edition, title 12, secs. 1020i–1020o); (b) all loans identified or referred to in sections 5 (b), 5 (c), and 5 (d) of Executive Order Numbered 6084, dated March 27, 1933, and (c) all other emergency crop production, feed, seed, drought, and rehabilitation loans administered by the Farm Credit Administration on the effective date of this Act. The said Act approved January 29, 1937, is hereby repealed.

"(3) All functions, powers, and duties of the National Housing Agency with respect to property, funds, and other assets which were formerly under the administration or supervision of the Farm Security Administration and were transferred to or consolidated with the National Housing Agency by Executive Order Numbered 9070 of February 24, 1942, except housing projects and except such other properties and assets as are now in the process of liquidation.

"'(C) no compromise or adjustment shall be made upon terms more favorable than recommended by the appropriate County Committee established pursuant to section 42 of this Act.

"'(3) Any claim of $100 or less, which has been due and payable for three years or more, and where the debtor has no assets from which the claim could be collected or is deceased and has left no estate, or has been absent from his last known address for a period of at least two years and his whereabouts cannot be ascertained without undue expense, may be charged off or released by the Secretary upon a report and favorable recommendation of the employee of the Administration having charge of the claim: Provided, That claims of $10 or less may be canceled and released whenever it appears to the Secretary that further collection efforts would be ineffectual or likely to prove uneconomical; and

The Secretary shall file with the Congress, promptly after making such determination, a complete report of the determination, with full information as to the location of all lands comprising such projects, and of the facts taken into account by the Secretary in making the determination. "'(d) Real and personal property comprising such projects which is not determined by the Secretary to be suitable for sale as family-size farms as provided in (b) hereof, or which is not granted or dedicated as provided in (c) hereof, shall within eighteen months after the effective date of the Farmers' Home Administration Act of 1946, either be transferred by the Secretary to appropriate agencies of the United States for disposition as surplus property of the United States or be sold by the Secretary at public or private sale to any individual or corporation at the best price obtainable, after public notice, for cash or on secured credit, without regard to the laws governing the disposition of surplus real or personal property of the United States: Provided, however, That in the case of all sales on credit under this subparagraph (d) the Secretary shall obtain an initial cash payment of at least 20 per centum of the sales price and the remainder shall be paid in equal annual installments within a term not in excess of 5 years: Provided further, That whenever it is found by the Secretary that it is not practicable to dispose of lands reserved for sale pursuant to subparagraph (b) hereof under the provisions of title I of this act, such lands may be sold by the Secretary under the authority of this subparagraph (d).

"'(e) The Secretary shall cause the defense relocation corporations, land-leasing, and land-purchasing associations, and other similar corporations or associations to sell properties to which they hold title in accordance with the limitations and procedures prescribed in this section.

"'(3) to any person, unless the applicant represents in writing, and it is administratively determined by the Secretary, after a certification to such effect by the appropriate county committee, that credit sufficient in amount to finance the actual needs of the applicant is not available to him at the rates (but not exceeding the rate of 5 per centum per annum) and terms prevailing in the community in or near which the applicant resides for loans of similar size and character from commercial banks, cooperative lending agencies, or from any other responsible source.

" 'SECTION 1. (a) The Secretary of Agriculture (hereinafter referred to as the "Secretary") is authorized to make loans and to insure mortgages in the United States and in the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii and in Puerto Rico to persons eligible to receive the benefits of this title to enable such persons to acquire, repair or improve family-size farms, or to refinance indebtedness against undersized or underimproved units when loans are being made or insured by the Secretary to enlarge or improve such units. Loans may also be made to assist borrowers under this title in making the improvements needed to adjust their farming operations to changing conditions.

" '(b) (1) Except with respect to veterans qualified under subsection (b) (2) of this section, only farm tenants, farm laborers, share croppers, and other individuals (including owners of inadequate or underimproved farm units) who obtain, or who recently obtained, the major portion of their income from farming operations, shall be eligible to receive the benefits of this title. In making available the benefits of this title, the Secretary shall give preference to persons who are married, or who have dependent families, and, wherever practicable, to persons who are able to make an initial down payment, or who are owners of livestock and farm implements necessary successfully to carry on farming operations. No person shall be eligible who is not a citizen of the United States.

" '(2) Any veteran (defined herein as a person who served in the land or naval forces of the United States during any war between the United States and any other nation, and who shall have been discharged or released therefrom under conditions other than dishonorable) who intends to engage in farming as a principal occupation, and who meets the requirements of rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary as to industry, experience, character, and other assurances of success as farmers, shall be eligible for the benefits of this title and their applications shall be entitled to preference over those of non-veterans.

" '(c) No loan shall be made, or mortgage insured, for the acquisition, improvement, or enlargement of any farm unless it is of such size and type as the Secretary determines to be sufficient to constitute an efficient family-type farm-management unit and to enable a diligent farm family to carry on successful farming of a type which the Secretary deems can be carried on successfully in the locality in which the farm is situated: Provided, That loans may be made to veterans, or mortgages insured for veterans, as defined in section 1 (b) (2) hereof, who have pensionable disabilities, to enable such veterans to acquire, enlarge, repair, or improve farm units of sufficient size to meet the farming capabilities of such veterans and afford them income which, together with their pensions, will enable them to meet living and operating expenses and the amounts due on their loans.

"'FUNCTIONS OF COUNTY COMMITTEES

"'SEC. 2. (a) The county committees established under section 42 shall—

"'(1) examine applications (filed with the chairman of the county committee, or with such other person as the Secretary may designate) of persons desiring to obtain the assistance of the Secretary in financing the acquisition of farms or farming operations in the county as provided in this Act; and

"'(2) examine and appraise farms in the county with respect to which applications are made.

"'(b) If the committee finds that an applicant is eligible to receive the benefits of this Act, that, in the opinion of the committee, by reason of his character, ability, industry, and experience, he will successfully carry out undertakings required of him under a loan which may be made or insured under this Act, that credit sufficient in amount to finance the actual needs of the applicant, specified in the application, is not available to him at the rates (but not exceeding the rate of 5 per centum per annum) and terms prevailing in the community in or near which the applicant resides for loans of similar size and character from commercial banks, cooperative lending agencies, or from any other responsible source; and that the farm with respect to which the application is made is of such character that there is a reasonable likelihood that the making or insuring of the loan with respect thereto will carry out the purposes of this title, it shall so certify to the Secretary. The committee shall also certify to the Secretary the amount which the committee finds is the fair and reasonable value of the farm based upon its normal earning capacity. The farm shall be appraised by competent employees of the Secretary thoroughly trained in appraisal techniques and the appraisal shall be made available to the county committee and the Secretary for their guidance in determining the value of the farm as specified above.

"'(c) No member of the committee shall participate in any certification under this section with respect to any application or farm in which such member, or any person related to such member within the third degree of consanguinity or affinity has any pecuniary interest, direct or indirect, or in which any of them had such interest within one year prior to the date of certification.

"'(d) No loan shall be made for any purpose under this Act and no mortgage shall be insured under this Act, unless certification by the committee, as required under this section, has been made with respect to the applicant applying for the loan and with respect to the farm which is to be taken as security either for an insured or an uninsured mortgage.

"'TERMS OF LOANS

"'SEC. 3. (a) Loans made under this title shall be in such amount (not in excess of the amount certified by the county committee to be the value of the farm) as may be necessary to enable the borrower to acquire the farm and for necessary repairs and improvements thereon, and shall be secured by a first mortgage or deed of trust on the farm. Loans may not be made for the acquisition or enlargement of farms which have a value, as acquired, enlarged, or improved, in excess of the average value of efficient family-type farm-management units, as determined by the Secretary, in the county, parish, or locality where the farm is located.

"'(b) The instruments under which the loan is made and security given therefor shall—

"'(2) provide for the payment of interest on the unpaid balance of the loan at the rate of 3½ per centum per annum;

"'(3) provide for the repayment of the unpaid balance of the loan, together with interest thereon, in installments in accordance with amortization schedules prescribed by the Secretary;

"'(4) be in such form and contain such covenants as the Secretary shall prescribe to secure the payment of the unpaid balance of the loan, together with interest thereon, to protect the security, and to assure that the farm will be maintained in repair, and waste and exhaustion of the farm prevented, and that such proper farming conservation practices as the Secretary shall prescribe will be carried out;

"'(5) provide that the borrower shall pay taxes and assessments on the farm to the proper taxing authorities, and insure and pay for insurance on farm buildings;

"'(6) provide that upon the borrower's assigning, selling, or otherwise transferring the farm, or any interest therein, without the consent of the Secretary, or upon default in the performance of, or upon any failure to comply with, any covenant or condition contained in such instruments, or upon involuntary transfer or sale, the Secretary may declare the amount unpaid immediately due and payable, and that, without the consent of the Secretary, no final payment shall be accepted, or release of the Secretary's interest be made, less than five years after the making of the loan; and

"'(7) contain the provisions for refinancing specified in section 44 (c).

"'(c) Except as provided in paragraph (6) of subsection (b), no instrument provided for in this section shall prohibit the prepayment of any sum due under it.

"'(d) No provision of section 75, as amended, of the Act entitled "An Act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898 (U. S. C. 1940 ed., title 11, sec. 203), other applicable in respect to any indebtedness incurred under this title by any beneficiary thereof, shall be applicable in respect of such indebtedness until such beneficiary has repaid at least 15 per centum thereof.

"'EQUITABLE DISTRIBUTION OF LOANS AND MORTGAGE INSURANCE

"'SEC. 4. In making loans and insuring mortgages under this title, the amount which is devoted to such purposes during any fiscal year shall be distributed equitably among the several States and Territories on the basis of farm population and the prevalence of tenancy, as determined by the Secretary: Provided, That there may be distributed to each State such amounts as are necessary to insure mortgages or finance loans pursuant to all bona fide applications from veterans qualified under section 1 hereof: Provided further, That there may be disbursed in any fiscal year to each State or Territory such amount not in excess of $100,000 as is determined by the Secretary to be necessary to finance loans in such State or Territory under this title.

"'APPROPRIATION

"'SEC. 5. To carry out the provisions of this title with respect to tenant-purchase loans, there is authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $50,000,000 for each fiscal year beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and such further sums as may be necessary in carrying out the provisions of this title during such fiscal year, with respect to tenant purchase loans and insured mortgages.

"'FARM TENANT MORTGAGE INSURANCE FUND

"'SEC. 11. (a) There is hereby created a fund, to be known as the "farm tenant-mortgage insurance fund" (hereinafter in this title referred to as the "fund"), which shall be used by the Secretary as a revolving fund for carrying out the provisions of this title with respect to mortgages insured under section 12 and to mortgages accepted for the account of the fund under section 13. There is authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary the sum of $25,000,000 to constitute such fund.

"'(b) Moneys in the fund not needed for current operations shall be deposited with the Treasurer of the United States to the credit of the fund or invested in direct obligations of the United States or obligations guaranteed as to principal and interest by the United States. The Secretary may purchase, with money in the fund, any notes issued by the Secretary to the Secretary of the Treasury to obtain money for the fund.

"'(c) All amounts deposited in or credited to the fund and the proceeds of investments of amounts in the fund shall be used only for purposes to which the fund is specifically authorized to be devoted under this title and shall not be diverted to any other use.

"'(d) The Secretary shall include in his annual report a complete statement with respect to the status of the fund.

"'INSURANCE OF MORTGAGES

"'SEC. 12 (a) The Secretary is authorized, upon application of a prospective mortgagor or mortgagee under a first mortgage eligible for insurance under this title, to insure such mortgage and to make commitments for the insurance of any such mortgage prior to the date of its execution.

"'(b) The aggregate amount of principal obligations on all mortgages insured under this title, on all mortgages with respect to which commitments to insure have been made, and on all mortgages accepted for the account of the fund and not disposed of under section 14 shall not exceed $100,000,000 in any one fiscal year. With respect to any fiscal year, the amount available for insurance, commitment and acceptance of mortgages under this title shall be distributed among the several States and Territories on the basis provided in section 4 and preferences shall be given to mortgages executed by veterans qualified under section 1.

"'(c) In order for a mortgage to be eligible under this title—

"'(1) the person obligated to pay thereunder shall be a person who would be eligible under section 1 for a loan under title I;

"'(2) the farm mortgaged shall be one with respect to which, under section 1 (c), a loan could be made under title I;

"'(3) there shall be an appropriate certification by the county committee as required by section 2 of this Act;

"'(4) the mortgage instruments shall comply with section 3 (b), except that the base rate of interest shall be 2½ per centum per annum;

"'(5) the principal obligation (and fees and other charges chargeable under subsection (d) of this section) shall not exceed 90 per centum of the reasonable value of the farm and necessary repairs and improvements thereon, as such values are certified by the county committee pursuant to section 2 (b);

"'(6) the mortgage instruments shall contain a covenant to pay to the Secretary the initial and annual charges provided for in subsections (d) and (e) of this section, and a covenant to pay to the Secretary, as collection agent for the mortgagee, the amounts payable by the mortgagor to the mortgagee under the mortgage; and

"'(7) the mortgage instruments shall contain a stipulation (not binding upon the Secretary) that the holder of the mortgage will accept the benefits provided by section 13 in lieu of any right of foreclosure which he may have against the property and any right to a deficiency judgment against the mortgagor on account of the mortgage.

"'(d) The Secretary shall require the payment by the mortgagor or mortgagee of such initial fees for inspection, appraisal, and other charges as it finds necessary and such amounts may be included in the principal obligation of the mortgage, and the payment of such delinquency charges and default reserves as it finds necessary. The proceeds of such fees shall be deposited in the Treasury for use for administrative expense as provided in subparagraph (e) (2) hereof.

"'(e) (1) The Secretary shall collect from the mortgagor, upon insurance of the mortgage, an initial charge of 1 per centum of the principal obligation of the mortgage and annually thereafter when payment of an installment of principal and interest is due, a charge of 1 per centum of the principal obligation remaining unpaid after such installment is paid, without taking into account delinquent payments or prepayments. If the principal obligation of the mortgage is paid in full in less than five years after the time when the mortgage was entered into, the Secretary may require payment by the mortgagor of a charge equal to the amount of the last annual charge required of the mortgagor.

"'(2) One-half of the amount paid as charges in pursuance of this subsection shall be the premium for insurance and shall be deposited in the fund and may be used only for purposes to which the fund may be devoted. The other half of the amounts so paid shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the Secretary and shall be available only for administrative expenses to carry out the provisions of this title, relating to mortgage insurance.

"'(f) (1) The Secretary shall promptly remit to the mortgagee under any mortgage insured under this title any sums collected by it as agent for the mortgagee. The Secretary shall promptly advise any such mortgagee of any default by the mortgagor.

"'(2) If within thirty days after the due date of any installment the mortgagor under an insured mortgage has failed to pay to the Secretary the amount due, the Secretary shall notwithstanding the amount paid is less than the interest and principal due, pay the amount of such principal and interest to the mortgagee, less the amount of any previous prepayments.

"'(3) Payments to mortgagees under paragraph (2) shall be advanced out of the fund for the account of the mortgagor. Such advances shall be repaid to the fund out of the first available collections received from the mortgagor, with interest thereon at the rate fixed in the insured mortgage, and shall be added to subsequent installments.

"'(g) Any contract of insurance executed by the Secretary under this section shall be conclusive evidence of the eligibility of the mortgage for insurance, and the validity of any contract of insurance so executed shall be incontestable in the hands of any holder thereof from the date of the execution of such contract, except for fraud or misrepresentation of which such holder has actual knowledge.

"'(h) The Secretary may, at any time, for good cause shown and under such terms and conditions as he may prescribe, consent to the release of the mortgagor from his liability under the mortgage or the credit instruments secured thereby, or consent to the release of parts of the mortgaged property from the lien of the mortgage.

"'(i) The holder of any mortgage insured under this title may, upon notice to the Secretary, assign such mortgage together with the accompanying note and contract of insurance and the assignee thereof shall thereupon become entitled to all the benefits of such contract of insurance: Provided, That no such assignment shall be binding upon the Secretary until notice thereof has been given the Secretary and the Secretary has acknowledged receipt of such notice.

"'PAYMENT OF INSURANCE

"'SEC. 13. (a) In any case in which the mortgagor under a mortgage insured under section 12 is in default for more than twelve months, the mortgagee shall be entitled to receive the benefit of the insurance as hereinafter provided, upon assignment to the Secretary of (1) all the mortgagee's rights and interests arising under the mortgage so in default; (2) all claims of the mortgagee against the mortgagor or others, arising out of the mortgage transaction; (3) all policies of title or other insurance and all surety bonds and other guaranties and any and all claims thereunder relating to the mortgage or the mortgaged property; (4) any balance of the mortgage loan not advanced to the mortgagor; and (5) any cash or property held by the mortgagee, or to which he is entitled, as deposit made for the account of the mortgagor and which has not been applied in reduction of the principal of the mortgage indebtedness; and upon transfer to the Secretary of such originals or copies of records, documents, books, papers and accounts relating to the mortgage transaction, as the Secretary prescribes. Upon such assignment and transfer, the Secretary shall pay to the mortgagee, in cash, an amount equal to the value of the mortgage and the note and mortgage shall thereupon become a part of the fund. For the purposes of this subsection, the value of the mortgage shall be determined, in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary, by adding to the amount of the original principal obligation of the mortgage which was unpaid on the date of default, the amount of all unpaid interest and the amount of all payments which have been made by the mortgagee for taxes, special assessments, water rates, and other payments in discharge of liens which are prior to the mortgage, and insurance on the property mortgaged, and by deducting from such total amount any amount received on account of the mortgage indebtedness after such default.

"'(b) If there should not be sufficient cash in the fund to enable the Secretary to make payments to mortgagees as provided in subsection (a) of this section, the Secretary may make and issue notes to the Secretary of the Treasury to obtain funds to make such payments. Such notes shall be signed by the Secretary or by his duly authorized representatives and shall be negotiable. Such notes shall bear interest, payable semiannually, at a rate equal to the average rate of interest, computed to the end of the calendar month next preceding the date of issue, borne by all interest bearing obligations of the United States then forming a part of the public debt, and shall have such maturities as the Secretary may determine with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

"'(c) The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to purchase any notes issued by the Secretary pursuant to this section and any renewals thereof and for such purchases may use as a public debt transaction the proceeds from the sale of any securities issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which such securities may be issued under such Act, as amended, are hereby extended to include any such purchases. All redemptions, purchases, and sales by the Secretary of the Treasury of such notes shall be treated as public debt transactions of the United States.

"'(d) In any case in which the mortgagor violates any covenant or conditions of his mortgage, the Secretary may require the mortgagee to assign such mortgage, together with the incidents thereto, upon payment of the value of the mortgage determined in accordance with this section.

"'PROCEDURE WITH RESPECT TO MORTGAGES IN DEFAULT

"'SEC. 14. (a) Upon accepting the assignment of any insured mortgage, the Secretary shall ascertain whether or not the mortgagor (which term as used in this section shall include the mortgagor or his heirs or assigns) desires to remain in possession of the mortgaged property. If the mortgagor does not desire to remain in possession of the mortgaged property or if the Secretary is unable to make the findings prescribed by the next sentence, the Secretary may proceed to foreclose the mortgage. If the mortgagor desires to remain in possession of the mortgaged property and if the Secretary finds that the mortgagor (1) has made reasonable efforts to meet all defaulted payments and to comply with the other covenants and conditions of his mortgage and (2) will probably be able to meet such defaulted payments within five years after the maturity date or dates of the defaulted payments, the Secretary may enter into an agreement with the mortgagor providing for the payment of such defaulted payments together with interest thereon, at such times not later than five years after the maturity date or dates as the Secretary may deem to be within the probable future means of the mortgagor. Should any mortgagor with whom the Secretary has entered into such agreement thereafter fail to meet any payments, the Secretary may proceed to foreclose the mortgage.

"'(b) Amounts realized under section 51 on account of property which was subject to an insured mortgage shall be deposited in the fund. Amounts payable by the Secretary under section 50 (a) as taxes, with respect to such property, shall be paid out of the fund.

"'INSURED MORTGAGES ELIGIBLE AS INVESTMENTS

"'SEC. 15. (a) The first paragraph of section 24, chapter 6, of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended (U. S. C., 1940 ed., title 12, sec. 371) (relating to loans on farm lands by member banks), is hereby amended by inserting after the words "National Housing Act", the following: "or which are insured by the Secretary of Agriculture pursuant to title I of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act."

"'(b) Section 35 of chapter III of the Act entitled "An Act to regulate the business of life insurance in the District of Columbia", approved June 19, 1934 (D. C. Code, 1940 edition, title 35, sec. 535), is amended by inserting in paragraph (3a) after the words "Federal Housing Administrator" the following: "or by the Secretary of Agriculture pursuant to title I of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act."'

"ACCOUNTS AND CLAIMS OF DEFENSE RELOCATION CORPORATION

"SEC. 6. (a) The Comptroller General of the United States is authorized and directed to allow credit in the accounts of disbursing and certifying officers for advances made in good faith on behalf of the Department of Agricultural to defense relocation corporations and land purchasing associations.

"CONSOLIDATION OF AGRICULTURAL CREDIT AND SERVICE OFFICES

"SEC. 7. The Secretary of Agriculture and the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration are hereby directed, wherever practicable, to make suitable arrangements whereby all field offices under their supervision or direction extending agricultural credit or furnishing agricultural services to farmers to utilize the same or adjacent offices to the end that eligible farmers in each locality will be enabled to obtain their agricultural credit and services at one central point.

"(1) The functions, powers, and duties vested in the Secretary of Agriculture by this Act and by the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, as amended, except insofar as such functions, powers, or duties involve or are necessary to the administration of title III of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, shall be vested in the Agricultural Credit Agency;

"(3) The functions, powers, and duties vested in the Solicitor of the Department of Agriculture and attorneys of his office by this Act and the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act shall be vested in the general counsel and attorneys of the Agricultural Credit Agency, respectively.

ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE IN CERTAIN CASES—BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 43) to safeguard the admission of evidence in certain cases was announced as next in order.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Let the bill be passed over.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I wonder whether the Senator who objected will kindly withdraw his objection, so that we may make a very brief explanation.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Very well.

Mr. McCARRAN. This bill comes from the Department of Justice. It comes by reason of the decision in the case of McNabb against United States, in which it was held that a confession given after the party had been detained for a brief length of time was not admissible.

As the bill is now before the Senate, it merely provides the following:

Failure to observe the requirement of law as to the time within which a person under arrest must be brought before a committing officer shall not render inadmissible any evidence that is otherwise admissible.

Let me say that the Department of Justice is embarrassed from day to day by reason of the fact that some party in a case has been detained perhaps 2 or 3 or 4 hours or a day, and then the confession is taken, and then under the McNabb case it is held that the confession cannot be used as evidence against the party.

So I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, I wish to present a different view, which I think may be taken. My objection is made because if this bill is passed as it is written, the arresting officers will be invited to violate the law and to hold a man an undue length of time under arrest.

I have no desire whatsoever to object to the passage of any law that will assist in the proper enforcement of the law. But it seems to me that we cannot abrogate one of the basic principles, namely, that we must protect the innocent in case of arrest. That principle is best enunciated under the law of this country which has to do, I believe, with the rule which must be applied when a person is arrested and charged with violation of a Federal law. Under those circumstances he must be arraigned and brought before a commissioner within a reasonable length of time. That is the requirement of law.

In the McNabb case, the Supreme Court held that where the arresting officers obtain confessions before arraignment and before bringing the person before a commissioner for hearing, such confessions cannot be used as evidence. The very reason the Supreme Court arrived at that ruling was to prevent the use of various methods of duress in obtaining confessions.

The bill we are asked to pass provides that—

> Failure to observe the requirement of law as to the time within which a person under arrest must be brought before a committing officer shall not render inadmissible any evidence that is otherwise admissible.

Mr. President, I wish to say that that is an invitation to the arresting officer not to obey the law in connection with bringing a man before the committing officer. I think it would be most unwise and unsound and unwholesome to enact a statute which would say to an arresting officer, "You are excused from obeying the law as to bringing arrested persons before committing officers; and although you know what the law is—namely, to bring arrested persons before a committing officer as soon as may be reasonable—we say that what you have done if you do not obey that law is excused."

It seems to me that to say that to an officer who holds a person who is arrested an undue length of time or who intentionally violates the statute with reference to bringing a man promptly before a committing officer, would be most undesirable.

There is no reason in the world to have a law which requires the arresting officer to give a man an early arraignment or a preliminary hearing, if in the next breath we say that failure to observe that law does not bar the admission of evidence which otherwise would be admissible.

I do not wish to take any step which would aid the lawbreaker or the criminal, but at the same time the general public must be protected. One of the very basic principles of our law is the presumption of innocence and the protection of the general public. The people must be protected against an invitation to law violation or, I may say, against an absolute excuse to an arresting officer who violates the law which the Congress laid down in the first place. So I shall have to object.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. REVERCOMB. I do.

Mr. FERGUSON. I should like to have the Senator withhold his objection until I have an opportunity to say a word about the matter.

Mr. President, at first glance this bill might indicate that we were attempting to take certain rights from defendants in criminal cases. The able Senator from West Virginia has indicated that it would allow arresting officers to disobey the law, and thus take advantage of defendants in a certain way.

I went rather carefully into this matter after it came to the Judiciary Committee. I finally came to the conclusion that we should pass this bill. As I understand the situation, today many cases are being dismissed on the sole ground that a confession or admission made while a person was under arrest could not be used; and insofar as our law-enforcement officials are concerned, there is a break-down in the administration of justice.

I think all the constitutional rights of a defendant should be preserved, but I do not feel that the mere holding of a person longer than the time he is allowed to be held before arraignment should entirely wipe out and destroy the rights of law-enforcement officers.

This bill does not sanction the holding of any person an undue length of time. It merely says that if the evidence is otherwise admissible, the mere fact that the person was held longer than permitted by law before he was arraigned shall not make inadmissible a confession which otherwise would be admissible.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I am glad to yield.

Mr. McMAHON. Does not the Senator feel, however, that the exemption provided by this bill would encourage law-enforcement officers to hold prisoners for a considerable length of time before they were brought before committing officers, rather than to have them immediately arraigned?

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, if the Senator from Michigan will permit me to say a word at this point, let me state in respect to the matter mentioned by the Senator from Connecticut that the respective statutes make provision regarding the length of time a party in custody may be held. It was with reference to those statutes that the decision in the McNabb case was rendered.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I do not think the enactment of this measure would result in having a person held longer than he otherwise would be, or would be an incentive to hold him longer, because every person arrested has certain rights under the false imprisonment law, and so forth, to proceed against anyone who illegally holds him; and if he is held longer than the law provides, he can secure his just remedy.

This bill would merely mean that the people's rights would not be destroyed.

Mr. President, if the able Senator from West Virginia does not object, I hope we may take up the bill at the earliest possible date, even during the present term of Congress, and have a vote taken on it, because I think the enactment of this measure is vital and important in connection with the work of our law-enforcement officers, and I think it should receive our prompt attention.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. PEPPER. Has objection been made to the consideration of this bill? If not, I shall interpose an objection.

Mr. REVERCOMB. That makes two objections.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being heard, the bill will be passed over.

A MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE AT EAST ST. LOUIS

AN OHIO RIVER BRIDGE NEAR LAWRENCEBURG, IND.

The bill (H. R. 6899) to authorize the Indiana State Toll Bridge Commission to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge, or a free bridge, across the Ohio River at or near Lawrenceburg, Dearborn County, Ind., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF SOCIAL SECURITY ACT AND INTERNAL REVENUE CODE

The bill (H. R. 7037) to amend the Social Security Act and the Internal Revenue Code, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I think I must object to having the bill taken up during the call of the calendar. I think this matter is of such tremendous importance that we should have more time to discuss it, rather than be limited by the 5-minute rule, as we are during the call of the calendar.

I have no objection to taking up the bill now, if the Senator in charge of the bill wishes to make such a motion. But I think there should be some discussion of the amendments.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, if this measure is to be passed at this session, it is necessary that quick action be taken upon it, so that it may be returned to the House of Representatives. Even now it is doubtful whether the House will have an opportunity to pass on the amendments which may be adopted by the Senate. Of course, I am frank to concede that the measure is important.

Let me make a statement about it. While there are seven titles to the bill, title I simply freezes the social security tax at 1 percent, rather than to have it increased to 2½ percent next January. The Senate has acted upon that matter three or four times.

The language of title II of the bill was passed by the Senate approximately 6 or 8 weeks ago, and there have been no changes made in it by the House except those of purely technical nature.

Title III of the bill provides for unemployment compensation for maritime workers. That is merely a provision of a bill which the Senate passed 12 months ago, and which has been before the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives since then.

Title V is purely technical. It relates to State grants for old-age assistance, aid to dependent children, and aid to the blind. The matters contained under that title present an important subject matter for the consideration of the Senate.

The present rate of $40 would be increased to $50. That, of course, would create a liability on the Federal Government for an additional $10 a month in the case of old-age assistance, aid to dependent children, and aid to the blind.

Title VI of the bill simply provides for a study to be made by the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation of all aspects of social security, and a report be made to the Congress next year. The language under that title is substantially the same as that contained in a measure which was introduced by the distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], and was passed by the Senate sometime last year.

Mr. President, three of the titles of the bill have already been acted upon by the Senate. Title I of the bill is not at all new to the Senate. It merely involves freezing for the calendar year 1947 the Federal contribution tax of 1 percent against the employer and 1 percent against the employee.

Title V of the bill, which introduces the variable-grant principle, is, of course, important.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I shall be glad to have the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill at this time without regard to the 5-minute rule, if I can obtain unanimous consent of the Senate that consideration of the bills be proceeded with. I may say to the Senator from Kentucky that I understand his program, and I shall be willing to have the bill laid aside, if necessary, in order to carry out his program.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I was not present when the distinguished Senator began speaking. I do not know what are the intentions of the majority leader and the Senator from Georgia. But some of us have certain amendments which we desire to propose, and there will be some argument which we shall feel compelled to make.

Mr. GEORGE. That is why I ask unanimous consent that the bill be taken up without regard to the 5-minute rule.

Mr. DOWNEY. Would it then be the desire of the majority leader and the distinguished Senator from Georgia to attempt to complete consideration of the bill tonight?

Mr. GEORGE. If possible, yes; because unless the bill goes to the House by tomorrow there will be no liklihood of the House acting upon it. I may say to the Senator from California that there is a high probability that the House will not act upon it in any event.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, still reserving the right to object, while it is my own intention to make my argument on the bill as brief as possible, the subject matter of the bill is of great importance to millions of our people. I should like to see an arrangement made to take up the bill tomorrow rather than tonight. I see no chance of finishing it by 7:30 tonight. The unanimous-consent request of the Senator would not limit us in our debate, would it?

Mr. GEORGE. Not at all. We could proceed as far as possible with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. DOWNEY. I would make no objection to the request of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, if the unanimous consent request of the Senator from Georgia is granted, will it result in interfering with the Senate's consideration of a bill on the calendar which was temporarily passed over.

Mr. GEORGE. I would be entirely willing to consent that consideration of the bill be temporarily laid aside in order to take up other bills.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate recur to Calendar No. 1864, Senate bill 2127. I made an objection to the Senate considering the bill when it was called in the first instance.

Mr. GEORGE. If I can obtain unanimous consent that the Senate proceed this afternoon to the consideration of the bill to which I have been referring, I will agree temporarily to lay aside consideration of the bill in order to take up and consider other bills.

Mr. FERGUSON. Consideration of the bill to which I refer would take only a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I object at this time.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I shall be compelled to move that the Senate proceed to consider the bill because I will not assume the responsibility of permitting the bill to die in the Senate. Although the House did not message the bill to the Senate until last Friday, the Senate Finance Committee expected that the bill would be acted upon by the Senate. The committee examined the bill carefully and made a study of it.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I did not object to the Senate proceeding to consider the bill about which the Senator from Georgia has been talking. I had reference to the request of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. FERGUSON. Will the Senator be willing to receive an explanation as to how some of us wish to have the bill amended?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I shall be glad to hear an explanation.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield to me in order that I may make such explanation?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Georgia has expired. The question is on agreeing to the unanimous consent request of the Senator from Georgia that the Senate proceed to consider House bill 7037.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McCARRAN. As I understand the parliamentary situation, we have not yet concluded the call of the Consent Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. We are now discussing the last bill on the calendar.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; we had reached the last bill. I will renew my request after the bills which have been temporarily passed over on the calendar are disposed of by the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, under a reservation to object, I wish to make a statement to the Senator from Georgia and to other Senators.

It had been my purpose to move, at the conclusion of the call of the calendar, to proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 628, House bill 7, known as the poll tax bill. It was also my purpose to file a petition for cloture after the bill had been made the unfinished business. The petition would be voted upon next Wednesday. It has appeared to me that if I am permitted to file the petition today there will be no need between now and Wednesday for the Senate to debate the matter. If permitted to make the bill the unfinished business and to file my petition, I believe the Senate could then temporarily lay the bill aside for the consideration of such other bills as may be urgent, until a vote is had on the cloture petition on Wednesday, at which time we would know whether we could bring the bill to a vote.

I realize the importance of the bill about which the Senator from Georgia has been speaking. It was voted for by the Committee on Finance a few days ago, and should be considered. But I believe that under such an arrangement as the one which I have proposed, we could have practically all day tomorrow for the consideration of bills of the nature of those to which I have referred, including the bill of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President——

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, before the Senator from Kentucky made the statement which he has just made, I thought I would state, and I now do, that the bill of which the Senator from Georgia speaks is one of the most important bills ever to come before this body. The Senator from Georgia said that he did not know what the House might or might not do with regard to the bill. I hope that the Senate will never recess or adjourn until it has given consideration to this bill, which means so much to the poor people of this country. It is far more important to the working people and the poor people in the South than are such measures as the poll-tax bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in my judgment the program which I have suggested would not only not interfere with the consideration of the bill which the Senator from Georgia has discussed, but it would actually facilitate its disposal. It was for that reason that I felt that I should make the statement which I have made.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I am very much in favor of the bill which the Senator from Georgia has discussed. I hope that the Senate will consider it. But when he refers to the Consent Calendar, does he mean that such bills as the Senate has passed over are still to be considered on the unanimous-consent basis?

Mr. GEORGE. I referred to those bills which had been temporarily passed over.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. But still there are bills to be considered on the unanimous-consent basis?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; under the rule.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I have given notice that I am going to call up Calendar No. 494, Senate bill 1250, for the relief of certain claimants who suffered losses and sustained damages as the result of the campaign carried out by the Federal Government for the eradication of the Mediterranean fruitfly in the State of Florida. I trust that no arrangements at this time will interfere with that notice. If I have to do so, I shall move that the bill be taken up at the present time, to be considered in due order. I do not know what the arrangement is for the business of the Senate. As I stated this morning, an identical bill is on the House Calendar, and can be considered now and passed, and this is the last opportunity I shall have. I have sponsored this measure for the past 7 years, much time has been devoted to it, and much money spent in examining into the claims. A joint committee has recommended that the claims be paid. I shall have to insist that the bill be considered at this time, or tomorrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question before the Senate is the request of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] for unanimous consent to proceed with House bill 7037, proposing an amendment to the Social Security Act. Is there objection?

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, I understand that coupled with that statement is the request that the 5-minute limitation shall not apply to any of the arguments on the bill.

Mr. GEORGE. Exactly. The request is made in lieu of a formal motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection——

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I know of one Senator who desires to make a 2-hour speech on the bill, and I should like to know from the majority leader what effect that would have on legislation this week.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I never know what effect a 2-hour speech from any Senator will have on legislation.

Mr. GUFFEY. I am not going to make the speech.

Mr. BARKLEY. Our legislative program is in such condition that I hope no Senator will feel compelled to make a 2-hour speech.

Mr. GUFFEY. He can do it.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask the Senator from Georgia to withhold his request for a moment, to see whether I can carry out the program I had in mind, by moving that another bill be made the unfinished business, and, then, if that motion carries, asking that it be temporarily laid aside until the Senator's bill can be considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. RUSSELL. Reserving the right to object, I wish to submit a parliamentary inquiry. In the event the Senator from Kentucky moved to take up the bill he has mentioned, and my distinguished colleague were to ask to proceed to the consideration of his bill, what would be the status of a bill on the calendar that was temporarily passed over? What right would the sponsors of that bill have?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The right at any time to ask that it be taken up by unanimous consent. That would be the only way it could be taken up.

Mr. BARKLEY. Unanimous consent could be requested just as well as if we were proceeding under the call of the calendar.

Mr. RUSSELL. We always have a right to ask unanimous consent to take up a bill, but as a rule when other legislation is pending it is more difficult to get it up than on a call of the calendar.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, if the matter in the hands of the Senator from Michigan could be cleared away, that would remove one hurdle, and it would take only a minute.

EVACUATION CLAIMS COMMISSION

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to revert to Calendar 1864, Senate bill 2127, and if the objection may be withdrawn, I can present my amendment to the bill and I think we may be able to have it agreed to.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I should like to have the amendment stated.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, my objection was——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. One moment. Does the Senator from Georgia withhold his request temporarily?

Mr. GEORGE. I am withholding it, unless this matter shall lead to debate. If so, I shall be obliged to insist on some action by the Senate.

Mr. FERGUSON. It is under the 5-minute rule, and I hope it will not take that long.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2442) to create an Evacuation Claims Commission under the general supervision of the Secretary of the Interior and to provide for powers, duties, and functions thereof, and for other purposes.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, my chief objection was that we were placing the authority in the hands of the Department of the Interior. So I propose an amendment, which appears to be agreeable to the able Senator from Nevada, on page 1, line 3 to strike out the words "in the Department of the Interior, under the general supervision of the Secretary of the Interior," and insert "a Commission to consist of three members to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to be known as."

Then at the bottom of page 1, line 9, I propose to strike out "The Commission shall consist of a chairman and two other members who shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior." That runs over on page 2, lines 1 and 2. Then on page 5, line 24, the words "Secretary of the Interior" are to be stricken out and the word "Commission" inserted, and on page 9, line 2, the words "Secretary of the Interior" are to be stricken out and the word "President" inserted.

With those amendments, Mr. President, I should have no objection, and I feel that the bill should be passed.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, there is a further amendment suggested by the Senator from Nevada which I desire inserted in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendments.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, the words included by the able Senator from North Dakota were, on page 2, line 8, after the word "person", to strike out "of Japanese ancestry" and insert "excluded from west coast military areas, Alaska and Hawaii."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the amendments.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 3, it is proposed to strike out "in the Department of the Interior under the general supervision of the Secretary of the Interior," and insert "a Commission to consist of three Members, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to be known as."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 7, it is proposed to strike out the words "of Japanese ancestry."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 8, after the word "person", it is proposed to insert "excluded from west coast military areas, Alaska and Hawaii."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 9, it is proposed to strike out "The Commission shall consist of the chairman and two other Members who shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 5, line 24, it is proposed to strike out "Secretary of the Interior" and insert "Commission."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 9, line 2, it is proposed to strike out "Secretary of the Interior" and insert the word "President."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby established a Commission, to consist of three members to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to be known as the Evacuation Claims Commission, with authority as hereinafter defined to adjudicate claims arising out of the evacuation or exclusion of persons from west coast military areas, Alaska, and Hawaii subsequent to December 7, 1941. Two members shall constitute a quorum and the agreement of two members shall be sufficient for the transaction of any business of the Commission.

JURISDICTION

SEC. 2. The Commission shall have jurisdiction to adjudicate any claim by a person of Japanese ancestry against the United States arising on or after December 7, 1941, when such claim is not compensated for by insurance or otherwise and is substantiated in such manner as the Commission may prescribe, for damage to or loss or destruction of real or personal property (including without limitation damage to or loss or destruction of personal property bailed to or in the custody of the Government or any agent thereof), or other impairment of assets, that fairly arises out of or is a reasonable and natural consequence of the evacuation or exclusion of such person by the appropriate military commander from a military area in Arizona, California, Oregon, or Washington or from Alaska or Hawaii, under authority of Executive Order No. 9066, dated February 19, 1942 (3 C. F. R. Cum. Supp., 1092), section 67 of the act of April 30, 1900 (48 U. S. C. 532), or Executive Order No. 9489, dated October 18, 1944 (3 C. F. R., 1944 Supp., 45). As used herein evacuation shall include voluntary departure from a military area prior to but in anticipation of an order of exclusion therefrom. Existence or intervention of other causes affecting the damage or loss, including action or nonaction by the claimant or his representatives, shall be considered by the Commission in determining the amount of relief that will be fair and equitable according to the facts as they appear in each case.

LIMITATIONS; CLAIMS NOT TO BE CONSIDERED

SEC. 3. (a) The Commission shall receive claims for a period of 18 months from the date of approval of this act. All claims not presented within that time shall be forever barred.

(b) The Commission shall not consider any claim—

(1) by or on behalf of any person who after December 7, 1941, was voluntarily or involuntarily deported from the United States to Japan or who is otherwise resident in a foreign country;

(2) for damage or loss arising out of action taken by any Federal agency pursuant to sections 4067, 4068, 4069, and 4070 (relating to alien enemies) of the Revised Statutes, as amended (50 U. S. C. 21–24), or pursuant to the Trading With the Enemy Act, as amended (50 U. S. C. App. and Supp. 1–31 616);

(3) for damage or loss to any property, or interest therein, vested in the United States pursuant to said Trading With the Enemy Act, as amended; and

(4) for damage or loss on account of death or personal injury, personal inconvenience, physical hardship, or mental suffering.

HEARINGS; EVIDENCE; RECORDS

SEC. 4. (a) The Commission shall give reasonable notice to the interested parties and an opportunity for them to be heard and to present evidence before making a final determination upon any claim.

(b) Any relevant evidence having probative value shall be considered by the Commission in its inquiries. For the purpose of any hearing or investigation authorized under this act the provisions of sections 9 and 10 (relating to examination of documentary evidence, attendance of witnesses, and production of books, papers, and documents) of the Federal Trade Commission Act of September 26, 1914, as amended (15 U. S. C. 49, 50), are hereby made applicable to the jurisdiction, powers, and duties of the Commission. Any person appointed to examine witnesses may be authorized by the Commission to issue subpenas to procure attendance of witnesses or production of documents and to appoint an officer to serve the same. Subpenas may be served personally, by registered mail, by telegraph, or by leaving a copy thereof at the residence or principal place of business of the person required to be served. A verified return by the individual so serving the same, setting forth the manner of service, shall be proof of service, as shall be the return receipt or telegraph receipt when service is by registered mail or telegraph, respectively. On request the United States marshals or their deputies shall serve such process in their respective districts.

(c) The Commission shall have a seal, which shall be judicially noticed.

(d) A written record shall be kept of all hearings and proceedings of the Commission and shall be open to public inspection.

ADJUDICATIONS; PAYMENT OF AWARDS; EFFECT OF ADJUDICATIONS

SEC. 5. (a) The Commission shall dispose of all claims filed with it by award or order of dismissal, as the case may be, upon written findings of fact and reasons for the decision. A copy of each such adjudication shall be mailed to the claimant or his attorney.

(b) The Commission may make payment of any award not exceeding $2,500 in amount out of such funds as may be made available for this purpose by Congress.

(c) On the first day of each regular session of Congress the Commission shall transmit to Congress a full and complete statement of all adjudications rendered by the Commission during the previous year, stating the name of each claimant, the amount claimed, the amount awarded, the amount paid, and a brief synopsis of the facts in the case. All awards not paid by the Commission under subsection (b) hereof shall be paid in like manner as are final judgments of the Court of Claims.

(d) The payment of an award shall be final and conclusive for all purposes, notwithstanding any other provision of law to the contrary, and shall be a full discharge of the United States and all of its officers, agents, servants, and employees with respect to all claims arising out of the same subject matter. An order of dismissal against a claimant, unless set aside by the Commission, shall thereafter bar any further claim against the United States or any officer, agent, servant, or employee thereof arising out of the same subject matter.

ATTORNEYS' FEES

SEC. 6. The Commission, in rendering an award in favor of any claimant, may as a part of the award determine and allow reasonable attorneys' fees, which shall not exceed 20 percent of the amount allowed, to be paid directly to the attorneys representing the claimant out of, but not in addition to, the amount of such award.

Any attorney who charges, demands, receives, or collects for services rendered in connection with such claim any amount in excess of that allowed under this section, if recovery be had, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall upon conviction thereof be subject to a fine of not more than $2,000, or imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both.

NO FORMER MEMBER OR EMPLOYEE TO PRACTICE BEFORE COMMISSION

(f) Make such investigations as may be necessary for the performance of its functions.

(g) Exercise any and all of its powers at any place within the continental United States, Alaska, and Hawaii.

(h) Make expenditures for personal services and rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, for the purchase of lawbooks and books of reference, for printing and binding, for the purchase, exchange, and maintenance of passenger-carrying vehicles, for supplies and equipment, for traveling expenses (including per diem in lieu of subsistence), for witness fees and mileage, for other administrative expenses, and for the payment of awards under section 5 (b) of this act.

(i) Prescribe such rules and regulations, perform such acts not inconsistent with law, and delegate such authority as the Commission may deem proper in carrying out the provisions of this act.

TERMINATION

SEC. 9. The existence of the Commission shall terminate at the end of 5 years from the date of approval of this act: Provided, however, That if the Commission shall have earlier finished its business its existence shall be terminated forthwith by direction of the President.

APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 10. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated for the purposes of this act such sums as Congress may from time to time determine to be necessary.

PROHIBITION OF POLL TAX IN FEDERAL ELECTIONS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia still withhold his unanimous-consent request until the Senator from Kentucky can submit a motion?

Mr. GEORGE. I withhold the request.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 628, House bill 7, the bill relating to the prepayment of poll taxes as a prerequisite for voting.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. TAFT. The call of the calendar has not yet been completed, has it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes; it has been completed.

Mr. TAFT. Objection was made to the last bill on the calendar?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection was made to the last bill.

The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kentucky.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7) making unlawful the requirement for the payment of a poll tax as a prerequisite to voting in a primary or other election for national officers.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I submit a petition under rule XXII.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Parliamentarian advises the Chair that it is the duty of the Chair to read the petition to the Senate. It is as follows:

We, the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provisions of rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, hereby move to bring to a close the debate upon the bill (H. R. 7) making unlawful the requirement for the payment of a poll tax as a prerequisite to voting in a primary or other election for national officers.

ALBEN W. BARKLEY, H. M. KILGORE, ELBERT D. THOMAS, ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE, Jr., JAMES M. TUNNELL, JAS. E. MURRAY, JOSEPH F. GUFFEY, HOMER FERGUSON, A. H. VANDENBERG, ROBT. A. TAFT, SHERIDAN DOWNEY, ROBERT F. WAGNER, CLAUDE PEPPER, JAMES W. HUFFMAN, DAVID I. WALSH, BRIEN MCMAHON, SCOTT W. LUCAS, THEODORE FRANCIS GREEN, WM. F. KNOWLAND, KENNETH S. WHERRY, ARTHUR CAPPER, H. ALEXANDER SMITH, WARREN G. MAGNUSON, JAS. M. MEAD, HUGH B. MITCHELL, WALLACE H. WHITE, Jr., GEORGE D. AIKEN, GLEN TAYLOR.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Under the rule, this motion will be voted upon 1 hour after the Senate convenes on Wednesday. Is that correct?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is correct, provided the Senate is in session tomorrow.

Mr. DONNELL. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. DONNELL. As I understand, the motion is one to bring about a close of debate. My parliamentary inquiry is twofold. First, is a debate in progress, and second, is a motion at this time in order if there is no debate in progress?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is advised that the motion is in order. There is a debate going on at this time. The Chair does not believe the Senate was ever in session when there was no debate going on.

Mr. DONNELL. I had not heard the debate begin, but perhaps I was in error.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in view of the situation, I now ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside so that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] may bring up Calendar No. 1906, House bill 7037.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside?

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, if I may, I wish to make a very brief comment on the filing of the cloture petition, because I think it a very extraordinary procedure that a cloture petition, usually filed for the purpose of bringing to an end a filibuster, should be filed before a debate in fact proceeds on H. R. 7. I want to say in all sincerity that I think the procedure is not only extraordinary but a clear subterfuge. I do not think this occasion should pass without calling attention to exactly the parliamentary procedure and strategy that is being used in the Senate at this time.

For months past there has been a desire and an attempt to bring up H. R. 7 for debate and consideration on its merits in the Senate of the United States. Every time that attempt has been made the opponents have found ways and means of preventing its consideration on the merits. But now apparently, in order to close the session and make a political record, so to speak, on paper, with respect to H. R. 7, the people of this country are witnessing this very interesting procedure in the Senate this afternoon. I think it would be better if the Senate simply served notice on the people of this country that there is no real intention in this body to present H. R. 7 and have a full debate on its merits. I think the filing of the cloture petition clearly shows that. Certainly I would sign a cloture petition to stop a filibuster on this measure, but when the cloture petition was presented to me for signature this afternoon, I refused to sign it, because I do not believe in taking part in what is in this case nothing but a pure farce.

I think it is well known that on Wednesday this petition is going to be voted down, because there is no intention on the part of the majority of the Members of the Senate, in my honest judgment, to stay here long enough to reach a vote on the merits and maintain a quorum so that we can have a consideration of this matter on its merits. To do that we must stay here and break a filibuster. I think it is our duty to do so. I am not interested in making a so-called political record on H. R. 7 for election purposes as is the Democratic Party, but I am interested any time that the Senate is ready to give careful consideration of H. R. 7, to debate it on its merits, and urge its passage on the merits.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. I desire to make a very brief word of comment on this procedure. I made the inquiry a few moments ago because in my judgment there has not been started any debate upon this question. I have heard not one word of debate upon it since the bill was made the unfinished business.

Mr. President, it seems to me the theory of cloture is that after debate has proceeded, it is proper to file a motion in order that the debate may be confined within reasonable limits.

Mr. President, no debate has taken place. Not one word of utterance on this bill, so far as I have heard, has taken place. Without expressing an opinion whatsoever upon the merit of the proposed legislation, I want to protest most vigorously and in utmost sincerity against the use of this cloture petition at this time, when no debate is in fact in progress.

I ask the President pro tempore of the Senate again for a further statement on the parliamentary inquiry; First, is a debate in progress; and, second, is the filing of the petition for cloture under the present state of procedure in order?

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Let the Chair answer the first inquiry. The bill has been taken up, and since it was taken up Senators, in their usual way, talked about everything else except the bill. Whether that is debate on the bill or not the Chair does not attempt to say. Each Senator will have to decide that for himself. There have been no speeches made on either side of the question, of course. We all know that. Consideration of the measure just began a little while ago. We all understand the situation.

Mr. DONNELL. The parliamentary inquiry further was whether or not the filing of petition for cloture was in order at the moment when it was presented?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Parliamentarian advises the Chair, and advised the Chair previously, that the filing of the petition is in order at any time, under the rule.

Mr. DONNELL. I thank the Chair.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McCLELLAN. May I inquire, Mr. President, if Senators fear that within the time now given to discussion of the measure, before we have to vote on cloture, the measure cannot be adequately discussed on its merits? Is there anything in the rules to prevent them from voting against cloture so that debate may be continued?

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. As I read the rules of the Senate there are two ways by which the Senate can limit debate. One is by unanimous consent. The other is by filing a cloture motion, which must be adopted by a two-thirds vote of the Senate. I think it is well within the discretion of the Members of the Senate to attempt either method of limiting debate. It appeared to me, as I think it appeared to other Senators who have been in the Senate for any length of time, that there would be a filibuster, or, call it what we may, there would be a debate which would continue on into the future indefinitely, unless the Senate limited debate by one of the two methods. The Senate, I am sure, would not feel that it could obtain unanimous consent to limit debate. So the Senate used the next method, which was that of filing a cloture petition.

A sufficient number of signatures have been affixed to the petition which was submitted after the bill was made the unfinished business. The debate may go on until 1 hour after the opening of the session on the second day from now and if any Senator feels that there has not been a proper debate during that period, then, as has been suggested, he would have the right to vote against the cloture petition. But I hope that the necessary number of Senators, that is, two-thirds of those present at the time, will feel that it is folly for the Senate to continue on in the future with a debate which they know very well in the absence of cloture will last indefinitely, because we have had past experience on this particular bill.

I shall not be a party to any political maneuvering in order that we may simply show that we would like to have a vote on this bill. I was never any more earnest in my life than I am in saying that I want a vote taken on this bill. I think the Senate should vote on the bill, and I hope we will have full debate on it. I am satisfied, in view of the number of times the bill has been considered, that we can have a full debate within the time allowed under the cloture petition; that we can then vote to close the debate, with the 1-hour limitation as provided in the cloture petition, and thus we may obtain a vote during the present session of Congress upon this important legislation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair at this point feels that it is his duty to read the rule. I read rule XXII:

> If at any time a motion, signed by 16 Senators, to bring to a close the debate upon any pending measure is presented to the Senate, the Presiding Officer shall at once state the motion to the Senate, and 1 hour after the Senate meets on the following calendar day but one, he shall lay the motion before the Senate and direct that the Secretary call the roll, and, upon the ascertainment that a quorum is present, the Presiding Officer shall, without debate, submit to the Senate by an aye-nay vote the question:
> "Is it the sense of the Senate that the debate shall be brought to a close?"

Under that rule there was nothing for the Chair to do but to read the petition for cloture to the Senate, so as to acquaint every Senator with it. That is all there is to it. The Parliamentarian advised the Chair that it was his duty to do so, and it has been done.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the ruling of the Chair is eminently correct. The petition for cloture is not to close debate. It is to limit debate two days from now, if it receives the required two-thirds majority. So if the petition is adopted by a two-thirds majority the limitation of debate will begin on that day.

Mr. President, it is well known in the Senate that I have favored this legislation, and I have voted for cloture petitions whenever they have been filed with reference to it. It has so happened that in connection with legislation which has been pending up until the present time, which had a time limit fixed upon it, it was impossible for the Senate to undergo the luxury of a lengthy debate on this problem. I have no doubt that every Senator knows how he will vote, not only upon the cloture petition, but upon the bill itself. It seemed to me that the Senate was entitled to an opportunity to vote on the bill under the rule. The only opportunity to vote on the bill, as everyone recognizes, is by the adoption, by a two-thirds vote, of the motion to close debate under rule XXII. Therefore I felt justified, upon the bill being made the unfinished business, in filing the petition for cloture, which will be voted upon on Wednesday. So we may determine, as the result of that vote, whether it is worth while to make a further attempt to bring the legislation to a vote. Therefore, under the existing parliamentary situation, not only do I believe that the ruling of the chair was justified, and eminently correct, but it seems to me that this is the only time up to the present in this session when it would have been possible to have made this bill the unfinished business without an interminable discussion. If it had been made the unfinished business, there would have been a further interminable discussion unless a cloture petition had been approved by a two-thirds vote. If it could not be, we could not bring the bill to a vote.

I hope there will be a full attendance of the Senate on Wednesday, and that it will express itself with respect to this rule, as to whether debate shall be closed.

Mr. TUNNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. TUNNELL. It seems to me that no matter whether the vote on cloture is that the debate shall be limited, or whether it is a vote that it shall not be limited, it does not change the fact that House bill 7 is the unfinished business at this time. Is that correct?

Mr. BARKLEY. That is correct.

Mr. TUNNELL. So there will be opportunity for debate, either under cloture or without cloture.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside in order that the Senator from Georgia may proceed with a request to consider House bill 7037, Calendar No. 1906.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I object.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 7037.

Mr. BARKLEY. I hope the Senator will move that it be done without prejudice to the unfinished business.

Mr. GEORGE. I make the motion without prejudice to the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CORDON. I should like to understand just where we are in this picture. If I correctly understand, the poll-tax bill has been made the unfinished business. Am I correct in the understanding that if any motion is made to displace it, it is equivalent to a motion to lay it on the table?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is advised that that is not correct.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MORSE. Does the motion to proceed with the bill suggested by the Senator from Georgia, without prejudice to the unfinished business, require unanimous consent?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia has a right to make the motion. Unanimous consent was first asked, and there was objection.

Mr. MORSE. My inquiry is this: Does his motion require unanimous consent as to that part of the motion providing that it shall not prejudice the unfinished business?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unanimous consent is required to lay the unfinished business aside.

Mr. MORSE. I shall object to laying it aside.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to make a statement before the objection is announced as final?

I appeal to the Senator from Oregon. He can call my appeal whatever he will. Historically I do not defer to any Member of this body in advocacy of repeal of the poll tax. I introduced the first bill that was introduced in the Senate, as I think the records of the Senate will show, to abolish the poll tax. It was reported from the Senate Committee on the Judiciary with amendments which were worked out by the great Senator George W. Norris as chairman of a subcommittee of that committee which considered the bill. I share with the able Senator from Oregon the desire that this proposed legislation be enacted if that is possible.

The procedure which has been followed is as fair to every one as any procedure that could be adopted, taking into account the practicalities of the situation in the Senate. What the able leader has done has been the result of long and tedious effort on his part, taking into account the situation as it existed in the Senate. He has consulted both proponents and opponents of the bill in devising that procedure. What might be called the organized advocates of the legislation have been consulted, and they thoroughly understand and have acquiesced in the procedure which the majority leader has followed this afternoon.

Many of us are in favor of both the anti-poll-tax and the social-security bill which the able Senator from Georgia is now trying to bring before the Senate. If we do not take up the social-security bill we shall not get any social-security legislation during this session of Congress. The bill which the able Senator from Georgia seeks to bring before the Senate contains the variable-grant provision, in which many of us are vitally interested. It increases social-security benefits to the aged, to children, and to mothers, in respect to their health. It extends welfare benefits to crippled children and many other groups. I am sure that none of us—least of all the Senator from Oregon—wishes to see those groups denied the benefits of the social-security bill.

The Senator from Oregon can accomplish both his purposes by going along with the procedure proposed by the majority leader and not objecting to the unanimous-consent request, because there will be an hour for each Senator to speak if he chooses to speak on the anti-poll-tax bill, even after cloture is adopted. That would provide 96 hours of debate. If every Senator could not have a fair opportunity to debate the question in an hour, I think that would be extraordinary under the circumstances.

So there is time between now and 1 o'clock on Wednesday to debate the anti-poll-tax bill; and then, if the cloture petition is adopted, there will still be an hour for each Senator to speak after that. So I feel that the greatest good to the public interest would be served, and I am sure that both objectives which the Senator from Oregon wishes to accomplish would be accomplished, if he would cooperate with the leader and allow the Senator from Georgia to bring up the social-security bill, with the understanding that the unfinished business, which is only temporarily laid aside, shall be the anti-poll-tax bill. I am sure that the Senator from Oregon will have plenty of time to speak on that bill before Wednesday. Other Senators who may wish to speak for it, as I do, will have plenty of time, and the opposition will have plenty of time.

Furthermore, if cloture is adopted, we shall each have an hour of which we can avail ourselves after 1 o'clock on Wednesday. If a contrary course is followed, it will simply mean that we shall probably lose an opportunity to vote on the anti-poll-tax bill, or we shall lose the social-security bill; and there is no need for us to lose either. It seems to me that we can accomplish both purposes if we will accommodate ourselves to the procedure suggested by the able majority leader, who is trying to act in the best interests of the Senate and of the country.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, before the motion is put, let me say that I had hoped that unanimous consent would be granted for the consideration of House bill 7037. I am very much opposed to taking up the anti-poll-tax bill. In my judgment neither political party will profit by it. I doubt if any individual Senator on either side of the aisle will profit by it. Therefore I had hoped that when the bill was taken up—which seems to have been a matter of negotiation between the majority leader and those opposed to the bill—there would be no objection to the unanimous-consent request of the majority leader that it be temporarily laid aside, without prejudice, of course, to the status of the bill as the unfinished business, and without prejudice to the notice for cloture which was filed and read under the rule.

I should like to have a ruling from the Chair on this question: Is it in order for me to move, without prejudice to the bill known as the anti-poll-tax bill, and without prejudice to the cloture petition, to proceed with the consideration of House bill 7037?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Parliamentarian advises the Chair that the Senator may make his motion without prejudice to the cloture petition, but not without other prejudice.

Mr. GEORGE. I did not understand the ruling of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This statement may throw light on the question: No matter what business is before the Senate, 1 hour after it meets on Wednesday next the cloture petition, under the rule, must be laid before the Senate.

Mr. GEORGE. In other words, the motion I propose to make is in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is in order.

Mr. GEORGE. Otherwise, I would make a motion to lay aside the unfinished business, which would be debatable motion, and let the filibuster start from now, and let it go.

So far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing to have it go that way, regardless of whether the Senate adjourns this week or not. If there are Senators here who desire to interfere with the qualifications of electors in some six or seven States of the Union, without regard to the very plain and obvious language and purpose of the provisions of the Constitution, let them take that position.

But if I may make the motion without prejudice to the bill which has been taken up and without prejudice to the cloture notice, I make it at this time, because the unanimous-consent agreement has failed of adoption.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. As I understand the precedents of the Senate in this particular situation, the only difference between having the Senator from Georgia obtain unanimous consent to proceed with the consideration of the amendments to the Social Security Act and to temporarily lay aside the unfinished business, or having the Senator from Georgia make his motion, is this: If the Senator obtains unanimous consent, then, upon disposition of the amendments to the Social Security Act, House bill 7 will then come back before the Senate for consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is correct.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If the Senator makes the motion, not being able to obtain unanimous consent, it is true that House bill 7 will be displaced as the unfinished business, and the amendments to the Social Security Act, House bill 7037, will become the unfinished business. But if that is still the unfinished business, nevertheless, despite that fact, on next Wednesday, at 1 o'clock, a vote will be taken on the cloture motion to bring debate upon House bill 7 to a close.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If the amendments to the Social Security Act are disposed of before that time, it will be in order for any Senator who can secure recognition to move that the Senate again proceed to the consideration of House bill 7, and make it the unfinished business.

So, as a matter of fact, it is as broad as it is long.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I was about to make a statement in accord with what has just been said by the Senator from Wisconsin. A motion to proceed to the consideration of another bill, while one bill is the unfinished business, does displace the unfinished business. In this case, however, it would not displace the motion for cloture. So, no matter what might be pending on Wednesday, when the time came to vote on the cloture motion, the Chair would be required to lay it before the Senate for a vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is correct.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MORSE. If that is the ruling of the Chair, I should like to know whether the motion of the Senator from Georgia is debatable. If it is debatable, I should like to make a very brief reply to the Senator from Florida; and then, if that is the parliamentary situation, and if the cloture motion automatically would come up on Wednesday, at 1 o'clock, to be voted upon, I shall give consideration to withdrawing my objection to the unanimous-consent request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from Georgia is debatable.

Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield. I am quite content to let the motion remain and to be pending when the Senate convenes tomorrow, if the Senator from Kentucky desires to move that the Senate take a recess at this time, because I think it is too late in the day to get the social-security legislation through today, in time for the House to consider it.

Mr. BARKLEY. I agree that it is too late to proceed with it this afternoon.

But if the Senator from Oregon were to feel constrained to proceed, after withdrawing objection, then the Senator's bill would be the unfinished business when we meet tomorrow; and I am satisfied that it can be disposed of tomorrow. Then we would automatically recur to the consideration of House bill 7.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Will the Senator state that, under any circumstances, upon the conclusion of action on the amendments to the Social Security Act, the Senator would move that the Senate resume the consideration of House bill 7?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; I intended to make that statement. Mr. President, under any circumstances, after the amendments to the Social Security Act have been disposed of, I would move to have the Senate resume the consideration of House bill 7.

But if the Senator from Oregon will withdraw his objection, such a motion will not be necessary.

I earnestly hope the Senator will withdraw his objection, because regardless of whatever happens in the meantime, the cloture motion will automatically come up for a vote.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, as I understand the situation, the pending business is my motion to proceed with the consideration of the amendments to the Social Security Act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is correct.

Mr. GEORGE. Objection has already been made to the unanimous-consent request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is correct.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I wish to reply very briefly what I understand to be the essence of the remarks of the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER]. I am not going to accept what I understood to be his invitation to characterize or call whatever I might wish to call the point of view which he presented to the Senate on this parliamentary maneuver. I shall reserve that for private conversation with the Senator from Florida.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the able Senator speak louder? We cannot hear him very well.

Mr. MORSE. I merely wish to say that I think it should be pointed out very clearly for the RECORD just what has happened in the past on House bill 7 and what is happening now to House bill 7. It is my judgment that we shall not be able to obtain Senate consideration of House bill 7 on the merits and to vote on the merits, unless behind it at all times is some very important proposed legislation waiting for consideration by the Senate. In other words, as I have said before, if we are really going to beat a filibuster on House bill 7 when it is raised on the floor of the Senate, strategically our only chance of beating that filibuster is to raise the question early enough in the session so that there is enough important proposed legislation behind House bill 7 to finally convince a majority of the Members of this great body that for once they must stand up and vote on the merits of House bill 7. That is why I indicated the other day that if we waited until this hour with the strategy now proposed which I predicted would be proposed, we would find ourselves in exactly the position in which we now find ourselves in regard to House bill 7, namely, the bill would fail for want of a vote on the merits because a majority of the Senate will not remain to break a filibuster.

When I offered H. R. 7 the other day as a rider to the tidelands bill, there was still a great deal of proposed legislation to be passed by the Senate. Insofar as the parliamentary strategy is concerned, I say to the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], and I have told him privately, and I have indicated as much on the floor of the Senate, and I repeat it to him now, that when I offered my anti-poll-tax amendment the other day that was the time when the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], who has been one of the leaders in the anti-poll-tax-bill drive, should have backed me in my attempt to get consideration of it on the merits. But, instead of that, the Senator from Florida stood up on the floor of the Senate and joined with the majority leader in suggesting that I withdraw the anti-poll-tax bill as an amendment to the tidelands bill. I refused to follow such an unsound suggestion because I knew that my amendment offered the last chance to secure a real fight in favor of the anti-poll-tax bill.

I stated then that this hour would arrive, when practically the whole legislative program of the majority leader for this session would have been completed, and then we would find the anti-poll-tax bill would be brought before us at the end of the session for political reasons. However, it would be an empty gesture with everything done and everyone ready to go home. I pointed out that of course under those circumstances Senators would not make a fight for the bill or for the cloture motion. I repeat now that the cloture petition will fail and the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] knows it. However, he is apparently determined to make a political record.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. I may be in error about the parliamentary situation, but my opinion is that the advocates of the anti-poll-tax bill are in a far better position at this time in the Senate than they were at the time when the able Senator from Oregon offered the amendment to the tidelands bill. In other words, aside from the propriety of offering it at that time, I am of the opinion that cloture would not have lain, in view of the situation at that time, and that filibuster would have been possible against the bill and the Senator's amendment.

Now the cloture petition has been filed, and the Chair has already informed the Senate that a vote will be had on cloture at 1 o'clock on Wednesday, or 1 hour after the Senate convenes on Wednesday, assuming that it convenes at noon.

So here we have the anti-poll tax before the Senate. We have assurance that there will be a vote on cloture on Wednesday. So I cannot see that we are any worse off: We have not agreed to a resolution for sine die adjournment, to my knowledge. The anti-poll-tax bill is before the Senate, and the majority leader has stated that if it is temporarily laid aside, he will move to have it taken up again; and the Chair has stated that no matter what is pending, at 1 o'clock on Wednesday the cloture motion will be taken up, and then each Senator can speak for 1 hour, and I think that will be sufficient time for each Senator to express his views.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, with all due respect to the Senator from Florida, whom I admire very much, but with whom I am in complete disagreement on this matter, I wish to state that in regard to the parliamentary situation, I think he is entirely in error insofar as being in an effective position to secure passage of the anti-poll-tax bill is concerned. He is in error because the chances of obtaining a vote on that bill have been greatly reduced by the fact that the majority leader's legislative program or calendar has been practically completed. It makes a great deal of difference, when we come to count noses on the cloture motion, whether there is still piled up back of the bill some very important proposed legislation which greatly concerns the Members of this body, or whether most of the important legislative proposals have already been voted upon.

Come Wednesday, that is exactly the position in which the Senator from Florida will find himself. It is a position with regard to which he was given due notice several days ago. It is a position which he voluntarily and knowingly walked into. His chances of getting a two-thirds vote for cloture on Wednesday are practically nil, and I think the Senator from Florida knows it as well as does the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I will yield in just a moment. The result will be that some Members of the Congress will be able to go before the electorate next November and say, "Oh, we did everything we could do to get the bill brought up. We finally got a cloture petition but it failed of adoption." But what the voters need to know is the strategy behind this whole movement, and that is why I said a few moments ago that the whole strategy is a farce, and I repeat that it is. It is a move of election politics.

Mr. PEPPER and Mr. BILBO addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon yield; and, if so, to whom?

Mr. MORSE. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I have no hesitancy in allowing the Senator from Oregon to characterize the Senate in any way he chooses to do so. But what I wish to say is that I think good faith has been employed by all of us, including the able majority leader, who was required merely to take into account the legislative situation as it now exists. It is always easy to urge perfection, but it is sometimes more practical to take practicalities into cognizance. That is what was done by the leader. Our able leader has been a better friend of this measure than has been the able Senator from Oregon, if I may say so, under the present circumstances.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, as far as I am concerned the Senator from Florida is perfectly welcome to express any value judgment he may care to concerning my contribution to the fight for an anti-poll-tax bill. I am happy to rest my case on the record. The Senator from Oregon raises no question with regard to good faith but he recognizes political strategy when he sees it. I am sorry that the Senator from Florida is engaging in it on this bill. The Senator from Oregon makes this assertion for the RECORD that the Senator from Florida must shoulder a large share of the responsibility for the situation in which we find ourselves with regard to House bill 7.

POTOMAC RIVER HIGHWAY BRIDGE

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, on the 16th of July the President of the United States signed Public Law 516. That law provides for the building of a four-lane highway bridge across the Potomac River out of Washington. All of us are interested in it. A mistake was made in the language of the bill. House bill 7109 has just been passed by the House of Representatives, and it provides that wherever in section 6 of Public Law 516 the words "National Capital Park Service" occur, they be changed to read "National Park Service."

Mr. President, I ask that the bill (H. R. 7109) be now considered.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 7109) to amend section 6 of Public Law No. 516 of the Seventy-ninth Congress, approved July 16, 1946, was read twice by title, considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, I wish to inquire concerning the subject matter of the bill to which the Senator from Mississippi referred.

Mr. BILBO. On July 16 the President of the United States signed Public Law 516. It was subsequently found that some corrections should be made in the bill, by changing the words "National Capital Park Service" wherever they occurred, to "National Park Service."

Mr. REVERCOMB. I thank the Senator.

INTERCHANGE OF PROPERTY BETWEEN THE ARMY AND NAVY

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, when the calendar was called, and Calendar No. 1790, House bill 6057, was reached, I objected to its consideration on the ground that I had been informed that some other Senator would wish to make an objection. I wish the RECORD now to show that I was mistaken, and I will cooperate with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], in obtaining action on the bill at the first opportunity.

AMENDMENT OF SOCIAL SECURITY ACT AND INTERNAL REVENUE CODE

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I now renew my request which I made a moment ago that the Senate temporarily lay aside the unfinished business and proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1906, House bill 7037.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, what is the bill to which the Senator refers?

Mr. BARKLEY. It is the social security bill in charge of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. TAFT. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I wish to inform the majority leader that, having made clear my position on House bill 7, I withdraw my objection to the unanimous-consent request which has been made.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill H. R. 7037, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with amendments.

ACCEPTANCE BY TREASURY OF DEPOSITS OF MONEYS FROM THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2348) to authorize the continuance of the acceptance by the Treasury of deposits of public moneys from the Philippine Islands, which was in line 9, after the word "States", to insert "and shall terminate on July 1, 1951."

Mr. HAYDEN. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion as agreed to.

WILLIAM S. BROWN

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1277) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of William S. Brown, which were, on page 1, lines 3 and 4, to strike out "Court of Claims of the United States" and insert "United States District Court of the Western District of South Carolina"; and to amend the title so as to read: "An act conferring jurisdiction upon the United States District Court of the Western District of South Carolina to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of William S. Brown."

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

PRINTING OF PAMPHLET ENTITLED "MANUAL EXPLANATORY OF PRIVILEGES, RIGHTS, ETC., OF FORMER MEMBERS OF THE ARMED FORCES"

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate House Concurrent Resolution 66, which was read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the pamphlet entitled "Manual Explanatory of the Privileges, Rights, and Benefits Provided for All Persons Who Are, or Have Been, Members of the Armed Forces of the United States and of Those Dependent Upon Them" be printed as a House document, and that 91,300 additional copies shall be printed, of which 66,300 copies shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, 20,000 for the use of the Senate, 2,000 for the use of the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation of the House of Representatives, 2,000 for the House document room, and 1,000 for the Senate document room.

Mr. HAYDEN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration and adoption of the concurrent resolution.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was considered and agreed to.

CHARLES R. HOOPER—VETO MESSAGE

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I am directed by the Senate Committee on Claims to present a favorable report on S. 1480, now in the hands of the Parliamentarian, which would pay Charles R. Hooper, a Government employee in the District of Columbia, $4,000 for personal injuries sustained by him while employed in the United States navy yard. I ask for its approval by the Senate.

I have willingly and wholeheartedly supported this relief claim because I have felt that the case is an exceedingly meritorious one.

Legislation for Mr. Hooper's relief has passed the House of Representatives on four different occasions, and has passed the Senate three times. But we regret that S. 1480 was returned to the Congress unsigned by the President. Our committee is now asking that this bill again be passed by the Senate over the President's veto.

In the veto message which accompanied the bill, it recognized the fact that Mr. Hooper lost the use of his left eye while working for the Government in line of duty. But the basis on which the veto message rests seems to be a statement in the message that, "while the loss to the claimant, and his pain and suffering, are to be regretted, they were not such as to prevent his long and gainful reemployment in the Government service."

This message overlooks the fact that away back in 1890, at the time Mr. Hooper was injured, his rate of pay at the Washington Navy Yard was approximately 40 cents per hour. In 1909, when Mr. Hooper was appointed a helper at the Government Printing Office, 19 years after his injury, he was forced to enter employment at the same rate of pay: namely, 40 cents per hour as a helper. If he had not suffered the injury at the Washington Navy Yard in 1890 and had been able to continue his service there as a machinist uninterrupted, his daily earnings in 1918, instead of being $4 per day would have been approximately $20 per day. This fact alone refutes and disproves the statement in the veto message to the effect that the claimant's wage-earning capacity had not been impaired by the injury.

Justice and fairness to this man, who is now 80 years of age, and still residing in the city of Washington, demand that the Congress pass this bill over the President's veto, so that Mr. Hooper may, in a small way, be compensated by the Government for the loss of his eye. The President and Congress should know further that this claimant has expended considerable more than the amount he is now seeking in this bill in the form of medical care and medicines during the period since his injury.

At a meeting of the Senate Committee on Claims I presented this whole matter. It was thoroughly discussed. The committee voted unanimous approval of a motion overriding the veto. I earnestly appeal, therefore, Mr. President, for the passage of S. 1480 over the President's veto, and that the bill be sent to the House once more.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, is a yea and nay not necessary?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It undoubtedly is.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish the Senator from Kansas would withhold his motion at this late hour. The motion would require a roll-call vote. Would the Senator from Kansas be willing to postpone the matter until another day?

Mr. CAPPER. Until tomorrow?

Mr. BARKLEY. Well, until some later day.

Mr. CAPPER. I withdraw my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas withdraws his motion.

LYNCHINGS IN GEORGIA

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, last Saturday there was some discussion in the Senate with reference to recent lynchings in the State of Georgia. At this time I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the Governor of Georgia has offered a reward of $10,000 to bring to justice those who were guilty of the crimes committed. I wish to compliment not only the Governor of Georgia, but also the distinguished Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND], who brought the matter to the attention of the Senate. I am quite sure that the present Governor of Georgia will see to it that the laws of that State are enforced.

I wish also to make it clear, Mr. President, that at the time the discussion took place last Saturday what I had to say concerning the newly elected governor of Georgia meant only that I resented the action of the newspaper in New York City in criticizing Mr. Talmadge at a time when he was not yet governor, and when he was at least 2,000 miles beyond the borders of the State of Georgia and could not possibly defend himself against the criticism which was made of him. I thought that it would be simple justice for me to say what I said on that occasion.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, JULY 29, 1946

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D. D., pastor of the Gunton-Temple Memorial Presbyterian Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who art the Lord God omnipotent, reverently we are again invoking Thy blessing, praying that when we are challenged by great issues and perplexing problems we may continue to be brave of heart, assured that, if we will only make a more courageous adventure of faith, we shall be gloriously triumphant.

Help us to cleave with fond affection to the assurance that Thou canst lead us to the high levels of victory and peace, releasing us from all fears and anxieties, and from the terror of frustration and futility and defeatism.

Hasten the day when the earth shall no longer be cursed by cruelty, blasted by injustice, blighted by selfishness, and darkened by hatred, but when the heart of mankind shall be illumined by the spirit of the Master and all shall have the faith, the courage, and the humility to follow where He leads.

In His name we pray. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, July 27, 1946, was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. SAVAGE. Mr. Speaker, I see where the Republicans are going to lower the taxes, and at the same time balance the Budget. I guess they must think they are magicians. I do not believe that, and I do not think the public generally does. If they are going to balance the Budget they have to maintain the taxes. So I just hope they do not insist on telling the innocent people that they can lower the taxes 20 percent, and at the same time make payments on the national debt.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAVAGE. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. When Andrew Mellon was Secretary of the Treasury they did that very thing, and they can do it again, because they will stop a lot of this boondoggling and a lot of this unnecessary spending. That is the way they will do it.

Mr. SAVAGE. When the Republicans take all these services away from the people, and stop distribution of purchasing power, then we will go into another depression more vicious than the last one they got us into because of their lack of knowledge of economics and their lack of interest for the American public.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

VETERANS' CANTEEN SERVICE IN THE VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 3, lines 23, 24, and 25, strike out "and to maintain the operation of the Service on a self-sustaining basis."

Page 5, strike out lines 6 to 13, inclusive.

Page 6, line 4, strike out "6" and insert "5."

Page 6, line 22, strike out "8" and insert "7."

Page 7, line 3, strike out "9" and insert "8."

The SPEAKER. Is their objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain the effect of the Senate amendments?

Mr. RANKIN. We had this matter up in the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation this morning and the committee instructed me to take this action. The Senate put on two amendments. One of them was to strike out the Cole amendment that was adopted in the House, that would have made these canteens self-sustaining. General Bradley was afraid it would mean including the salaries of the Veterans' Administration or other expenses, and that some of them in that way could not be made self-sustaining from the beginning.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. How much are they running in the red?

Mr. RANKIN. They are not running at all now.

The other important amendment is with reference to tax exemptions. We made them tax exempt and the Senate struck that provision out. So I took it up with the Veterans' Committee this morning and they instructed me to call the measure up and ask that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. If the gentleman will yield, there apparently was no objection to it.

Mr. RANKIN. There was no objection to it.

Mr. RABAUT. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, and I do not intend to object, I wish to have some information. Is this to be established as a revolving fund?

Mr. RANKIN. I cannot tell the gentleman that.

Mr. RABAUT. It has not been decided yet?

Mr. RANKIN. That has not been decided yet.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CREDIT SERVICES TO FARMERS

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 5991) to simplify and improve credit services to farmers and promote farm ownership by abolishing certain agricultural lending agencies and functions, by transferring assets to the Farmers' Home Corporation, by enlarging the powers of the Farmers' Home Corporation, by authorizing Government insurance of loans to farmers, by creating preference for loans and insured mortgages to enable veterans to acquire farms, by providing additional specific authority and directions with respect to the liquidation of resettlement projects and rural rehabilitation projects for resettlement purposes, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers on the part of the House be read in lieu of the report.

The Secretary shall promptly transmit to the Treasurer of the United States for appropriate credits all collections or other proceeds realized from the assets, funds, contracts and property which are authorized to be administered, collected or liquidated by this Act, except that (1) the Secretary may retain so much of the personal property, such as office furniture, equipment, machines, automobiles, stationery, and office supplies, as he finds will be necessary in carrying out his duties under this Act and the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, as amended; (2) until the loans obtained by the Secretary of Agriculture or the War Food Administrator from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for carrying on the Farm Security programs have been paid, the Secretary shall pay to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, as collected, in accordance with the terms of the applicable loan agreements, the proceeds of all assets transferred to him for administration and liquidation which are pledged as security for such loans; and (3) the proceeds from collections on farmers' crop production and harvesting loans (U. "(e) Any of the personnel that is being utilized on the effective date of this Act for the performance of functions, powers, or duties abolished or transferred by this Act, including, but not limited to those related to emergency crop and feed loans, shall be utilized by the Secretary of Agriculture in the performance of his duties and functions under this Act and the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, as amended, to the extent that he determines that such personnel are qualified and necessary therefor.

"(f) The Secretary of Agriculture shall liquidate, as expeditiously as possible, trusts under the transfer, agreements with the various State Rural Rehabilitation Corporations and is authorized and directed to negotiate with responsible officials to that end.

"(g) With the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, the consummation of the transfer of any function, power, duty, asset, or liability transferred by this Act may be delayed not in excess of ninety days after the effective date of this Act, during which time such function, power, or duty, and any function, power, or duty abolished by this Act, may be administered by such agency as the Secretary may designate and in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Secretary may prescribe. Such rules and regulations shall, however, conform as nearly as may be practicable to the provisions of this Act, the several appropriation Acts which are involved, or the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, as amended, whichever is appropriate.

"AMENDMENT TO TITLE IV OF THE BANKHEAD-JONES FARM TENANT ACT

"SEC. 3. The following sections of Title IV of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, as amended, except insofar as they affect Title III of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, as amended, are hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 41. For the purposes of this Act, the Secretary shall have the power to—

"'(a) Appoint (without regard to the Civil Service laws or the Classification Act of 1923, as amended) such experts as may be necessary in carrying out the provisions of this Act: Provided, That the Administrator of the Farmers' Home Administration shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The salary of none of such experts or the Administrator shall exceed $10,000 per annum. The Secretary shall also have the power to appoint, subject to the provisions of the civil-service laws, such other officers and employees as may be necessary and fix their compensation in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, except that for a period of not to exceed 9 months from the effective date of this provision, the Secretary may make appointments and continue employees of the Farm Security Administration and the non-civil-service employees of the Emergency Crop and Feed Loan Division, utilized in the performance of the functions of the Farmers' Home Administration under this Act, without regard to the Civil Service laws or regulations.

The Secretary may authorize one office to serve the area composed of two or more States (Territories or Puerto Rico) if he determines that the volume of business in the area is not sufficient to justify separate State offices.

"'(c) Accept and utilize voluntary and uncompensated services, and with the consent of the agency concerned, utilize the officers, employees, equipment, and information of any agency of the Federal Government, or of any State, Territory, or political subdivision.

"'(d) Within the limits of appropriations made therefor, make necessary expenditures for personal services and rent at the seat of government and elsewhere; contract stenographic reporting services; purchase and exchange of supplies and equipment, law books, books of reference, directories, periodicals, newspapers, and press clippings; travel and subsistence expenses, including the expense of attendance at meetings and conferences; purchase, operation, and maintenance, at the seat of goverment and elsewhere, of motor-propelled passenger-carrying and other vehicles; printing and binding; and for such other facilities and services as he may from time to time find necessary for the proper administration of this Act.

"'(A) Borrowers who have transferred their farms to other approved applicants under agreements assuming the outstanding indebtedness to the Secretary under this title; and

"'(B) Borrowers who have transferred their farms to other approved applicants under agreements assuming that portion of their outstanding indebtedness to the Secretary which is equal to the earning capacity value of the farm at the time of the transfer, and borrowers whose farms have been acquired by the Secretary, in cases where the county committees certify and the Secretary determines that the borrowers have cooperated in good faith with the Secretary, have farmed in a workmanlike manner, used due diligence to maintain the security against loss, and otherwise fulfilled the covenants incident to their loans, to the best of their abilities;

"'(C) No compromise or adjustment shall be made upon terms more favorable than recommended by the appropriate county committee established pursuant to section 42 of this act;

"'(3) Any claim of $100 or less, which has been due and payable for 3 years or more, and where the debtor has no assets from which the claim could be collected or is deceased and has left no estate, or has been absent from his last known address for a period of at least 2 years and his whereabouts cannot be ascertained without undue expense, may be charged off or released by the Secretary upon a report and favorable recommendation of the employee of the Administration having charge of the claim: Provided, That claims of $10 or less may be canceled and released whenever it appears to the Secretary that further collection efforts would be ineffectual or likely to prove uneconomical; and

"'(4) At the end of each fiscal year the Secretary shall report to Congress the names of all persons against whom claims in excess of $1,000 have been compromised, the address of such person, the nature of the claim, the amount of the compromise, and the reason therefor.

The Secretary shall file with the Congress, promptly after making such determination, a complete report of the determination, with full information as to the location of all lands comprising such projects, and of the facts taken into account by the Secretary in making the determination. The committee shall also certify to the Secretary the amount which the committee finds is the fair and reasonable value of the farm based upon its normal earning capacity. The farm shall be appraised by competent employees of the Secretary thoroughly trained in appraisal techniques and the appraisal shall be made available to the county committee and the Secretary for their guidance in determining the value of the farm as specified above.

"'(c) No member of the committee shall participate in any certification under this section with respect to any application or farm in which such member, or any person related to such member within the third degree of consanguinity or affinity has any pecuniary interest, direct or indirect, or in which any of them had such interest within one year prior to the date of certification.

"'(d) No loan shall be made for any purpose under this Act and no mortgage shall be insured under this Act, unless certification by the committee, as required under this section, has been made with respect to the applicant applying for the loan and with respect to the farm which is to be taken as security either for an insured or an uninsured mortgage.

"'(h) The Secretary may, at any time, for good cause shown and under such terms and conditions as he may prescribe, consent to the release of the mortgagor from his liability under the mortgage or the credit instruments secured thereby, or consent to the release of parts of the mortgaged property from the lien of the mortgage.

"'(i) The holder of any mortgage insured under this title may, upon notice to the Secretary, assign such mortgage together with the acccmpanying note and contract of insurance and the assignee thereof shall thereupon become entitled to all the benefits of such contract of insurance: Provided, That no such assignment shall be binding upon the Secretary until notice thereof has been given the Secretary and the Secretary has acknowledged receipt of such notice.

"'PAYMENT OF INSURANCE

"'SEC. 13. (a) In any case in which the mortgagor under a mortgage insured under section 12 is in default for more than twelve months, the mortgagee shall be entitled to receive the benefit of the insurance as hereinafter provided, upon assignment to the Secretary of (1) all the mortgagee's rights and interests arising under the mortgage so in default; (2) all claims of the mortgagee against the mortgagor or others, arising out of the mortgage transaction; (3) all policies of title or other insurance and all surety bonds and other guaranties and any and all claims thereunder relating to the mortgage or the mortgaged property; (4) any balance of the mortgage loan not advanced to the mortgagor; and (5) any cash or property held by the mortgagee, or to which he is entitled, as deposit made for the account of the mortgagor and which has not been applied in reduction of the principal of the mortgage indebtedness; and upon transfer to the Secretary of such originals or copies of records, documents, books, papers and accounts relating to the mortgage transaction, as the Secretary prescribes. Upon such assignment and transfer, the Secretary shall pay to the mortgagee, in cash, an amount equal to the value of the mortgage and the note and mortgage shall thereupon become a part of the fund. For the purposes of this subsection, the value of the mortgage shall be determined, in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary, by adding to the amount of the original principal obligation of the mortgage which was unpaid on the date of default, the amount of all unpaid interest and the amount of all payments which have been made by the mortgagee for taxes, special assessments, water rates, and other payments in discharge of liens which are prior to the mortgage, and insurance on the property mortgaged, and by deducting from such total amount any amount received on account of the mortgage indebtedness after such default.

"'(b) If there should not be sufficient cash in the fund to enable the Secretary to make payments to mortgagees as provided in subsection (a) of this section, the Secretary may make and issue notes to the Secretary of the Treasury to obtain funds to make such payments. Such notes shall be signed by the Secretary or his duly authorized representatives and shall be negotiable. Such notes shall bear interest, payable semiannually, at a rate equal to the average rate of interest, computed to the end of the calendar month next preceding the date of issue, borne by all interest bearing obligations of the United States then forming a part of the public debt, and shall have such maturities as the Secretary may determine with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

"'(c) The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to purchase any notes issued by the Secretary pursuant to this section and any renewals thereof and for such purchases may use as a public debt transaction the proceeds from the sale of any securities issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which such securities may be issued under such act, as amended, are hereby extended to include any such purchases. All redemptions, purchases, and sales by the Secretary of the Treasury of such notes shall be treated as public debt transactions of the United States.

"'(d) In any case in which the mortgagor violates any covenant or condition of his mortgage, the Secretary may require the mortgagee to assign such mortgage, together with the incidents thereto, upon payment of the value of the mortgage determined in accordance with this section.

"'PROCEDURE WITH RESPECT TO MORTGAGES IN DEFAULT

"'SEC. 14. (a) Upon accepting the assignment of any insured mortgage, the Secretary shall ascertain whether or not the mortgagor (which term as used in this section shall include the mortgagor or his heirs or assigns) desires to remain in possession of the mortgaged property. If the mortgagor does not desire to remain in possession of the mortgaged property or if the Secretary is unable to make the findings prescribed by the next sentence, the Secretary may proceed to foreclose the mortgage. If the mortgagor desires to remain in possession of the mortgaged property and if the Secretary finds that the mortgagor (1) has made reasonable efforts to meet all defaulted payments and to comply with the other covenants and conditions of his mortgage and (2) will probably be able to meet such defaulted payments within five years after the maturity date or dates of the defaulted payments, the Secretary may enter into an agreement with the mortgagor providing for the payment of such defaulted payments together with interest thereon, at such times not later than five years after the maturity date or dates as the Secretary may deem to be within the probable future means of the mortgagor. Should any mortgagor with whom the Secretary has entered into such agreement thereafter fail to meet any payments, the Secretary may proceed to foreclose the mortgage.

"'(b) Amounts realized under section 51 on account of property which was subject to an insured mortgage shall be deposited in the fund. Amounts payable by the Secretary under section 50 (a) as taxes, with respect to such property, shall be paid out of the fund.

"'INSURED MORTGAGES ELIGIBLE AS INVESTMENTS

"'SEC. 15. (a) The first paragraph of section 24, chapter 6, of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended (U. S. C., 1940 ed., title 12, sec. 371) (relating to loans on farm lands by member banks), is hereby amended by inserting after the words "National Housing Act", the following: "or which are insured by the Secretary of Agriculture pursuant to title I of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act."

"'(b) Section 35 of chapter III of the Act entitled "An Act to regulate the business of life insurance in the District of Columbia", approved June 19, 1934 (D. C. "ACCOUNTS AND CLAIMS OF DEFENSE RELOCATION CORPORATIONS

"SEC. 6. (a) The Comptroller General of the United States is authorized and directed to allow credit in the accounts of disbursing and certifying officers for advances made in good faith on behalf of the Department of Agriculture to defense relocation corporations and land purchasing associations.

"CONSOLIDATION OF AGRICULTURAL CREDIT AND SERVICE OFFICES

"SEC. 7. The Secretary of Agriculture and the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration are hereby directed, wherever practicable, to make suitable arrangements whereby all field offices under their supervision or direction extending agricultural credit or furnishing agricultural services to farmers to utilize the same or adjacent offices to the end that eligible farmers in each locality will be enabled to obtain their agricultural credit and services at one central point.

"CONTINGENT PROVISIONS FOR TRANSFERRING FOWERS TO AGRICULTURAL CREDIT AGENCY

"SEC. 8. (a) In the event the Agricultural Credit Act (H. R. 4873), Seventy-ninth Congress, first session), passed by the House of Representatives on March 20, 1946, becomes law prior to the effective date of this Act:

"(1) The functions, powers, and duties vested in the Secretary of Agriculture by this Act and by the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, as amended, except insofar as such functions, powers, or duties involve or are necessary to the administration of title III of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, shall be vested in the Agricultural Credit Agency;

"(2) The functions, powers, and duties of the Secretary of Agriculture transferred under (1) above and the property and assets acquired by the Secretary of Agriculture primarily in the administration of such functions, powers, and duties, shall be administered within the Division of the Agricultural Credit Agency created for the purpose of supervising and administering direct lending to farmers, subject to the supervision, direction, and authority of the Agricultural Credit Board, the Agricultural Credit Administrator, and the Deputy Administrator in charge of that Division, to the same extent as other units of a division of the Agricultural Credit Agency;

"(3) The functions, powers, and duties vested in the Solicitor of the Department of Agriculture and attorneys of his office by this Act and the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act shall be vested in the general counsel and attorneys of the Agricultural Credit Agency, respectively.

"SEC. 9. Any conveyance of real estate by the Government or any Government agency under this Act shall include all mineral rights."

And the House agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5991) amending the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act to improve credit services to farmers, provide for liquidation of the resettlement and rural rehabilitation projects, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action, agreed upon by the conferees, and recommended in the accompanying conference report.

THE SENATE AMENDMENT

The Senate amendment, identical in language with S. 1507 which passed the Senate on April 12 (legislative day, March 5), 1946, is a substitute for all after the enacting clause of H. R. 5991, as it passed the House. The Senate amendment differed from H. R. 5991 principally as follows: It did not provide for consolidation of the functions of Farm Security Administration and the Emergency Crop and Feed Loan Division of the Farm Credit Administration; it did not provide for liquidation of the resettlement projects; it did not provide for insured farm tenant mortgages; and it did not provide for utilizing the Farmers' Home Corporation to carry out the lending functions and other powers authorized by H. R. 5991.

The Senate amendment did make several changes in title I of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act with respect to direct tenant purchase loans. It also made some amendments to title II of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act relating to rural rehabilitation loans and grants. In some respects, but not all, these amendments were similar in substance to the lending powers for like purposes which would have been authorized by H. R. 5991.

PLAN FOR UTILIZING FARMERS' HOME CORPORATION ELIMINATED

The conferees agreed not to use the Farmers' Home Corporation to carry out the functions and duties provided for in H. R. 5991, but to vest the necessary authority in the Secretary of Agriculture to be administered through the Farmers' Home Administration as an agency of the Department of Agriculture. The Farm Security Administration and the Emergency Crop and Feed Loan Division of the Farm Credit Administration would be abolished by section 2 of H. R. 5991, and the functions heretofore performed by them, subject to the amendments made by H. R. 5991, would be carried out in the future by the Farmers' Home Administration.

The elimination of the Farmers' Home Corporation necessitated a number of changes throughout the bill, including a revision of the title, amending title II of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act to provide for production and subsistence loans, rearranging the sections relating to lending powers under the act, and more clearly defining the powers and limitations of the Secretary with respect to loans made thereunder. These principal changes necessitated other techincal changes throughout the bill.

LIQUIDATION OF RESETTLEMENT PROJECTS AND LABOR CAMPS

It it understood that most of the properties transferred from Farm Security Administration to the National Housing Agency which would be retransferred by H. R. 5991 (excluding the housing projects which are not covered by the bill) are now in liquidation. Insofar as such properties are in liquidation, there appears to be no point in retransferring them to the Secretary for disposition under H. R. 5991. The conference agreement, therefore, excepts from the retransfer provisions of H. R. 5991, those properties under the jurisdiction of the National Housing Agency which are now in the process of liquidation.

S. 704, Seventy-ninth Congress, second session, passed by both Houses, would accord preference for "not to exceed three years" to veterans of the present war and present project occupants to whom previous commitments to purchase have been made with respect to the sale of rural rehabilitation and resettlement projects lands suitable for disposition in economic units. Not more than 620 acres may be included in any one sale of an economic farm unit. The bill provides that all such units shall be disposed of as expeditiously as possible and within 3 years. The provisions of S. 704 are not as broad in scope with respect to project liquidation as the provisions of section 43 of H. R. 5991. But liquidation provisions of the two bills are not incompatible, and the conferees have agreed upon an amendment to the effect that the liquidation of such economic units pursuant to H. R. 5991 shall be subject to the terms, limitations, and conditions of S. 704.

PRODUCTION AND SUESISTENCE LOANS

The agreement would clarify the provision of title II (sec. 21) with respect to the eligibility of a person to obtain further production and subsistence loans who has had the benefits of such loans for five consecutive years. It was the intent of H. R. 5991 that an individual who had been indebted for such loans for five consecutive years would be eligible to borrow again when he had liquidated his indebtedness in full. This provision was changed to read that:

"No person who has failed to liquidate his indebtedness under this section for five consecutive years shall be eligible for further loans hereunder until he has paid such indebtedness in full.

A change was made in the provisions of H. R. 5991, now a part of section 21 of title II, excluding existing indebtedness to the Farm Security Administration or the Emergency Crop and Feed Loan Office from the determinations relating to the amounts of loans, the terms of loans and the 5-year repayment requirement with respect to eligibility. As H. R. 5991 was originally worded, such indebtedness would never have been a bar to further loans. An amendment has been made to section 21 to provide that such indebtedness need not be taken into account until 5 years after the effective date of H. R. 5991. This will require such indebtedness to be paid within 5 years from the date H. R. 5991 becomes law, or it will have to be taken into account in determining the eligibility of the debtors to obtain further production and subsistence loans.

The provisions of H. R. 5991 requiring committee certification as to the need of the borrower for the credit, his responsibility with respect to fulfilling his obligations, and his agreements to refinance his loan, have been included in the conference substitute, with certain other conditons which likewise relate to all loans, as section 44 of title IV of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act. The following two changes were made in these provisions: (1) The rate of interest which should be used in determining whether an applicant could obtain credit elsewhere at reasonable rates and terms was reduced from 6 to 5 percent; (2) there was eliminated from the county committee certification which will be used in connection with production and subsistence loans the reference to the "character, ability, industry, and experience" of the applicant. In lieu thereof the committee is required to certify that the borrower "will honestly endeavor to carry out undertakings and obligations required of him" in connection with the loan.

The Senate amendment would have authorized the making of loans under title II to veterans who desire the practical farm and home guidance furnished by Farm Security Administration without regard to their prior farming experience or ability to get credit elsewhere. It also would authorize the making of grants to eligible individuals, where necessary to aid in their rehabilitation, and to cooperative associations furnishing medical, dental, or hospital services to such individuals. The conference substitute eliminates both of these provisions.

TENANT PURCHASE LOANS

The Senate amendment would permit tenant purchase loans for the repair, improvement, and enlargement of farms the same as H. R. 5991. The Senate amendment also would authorize the making of such loans to assist borrowers in making repairs, and improvements to adjust their farming operations to changing conditions. The conference agreement adopts this part of the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment to section 1 (c) of the act provides that loans may be made to veterans who have pensionable disabilities to enable them to acquire farms meeting their farming capacity and affording them income which, together with their pensions, will enable them to meet expenses and repay their loans. The conference substitute adopts this part of the Senate amendment.

H. R. 5991 would increase the rate of interest on tenant purchase loans from 3 percent, as provided by existing law, to 4 percent. The Senate amendment would not change existing law. The conference substitute provides that the interest rate on such loans will be 3½ percent.

The conference substitute deletes the provisions of H. R. 5991, which would have required a tenant purchase borrower to pay fees and charges for appraisal and inspection.

The conference agreement adopts that part of the Senate amendment limiting the size of tenant purchase loans to the average value of efficient family-type farm-management units in the county, parish, or locality where the farm is located. This provision is the same, in substance, as the provision in the Department of Agriculture Appropriation Act, 1947.

The conference substitute includes the Senate amendment to section 4 of the act under which funds available for title I loans would be allocated among the several States and Territories on the basis of farm population and tenancy, except that each State or Territory might have allocated to it such amount up to $100,000 as may be necessary for the making of loans in each fiscal year.

The Senate amendment would provide that special appropriations for veterans could be allocated to the States and Territories without regard to farm population and the prevalence of tenancy. H. R. 5991 would provide that there may be distributed to each State such amounts as are necessary to finance all bona fide applications of qualified veterans. The conference agreement adopts the provisions of H. R. 5991 in this respect. Under the conference substitute, therefore, the funds available for such loans will first be allocated on the basis of farm population and the prevalence of tenancy, except that up to $100,000 may be allocated to each State or Territory. After such allocation, the funds may be adjusted between States and Territories to permit the financing of all bona fide applications of veterans.

INSURED FARM TENANT MORTGAGES

Only a few substantive changes were made in the provisions of H. R. 5991 relating to farm mortgage insurance. The amount authorized to be appropriated to constitute the farm mortgage insurance fund was increased from $10,000,000 to $25,000,000. The base rate of interest on the mortgage to be insured was reduced from 3 to 2½ percent per annum in order to conform the total cost to the borrower, including the 1 percent mortgage insurance premium, to the 3½ percent agreed upon for direct tenant purchase loans. It was provided that the Secretary might require that the fees for inspection, appraisal, and other usual loan costs be paid either by the mortgagor or mortgagee instead of only by the mortgagor. A provision was included to make it clear that the proceeds of such fees could be used for administrative expenses.

A technical change was made in section 15 (a) to clarify the authority of banks which are members of the Federal Reserve System to purchase these insured mortgages.

GENERAL PROVISIONS

The conferees agreed upon an amendment to H. R. 5991 which would make available to the Secretary of Agriculture, for carrying out the provisions of title II of the conference substitute, the appropriations made in the Department of Agriculture Appropriation Act, 1947, for farmers' crop production and harvesting (Emergency Crop and Feed) loans, and for loans, grants, and rural rehabilitation. These latter funds would also be available for liquidation of the resettlement projects. This amendment also makes available for direct tenant purchase loans the appropriations made in the Department of Agriculture Appropriation Act, 1947, for "Farm Tenancy."

H. R. 5991 as passed by the House contained a general provision on appropriations which related to the three types of financing to be provided by the bill, namely, production and subsistence loans, tenant purchase loans, and insured tenant purchase mortgages. In the conference substitute, this section was eliminated. In lieu thereof there has been included among the provisions relating to each type of financing, authorizations for such appropriations as the Congress may find necessary to carry out those provisions.

Section 41 (a) of H. R. 5991 relating to the appointment of personnel has been changed to provide for the appointment of an Administrator of the Farmers' Home Administration by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, whose salary shall not exceed $10,000 per annum. The ceiling of $9,000 on the other officers and experts appointed pursuant to this section has been changed to $10,000. All other personnel would be appointed pursuant to civil-service laws and their salaries fixed under the Classification Act. A provision was added authorizing the Secretary for not to exceed 9 months to appoint or continue to employ, without regard to the civil-service laws or Classification Act, the non-civil-service employees of Farm Security Administration and the Emergency Crop and Feed Loan Division who are needed in carrying out the provision of the law.

There was deleted from H. R. 5991 the authority to carry on operations in the Virgin Islands.

H. R. 5991 did not originally provide for use of regional or area finance offices. The conferees agreed that it might be more economical to the Government to continue the area finance offices, and it was also agreed that the Secretary should have a reasonable time, not beyond June 30, 1947, within which to liquidate the existing regional offices. Appropriate amendments were added to accomplish these purposes.

The conference substitute includes in the compromise powers (sec. 41 (g)) the provisions of S 1507 authorizing release of title I borrowers who transfer their farms to other approved applicants who assume the outstanding indebtedness against the farm or assume that portion of the indebtedness equal to the earning capacity of the farm, subject to a finding by the county committee that the original borrower has cooperated in good faith with the Secretary, farmed in a workmanlike manner and used due diligence to maintain the security against loss.

The conference substitute eliminates the requirement that the installment payments on loans under the act (sec. 48) be "equal" installments.

The provision in H. R. 5991 for suits in State courts was eliminated. An amendment was added to permit legal work arising as a result of transactions under the act to be handled through the Department of Justice, upon the determination by the Solicitor of the Department of Agriculture, as well as by attorneys of the Solicitor's Office, or local attorneys approved by the Solicitor.

The authority of the Secretary of Agriculture to operate property purchased at foreclosure sales was limited to operation for a period not in excess of 1 year from the date of acquisition.

Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLANNAGAN] yield?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. This bill contains provisions which have not been considered by the House; is that correct?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. It does not.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Does this bill contain provisions that have not been considered by the Senate?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. It does not.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Do you categorically say that this bill does not contain provisions that have not been considered by the House?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. All of the provisions of the bill were considered by the House and Senate. We made some adjustments in some of the provisions of the bill. This legislation was carefully gone over by the House Committee on Agriculture. We had extended hearings and a unanimous report was made. It was thoroughly considered by the House and certain amendments were made by the House. It went to the Senate, and the Senate struck all of the House bill out after the enacting clause and substituted what is known as the Bankhead bill. Then we went to conference, and after the conferees gave thorough study to the whole subject matter we reached a unanimous agreement and the report is signed by all of the Senate conferees and by all of the House conferees. I think on the whole we have an excellent bill, a bill that spells the program out and will force the Administrator to operate in the American way. We provide for the liquidation of all of these—what I call crackpot projects—that were set up by former Administrators. I am glad to report that most of these projects have alreadys been wound up and the rest are in process of liquidation.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Why are some of the farm organizations against this bill?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. There were certain amendments offered by some of the farm organizations that the Committee on Agriculture gave thorough study to, and after study we could not see how we could follow some of the recommendations. Some of the recommendations, of course, were adopted. Those recommendations were also thoroughly considered by the Senate. The bill that we bring before you represents the combined judgment of the Senate and House conferees.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOPE. May I say to the gentleman from Ohio that I know of no farm organization which is opposing this bill as such. There are some farm organizations which were anxious to have the Flannagan bill which was passed by this House become a law before this bill in order that the agencies included in this bill might be consolidated with other lending agencies making loans to farmers. I think the position of some of the farm organizations still is that they would prefer to have it that way, but I know of no farm organization which is in definite opposition to this bill.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I understand that both the Grange and the Farm Bureau are against this bill.

Mr FLANNAGAN. The objection to the legislation by the Grange or the Farm Bureau has been, in the main, correctly stated by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE]. They were of the opinion that what is known as the Flannagan bill consolidating all agricultural lending agencies would be passed ahead of this legislation. In that view I concurred. We passed the Flannagan bill in the House and sent it to the Senate. The Senate so far, however, has not acted upon it.

This legislation is urgent. It sets up the first basic legislation we have had on the subject. It sets up a definite program and spells that program out so that the Administrator of Farm Security hereafter will have to follow the wishes of Congress as expressed in this legislation. While I think that the Flannagan bill should have been passed first so as to bring about the proper consolidation of our agricultural lending agencies, due to the urgency of this legislation, I hope that those who shared my views will join in adopting the conference report. We cannot afford to let feelings defeat the enactment of this important legislation.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. We have been rather unkind in some of our references to the Appropriations Committee in times past. This bill gives us a chance to do what the Appropriations Committee has asked us to do, that is, to bring in legislation. This agency has been operated under Executive order brought in year after year by the Appropriations Committee and has had complete study by a very efficient committee. It has not had a partisan or willful approach in any way. Every member of the Committee on Agriculture who is present has supported it and supports it at this time.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman made the statement that he was trying to consolidate a lot of these crackpot agencies that were established under the former administration. I thought we were just having a continuation of that administration. Now you are coming to realize that a lot of these crackpot organizations that you established were all wrong and all wet, and you are trying to get rid of them. I congratulate the committee.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Is it not a fact that the House Committee on Agriculture has not considered all parts of this measure?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I think the House Committee on Agriculture has considered every one of the provisions of this legislation not only once but many times.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOPE. I think it should be said that there has probably been no bill reported from the House Committee on Agriculture for several years which received as much consideration as this bill. In the first place the bill is the result of an extensive study made by a subcommittee of the Committee on Agriculture, the Cooley committee. That study covered a period of several months. The bill was drafted by that subcommittee after a great deal of thought and study. It was considered thoroughly by the full committee in the last Congress. It was again considered by the full committee in this session of Congress; so it has had the most thorough study that any measure possibly could have in a congressional committee.

The gentleman from Ohio wants to know if there is anything in this bill which has not been considered by the House. I can say that there are no principles involved in this bill which have not been considered by the House and by the House committee. The Senate, of course, added some language. They substituted another bill, but if it were not for that fact, of course, this matter would not be here in the nature of a conference report. What is true of this bill is true of every House bill which contains Senate amendments; there is naturally some language in it that was not considered by the House. However, the amendments which were adopted by the Senate cover the same subject matter contained in the House bill. I can say categorically to the gentleman from Ohio that no new subject matter of importance was included in the Senate amendments.

In the main, the bill as agreed upon in conference follows the lines of the House bill. A good many of the changes in language are due to the fact that the conference committee substituted an agency known as the Farmers' Home Administration for the Farmers' Home Corporation. This change does not in any way affect the powers or authority contained in the House bill. They can be carried out just as well and as completely through an agency as through a corporation. Under the bill, in its final form, the powers which the House bill vested in the Farmers' Home Corporation are given to the Secretary of Agriculture to be administered by him through the Farmers' Home Administration.

It is unfortunate, in my opinion, that the Flannagan bill, consolidating all Government credit agencies making loans to farmers, did not become a law prior to the enactment of this legislation. It is apparent, however, that there is no possibility that the Flannagan bill will be enacted by this Congress, although the House passed the bill by a large majority some time ago. I hope that early in the next Congress it will be possible to enact the Flannagan bill. In view of the need for some definite legislative authority for the rehabilitation activities which have been carried on by the Farm Security Administration, I think that this bill should become a law now. For years it has been necessary to make appropriations for rehabilitation loans without any specific authority of law. The Cooley committee in its investigation found that because there were no definite legislative restrictions upon the activities of the agency, it had carried out many unsound and unwise policies and had wasted vast sums of public money. At the same time, the committee found that there was a real field of activity for a Government agency in the field of rehabilitation loans. This measure brings together the Federal agencies which in the past have extended what might be termed soft credit to farmers. This includes emergency crop and feed loans, rehabilitation loans, and loans to farmers made under the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act.

Perhaps the most important provision of the bill is that which amends title I of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act by providing for insured loans to farm tenants in the nature of the loans heretofore made by the Federal Housing Administration. It has been recognized for a long time that it was impossible to go very far toward solving the problems of farm tenancy in this country under the original Bankhead-Jones Act. That act has operated well, but it would take appropriations in far greater volume than are ever likely to be made to achieve any substantial progress in making landowners out of tenants. Under the provisions of this part of the bill, however, advantage is taken of the great oversupply of private credit in this country.

Banks, other financial institutions and individuals who desire to make loans to tenants purchasing a farm home may now do so in perfect safety by having these loans insured by the Federal Government. This plan has met with great success in enabling urban dwellers to become home owners. I believe that under a proper administration of the act equal success can be achieved in the field of making landowners out of farm tenants. If this can be done, it will mark a milestone in the agricultural history of this country. These provisions of the House bill are maintained intact in the bill as agreed upon in conference, the only substantial change being that the interest rate and other charges to be paid by the borrower is reduced from 4 to 3½ percent.

The Cooley committee, which investigated farm security and made the recommendations embodied in this bill, was composed of the following members of the Committee on Agriculture: HAROLD D. COOLEY, North Carolina, chairman; JOHN W. FLANNAGAN, Jr., Virginia; ORVILLE ZIMMERMAN, Missouri; STEPHEN PACE, Georgia; CLIFFORD R. HOPE, Kansis; ANTON J. JOHNSON, Illinois; and Ross RIZLEY, Oklahoma.

That part of the bill which sets up a system of mortgage insurance for tenant purchase loans was proposed and presented by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE], and great credit is due to him for his splendid work in this connection. The Cooley committee, under the able leadership of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY], made a most thorough investigation of the entire Farm Security set-up. While this legislation is primarily the work of the Cooley committee, much interest has been taken in it by other members of the Committee on Agriculture. In particular, the gentleman from Wisconsin, Hon. REID F. MURRAY, has done much to bring about enactment of this measure. No Member of Congress has shown greater interest in the problems of farm tenancy and in bettering the lot of the small independent farmer.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all members of the committee may have the privilege of extending their remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBERTSON of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I believe this conference report on H. R. 5991 should be accepted. Certainly this legislation will simplify and improve the credit services to farmers and in the end should promote farm ownership by the abolishment of certain farm lending agencies, and then by defining the lending powers of the Secretary of Agriculture, will authorize Government insurance of loans to farmers by creating preferences for loans and insured mortgages.

In my State of North Dakota, because of legislation passed by the legislative assembly precluding action for recovery under the deficiency judgment law, the Federal land bank has withdrawn from the State of North Dakota. This legislation should supplant the services formerly rendered by the Federal land bank. The efficiency produced by this legislation with the special benefits that will accrue to my State because of the withdrawal of the Federal land bank prompts me to support this conference report.

Congressmen FLANNAGAN, COOLEY, HOPE, RIZLEY, MURRAY of Wisconsin, and other members of the committee are to be congratulated for their fine work in bringing this bill before the Congress.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

VETO MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—ROSELLA J. MASTERS

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States which was read and, together with the accompanying bill, referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

I am returning herewith without approval, enrolled enactment H. R. 4458, proposing the payment of $250 to Rosella J. Masters for annual leave accrued to her while an employee of the War Department.

It appears that the claimant was employed by the War Department from May 5, 1943, to December 23, 1944, when she was transferred to a temporary position in the Agriculture Department effective December 26, 1944, the intervening 2 days being nonwork days; that at the time she was separated from the War Department she had to her credit 263 hours of accrued annual leave, which could not, under the leave regulations, be credited to her in her temporary position in the Agriculture Department. The act of December 21, 1944 (58 Stat. 845), provides for the payment for accumulated and accrued annual leave in a lump sum to an employee who is separated from the Government service or when he is transferred to another Government agency under a different leave system. As the employee in this case was transferred to another agency under the same leave system and without a break in service she was not separated within the meaning of the lump-sum leave payment act and, accordingly, her claim for payment for her accrued and accumulated annual leave was disallowed by the General Accounting Office by settlement dated September 21, 1945. As it is reported that there have been a number of employees who suffered the loss of their annual leave without payment therefor under similar circumstances, to select one individual for relief would result in unjust discrimination and preferential treatment. Aside from that objection, the leave credit of 263 hours, plus 16 hours for which she would have been entitled to payment without charge against annual leave covering December 25, 1944, and January 1, 1945, had her case properly come within the purview of the lump-sum leave payment act—a total of 279 hours—at 85 cents per hour would have amounted to only $237.15 instead of $250 the amount covered by the enactment. Accordingly, aside from the point that no proper basis appears for singling out Mrs. Masters' case for preferential treatment over others similarly involved, I can see no justification for the payment to her of $250 as proposed in the enrolled enactment.

MISS RUTH LOIS CUMMINGS—VETO MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, H. R. 3480, "for the relief of Miss Ruth Lois Cummings."

It is the purpose of the bill to pay the sum of $5,075.53 to Miss Ruth Lois Cummings, of Paterson, N. J., in settlement of her claim against the United States by reason of the death, and transportation expenses incident thereto, of her father, Walter William Cummings, as the result of an accident involving an Army airplane on August 2, 1943, in Charlevoix, Mich.

It appears that the father of the claimant met his death while in the service of the War Department as a civilian expert instrument engineer when the plane occupied by the deceased and certain Army officers crashed while making an experimental flight on an automatic pilot.

The claimant was denied compensation under the Federal Employees' Compensation Act, since that act does not authorize payment to nondependents, and since, upon investigation, it was determined that the claimant was not dependent upon her father at the time of his death.

While the circumstances involved in this case have a strong human appeal, approval of the measure would establish a discriminatory precedent, since it would allow compensation to a nondependent relative of a civilian employee, which is denied hundreds of nondependent relatives of deceased civilian employees of the Federal Government. Even the claims of nondependent relatives of deceased servicemen are not allowable in the adjudication of claims for pension or compensation coming within the jurisdiction of the Veterans' Administration.

I, therefore, feel obliged to withhold my approval of this measure.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4497) to create an Indian Claims Commission, and to provide for the powers, duties, and functions thereof, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

Amendment No. 1: The House bill provided that the Commission shall hear and determine "all claims of every nature whatsoever." The Senate amended this so as to permit the Commission to hear and determine "the following claims." The amendment was not a matter of substance, however, because one of the classifications of "claims" enumerated by the Senate was "all other claims in law or equity." Consequently, the conferees agreed to the Senate amendment.

Amendment No. 2: This amendment, like Amendment No. 1, was merely a change in language, without any change in substantive meaning, occasioned by the Senate's conferring jurisdiction in "the following claims." Accordingly, the conferees agreed to the Senate amendment.

Amendment No. 3: One of the classifications of claims enumerated in the House bill was "claims arising under the Constitution, laws, treaties of the United States, and Executive orders of the President." The Senate amended this so as to limit it to claims arising "in law or equity." This amendment was agreed to by the conferees.

Amendment No. 4: The bill, as passed by the House of Representatives, enumerated six classes of claims cognizable by the Commission. The Senate, in the interest of simplicity, reduced these to three, being careful to state in its report, that the change was not intended to deprive the claimants of the right to invoke the jurisdiction of the Commission in any case which would have been cognizable under the language of the bill as it passed the House. Out of an abundance of caution the conferees reinserted two of the classifications struck by the Senate because they wanted to make sure that if any tribal claimant could prove facts sufficient to make a case under either of these classifications, the Commission would have authority to make an award to such claimant.

The first of these classifications, consisting of "claims which would result if the treaties, contracts, and agreements between the claimant and the United States were revised on the ground of fraud, duress, unconscionable consideration, mutual or unilateral mistake, whether of law or fact, or any other ground cognizable by a court of equity" is aptly explained in the report of the House committee. The second of these classifications covers claims arising from the taking by the United States of Indian lands, i. e., lands to which tribal claimants had "Indian title" or the "right of occupancy." Sometimes these lands were taken under the guise of unratified treaties, sometimes without any semblance of a treaty. The reinsertion of this classification makes it plain that where claimant can prove sufficient facts within the language of this classification the Commission has full authority to award proper damages therefor.

Both of the classes of claims reinserted by this amendment may fall within the category of "fair and honorable dealings." To set them forth explicitly helps to clarify the contents of that category.

The fourth classification in the House bill, namely, claims on account of any breach of duty committed to the injury of the claimant by any officer or agent of the United States while acting within the apparent scope of his authority, and which was also struck by the Senate, was not reinserted because it was felt it was covered by general law and the other enumerated causes of action, in particular, those numbered (2) and (3) in the bill as amended by the conferees.

Amendment No. 5: The House bill provided that no claim should be considered by the Commission where a final determination of such claim had already been made on the merits. The Senate amendment, made upon recommendation of the Department of Justice, provided that all defenses, except statutes of limitation and laches, should be available to the United States. This amendment was accepted by the conferees. It is implicit, however, from the purpose, history and language of the entire bill, that this amendment does not permit the Government to plead as a defense to any of the five enumerated classes of claims that such facts constitute only a political and not a justiciable wrong for the bill expressly makes such wrong justiciable by authorizing suit thereon. As stated in the Senate report, this amendment does not permit the raising of legal defenses in cases based on standards of "fair and honorable dealings," for the bill expressly authorizes suit on such claims. Nor is this amendment intended to prelude the adjudication by the Commission of any claim authorized to be heard and determined under this section which has not been in fact previously adjudicated or settled on its merits, or as to which it has been previously held that the court had no judicial power to determine.

Amendment No. 6: The bill as passed by the House provided that in the determination of any claim by the Commission, the court should apply to the United States the same principles of law as would be applied to an ordinary fiduciary. This provision was struck by the Senate as a part of its amendment No. 6. The conferees agreed to the elimination of this provision because it is now well settled that without express language the United States owes a very high degree of fiduciary duty to Indian Tribes, and the bill, by section 24, provides "That nothing contained in this section shall be construed as altering the fiduciary or other relations between the United States and the several Indian tribes, bands, or groups."

The bill as originally passed by the House also required deduction of legal offsets in all cases and permitted, in the discretion of the Commission, deduction of gratuities in cases based upon "fair and honorable dealings." The Senate amendment made all types of deductions wholly discretionary with the Commission.

The conferees agreed that the Senate amendment gave too broad a discretion to the Commission and accordingly rewrote the section to require, first, that all deductions generally allowable in the Court of Claims against non-Indian claimants shall be allowed by the Commission in cases heard under this act, and secondly, that gratuities of certain specified types, which are not allowable in the Court of Claims against non-Indian claimants, shall not be allowed by the Commission under this act against Indian claimants. The effect of the substitute language is to limit the discretionary authority of the Commission and to remove in large part the possible discrimination against Indian claimants in the matter of gratuities. The gratuitous expenditures which the United States is not permitted to set off are monies spent for the removal of the claimant from one place to another at the request of the United States, or for agency or other administrative, educational, health, or highway purposes, as well as other expenditures which, under existing law, cannot be offset, and which generally relate to relief payments made since 1933, which were available to whites as well as to Indians.

Prior to 1920 only one jurisdictional act permitted the Government to offset gratuities; prior to that time 15 tribal suits were disposed of in the Court of Claims without the Government being permitted to offset any gratuities. After 1920, jurisdictional acts for the Five Civilized Tribes did not permit the United States to deduct gratuities. Other jurisdictional acts have permitted the United States to set off gratuities in varying degrees. In 1935 the Second Deficiency Appropriation Act permitted the Government to set off certain types of gratuities against tribal judgments. In no other field of law, known to your conferees, is a defendant permitted to set off against a valid judgment, a gratuity given to the plaintiff. Under these facts the conferees felt that there should be uniform offset provisions in all tribal suits. They felt also that there was no justification in charging the tribes with money spent for removal of the claimant from one place to another at the request of the United States, for such removals were generally for the benefit of the United States; also, that the tribes should not be charged with expenditures for agency or other administrative expenses because such expenses have been as much to accomplish the purposes of the expanding economy of our white citizenry as for the benefit of the Indians; also, that since any other citizen of the United States could sue the United States without facing an offset for educational expenses, there was no justification in charging the Indians therefor; also, that since a substantial part of the hospitalization and other health expenditures have been made to prevent the spread of disease from the Indians to the white population, there was no justification for charging the Indians therefor; also, that since most of the highways on and through Indian reservations are for the benefit of the entire public, they should not, with propriety, be charged against tribal judgments. The other gratuitous expenditures which the conferees decided should not be set off are precluded from being set off under the present law.

The bill does permit the Commission, where it finds that the nature of the claim and the entire course of dealing between the claimant and the United States warrants such action, to set off other gratuitous expenditures recognized to be for the direct benefit of the Indians, such as expenditures made for the purchase of land.

Amendment No. 7: The Senate amendment eliminated the House provision for transfer of suits pending in the Court of Claims. The purpose of this amendment was to avoid the waste incident to a de novo presentation before the Commission of a case on which the Court of Claims and the parties litigant had already expended time and effort. The conferees agreed to this change with a proviso, drafted by the Department of Justice, allowing the Court of Claims to consider claims based upon "fair and honorable dealings" arising out of the subject matter of any such Court of Claims suit. This is designed to permit the Court of Claims to dispose finally of all pending cases instead of having such cases returned to the Commission for the hearing of claims based upon "fair and honorable dealings." Likewise, in order to give the parties the same rights in the Court of Claims that they will have in the Commission, a proviso has been added extending to cases now pending or hereafter brought in the Court of Claims the rules as to offsets specified for the Commission in section 2.

Amendments Nos. 8 and 9: The House bill referred to the litigative proceedings of the Commission as constituting a "trial or suit." The Senate, by amendments Nos. 8 and 9, denominated these proceedings to be "hearings" in accordance with customary administrative language. The Senate amendments making this change were accepted.

Amendment No. 10: The House bill provided that any compromise of any claim made by the Attorney General should be filed with Congress and have the same effect as awards of the Commission. The Senate amended this so as to give the compromise the effect only of a recommendation to the Congress. In view of the decision of the conferees to give finality to the decisions of the Commission, subject to court review, as explained infra under amendment No. 11, the Senate conferees agreed to the restoration of the House language.

Amendment No. 11: The House bill provided that the findings of the Commission shall have the effect of judgments of the Court of Claims and be paid in like manner. The Senate amended this so as to provide that when the awards of the Commission have been filed with Congress "the amount found due by the Commission shall, upon appropriation therefor by Congress, be paid in such manner as Congress shall provide." The Senate amendment, it was felt, left uncertain the status of final determinations by the Commission. In order to make perfectly clear the intention of both houses that the determinations of the Commission should, unless reversed, have the same finality as judgments of the Court of Claims, section 22 (a) was rewritten to provide expressly that future Congresses may appropriate such sums as may be necessary to pay the final awards of the Commission. At the same time, in deference to the position taken by the Department of Justice that decisions of the Commission should be reviewable on the facts as well as on the law by the Court of Claims, appropriate amendments were made in sections 20 (b), 21 and 22, which apply to the Commission the forms of review embodied in the recently enacted Administrative Procedure Act. Under these provisions decisions of the Commission may be reversed

(a) if the Court of Claims determines that the findings of fact are not supported by substantial evidence, or (b) if the Court of Claims finds an error in the law applied by the Commission. Under the latter heading the Court of Claims is empowered to reverse a decision of the Commission based upon the standard of "fair and honorable dealings," inasmuch as the interpretation of such a standard, written into the law of the land by this act, becomes an issue of law. The Court of Claims is likewise empowered to determine whether the findings of fact support the conclusion of the Commission. With these extensive review provisions the Department of Justice agreed to withdraw objections earlier raised to the provision authorizing appropriation in payment of awards made by the Commission.

Amendment No. 12: Amendment No. 12 was agreed to by the conferees in order that section 25 of the bill would be consistent with Senate amendment No. 6 as amended by the conferees.

Amendment No. 13: The Senate added a new section to the bill providing that if any provision of the act or its application is held invalid, the remainder of the act, or other applications of such provisions, shall not be affected. The conferees accepted this amendment.

HENRY M. JACKSON,
W. G. STIGLER,
KARL E. MUNDT,
CHAS. R. ROBERTSON,
A. M. FERNANDEZ,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. STIGLER. Mr. Speaker, this bill is here as the result of long study and investigation of Indian problems throughout the United States made by a subcommittee of the Committee on Indian Affairs last year. After the study was completed many recommendations were made for the improvement of conditions among our Indians. Among these was that a bill should be introduced creating an Indian Claims Commission; in other words, setting up machinery so that the various Indian tribes of the United States might have a special place for the hearing of any unsettled claim against the United States. Extensive hearings were held on the bill, and several amendments were adopted, and the bill was reintroduced as a committee bill.

The conference report before us has been adopted by the Senate, and it now comes back here for action by the House. I sincerely hope the House acts favorably. This bill contains legislation which is long overdue. It will mean the dawn of a new era for the American Indian. It will mean that at long last those Indian tribes who have unsettled claims against our Government, some of which have been pending for more than 50 years, will have an opportunity to have them settled once and for all time to come.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STIGLER. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. MUNDT. We have considered this bill carefully on the Republican side. We have gone into all the amendments, and it has the unanimous support of all of the members of the Committee on Indian Affairs. We members of the conference committee have spent many long hours preparing the final version of this legislation, and last Saturday morning we reached a complete agreement with the Senate conferees. Our conference report appears beginning on page 10539 of the RECORD for July 27. We may file a supplementary conference statement later as we were pressed for time to meet Saturday night's dead line, but much of our interpretative comment appears in Saturday's report. I have also conferred with the minority leader, and this legislation has his approval. I feel sure we are ready to vote the adoption of the conference report.

I might add, Mr. Speaker, that this legislation had its immediate origin not only in the report of the House Indian Affairs Investigating Committee, which toured much of the Indian country a few years ago and of which I was privileged to serve as acting chairman, but that it actually goes back to a memorial passed by the Legislature of the State of South Dakota urging Congress to undertake such an investigation and to take action to solve the problem of outstanding Indian Claims.

Growing out of that memorial to Congress, I introduced House Resolution 166, on March 15, 1943. The House adopted my resolution setting up the investigation which it provided, and during the summer months of 1943 our subcommittee made careful and comprehensive studies in the Indian country and followed them by extensive hearings here in Washington. Our committee report listed the establishment of an Indian Claims Commission as top priority legislation essential to the ultimate solution of the Indian problem, and today's legislation embodied in this conference report carries that recommendation into final action. I feel confident the House will today approve it, and since the Senate acted favorably on these recommendations on Saturday, the legislation will then require only President Truman's signature to become law.

Congress and the country have fumbled with the Indian problem for over a century, and for more than 50 years there has been much talk but little action about setting up an Indian Claims Commission. Today we are to get action which marks the beginning of a new era of Indian welfare and opportunity. This is in my opinion the most constructive piece of Indian legislation to come before Congress during the past quarter of a century. At long last it provides a substantial degree of justice for the American Indian and it creates an avenue by which his outstanding claims against the Government can be finally and equitably settled. Once that is done we can proceed with the completion of the challenge which confronts us to give the red man a white man's opportunity on this great North American Continent which was originally his. I urge approval of the conference report.

Mr. ROBERTSON of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I urge the adoption of this conference report on H. R. 4497 by the House. I am glad to advise the House that the conferees of the Senate and the House are in complete agreement.

This is a forward step in behalf of the Indian population in the United States. The Commission provided for in this legislation will have authority to compromise long-delayed claims. It will be possible to bring to an end litigation, tribal difficulties, and the adjustment of unratified treaty claims between the Indians and their Government. It will establish once and for all that the Indians will have their day in the sun.

It is general knowledge that the courts are not open to an Indian and our civil liberties have never been extended to Indian tribes. We have recently concluded a great war, the purposes of which were to permit the democratic processes, rights, and liberties to be extended to all the tongues and tribes upon this earth. And yet the original Americans here in the United States have no forum under the Stars and Stripes where they have the right to go and assert their rights.

The fifth amendment to the Constitution says that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, that is universal, and certainly an Indian is a person. The right is of little value if it cannot be enforced. So the rights of the Indians under the fifth amendment mean practically nothing, at least they amount to nothing. The courts of this country are not open to these Indians.

Inasmuch as I was coauthor with Congressman STIGLER, of Oklahoma, of this legislation, I here offer for the RECORD part of my remarks taken from the hearings before the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. Chairman, since I introduced one of these bills I would like to have this statement appear in the record as a basis of inspiration for presenting this legislation.

I have watched the procedure of Indian affairs in Congress for some time. I have discovered that probably the Indian question has been with us for a long time and a great many Members of Congress represent areas that have nothing to do with Indians.

It appears to be my problem to represent a State at large which has a considerable number of Indians, namely, the State of North Dakota, and I have been brought into contact with them on many questions.

The thing which has impressed me in Congress so often is the lack of dramatization of claims, at least small claims. They come to the floor on the Consent Calendar, and someone who has no particular interest or is sick and tired of the long history of Indian claims or whatever the case may be, he can knock it out and at no time does it ever seem to be that Indian claims get a square deal.

I have no disposition to say that in any sense of the matter the Department fails in that respect. I think the Congress fails, perhaps not with an intent to do wrong, but I do feel that such a commission would help materially. I belong to that group of people who think commissions should be abandoned rather than added, but I do think there is no way in the world to dramatize these claims which have been with us for a very long time.

The Indians do not get a square deal at the hands of Congress and that is the reason which prompted me in bringing this bill before Congress; and I think if this commission will bring bills in in a manner that will show study and thorough preparation, that Members of Congress will consider these claims in a vastly more intellectual manner than they have in the past and than I have observed them in the last few years.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PATENT OFFICE

Mr. LANHAM submitted the following conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 4080) to amend section 476, Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 35, sec. 2), providing for officers and employees of the Patent Office, and for other purposes:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4080) to amend section 476, Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 35, sec. 2), providing for officers and employees of the Patent Office, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the text of the bill and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

S. C., title 35, sec. 7): Provided, That no such examiner shall so serve for more than ninety days in any calendar year but thereafter they shall have authority to act and sign decisions and papers necessary to complete action on cases heard during such ninety days: And provided further, That not more than one such examiner shall be among the members of the board of appeals hearing an appeal.

"SEC. 2. This Act shall take effect on the date of approval and shall expire three years after such date."

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4080) to amend section 476, Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 35, sec. 2), providing for officers and employees of the Patent Office, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate amendment to the text of the bill strikes out all of the House bill after the enacting clause. The committee of conference recommends that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, with an amendment which is a substitute for both the House bill and the Senate amendment, and that the Senate agree to the same.

The House bill amended section 476 of the Revised Statutes by adding at the end of the first sentence thereof a proviso which authorized primary examiners and law examiners of the Patent Office to serve, by direction of the Commissioner of Patents, as examiners in chief, but limited such service, in the case of any such examiner, to not more than 30 days in any calendar year.

The first section of the Senate amendment provides that, notwithstanding the provisions of section 476 of the Revised Statutes, the Commissioner of Patents is authorized to designate examiners of the principal examiner grade or higher, having the requisite ability, to serve as examiners in chief. It also provides that examiners so designated shall be fully qualified to act as members of the board of appeals provided for by section 482 of the Revised Statutes. No examiner so designated shall serve as examiner in chief for more than 90 days in any calendar year, and not more than one such examiner shall be among the members of the board of appeals hearing an appeal.

Section 2 of the Senate amendment provides that the act shall expire 3 years after the date of its approval.

The substitute agreed to in conference is the same as the Senate amendment except for the inclusion in the conference substitute of language which grants to each examiner designated to serve temporarily as examiner in chief authority, after the expiration of such temporary service, to act and sign decisions and papers necessary to complete action on cases heard during such temporary service.

FRANK W. BOYKIN,
FRITZ G. LANHAM,
FRED A. HARTLEY, JR.,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the conference report on the bill (H. R. 4080) to amend section 476, Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 35, sec. 2), providing for officers and employees of the Patent Office and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman please explain the conference report?

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, this conference report has already been agreed to by the Senate. It is purely a formal matter. The bill provides that for as much as 90 days in any calendar year the examiners in the Patent Office may serve as examiners in chief. The purpose of that is, without adding in any way to the personnel, to speed up the work of the Patent Office. All that the conference report does is to provide that after they have completed 90 days of such service, if there are decisions or papers to be signed relating to matters concerning which they have served, they can sign those papers and decisions.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RELINQUISHING MINERAL RIGHTS OF THE UNITED STATES UNDER CERTAIN LANDS IN THE COUNTY OF SANTA BARBARA, CALIF.

Mr. DOYLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 5692) to relinquish the mineral rights of the United States under certain lands in the county of Santa Barbara, Calif.

This is the bill for which I asked consideration Saturday. At that time the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] objected, but later Saturday he very kindly notified me he was willing to withdraw his objection. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is on the floor now.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object in order to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, my reason for objecting was that this surplus property is supposed to be turned back to the rightful owners, who sold the property to the Government. I thought this bill gave the municipalities the opportunity to take the property over before the individual citizen had that right. I found out I was in error on that matter. I want to give the heirs to this property the same rights that any other people would have under similar circumstances, so I withdraw my objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman make the definite statement that every other individual has been permitted to retain the mineral rights?

Mr. DOYLE. I do. The report of the Secretary of War so shows, and it is in the files of this Congress.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. What has been the practice in other parts of the country?

Mr. DOYLE. I do not know. I am familiar only with the California practice, on this airport, and that is as I have just stated. That practice is followed in California with regard to our Government on this airport. Those rights have been allowed to stay with the owners.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to convey, release, and relinquish to the heirs or devisees of J. E. O'Donnell, deceased, subject to the administration of his estate, and to their respective heirs and assigns forever, all of the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to all minerals, including oil, gas, asphaltum, and other hydrocarbon substances, in, upon, and under the real property described in the final judgment and decree in condemnation, entered September 12, 1942, in C. O. book 11, page 164 of Judgments, in the office of the clerk of the United States District Court, Southern District of California, Central Division, at Los Angeles, Calif., in action 2184 B civil, titled United States of America, plaintiff, v. 3,000 Acres of Land, More or Less, situate in Santa Barbara County, State of California, and so forth, Frank Vicenti, and others, defendants, together with the right to enter upon the surface of such real property for the purpose of prospecting for and removing such substances.

(b) The right to enter upon the surface of such real property for the purpose of prospecting for and removing such substances shall not be exercised before July 17, 1947, or before such earlier date as may be designated by the Secretary of War.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 12, strike out lines 12 to 16, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(b) The right to enter upon the surface of such real property for the purpose of prospecting for and removing such substances shall not be exercised for the duration of the existing national emergency and for 6 months thereafter or for such lesser period as may be designated by the Secretary of War."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

STREAM-POLLUTION CONTROL "MUST" LEGISLATION

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I have been deeply interested for many years in a program to control the pollution of water in our streams and rivers and provide the necessary machinery, through Federal, State, and local cooperation to clean up our navigable streams. There is no problem confronting us today which is more important for the preservation of the health of our Nation. We all know that polluted streams are the source of water-borne typhoid fever, diarrhea and enteritis. Outbreaks of intestinal flu have been traced directly to this source of pollution. It is believed by experts that the dread disease, infantile paralysis, may also finds its origin in waterway pollution. The Journal of the American Medical Association reports that the poliomyelitis virus has been isolated from water containing raw sewage. In this connection it is noteworthy that polio epidemics appear in the hot summer months when children frequent streams for swimming and wading. During the cold weather there is a dearth of this epidemic. Two years ago the United States Public Health Service in the Ohio Basin, made a comprehensive survey of water contamination. Over 100 employees of the Service participated in the project and the report was prepared by M. Le Bosquet, Jr., sanitary engineer of the United States Public Health Service, who is in charge of the Stream Sanitation Unit. This survey took 3 years and cost $600,000. Some 71,000 water samples were taken from 2,000 locations along the Ohio River and 19 of its tributaries for the primary purpose of determining the coli count. The safety limit, as is well known, is five coli to the pint for safe drinking water. The Public Health Service has set up a standard: It considers that the most modern and effective purifying treatment now known cannot safely be depended upon to remove all the disease organisms from water which contains more than 100,000 coli to the pint; and, therefore, it holds that a water source with such a coli count is unsafe for community use.

Findings of the Ohio River pollution survey disclose that at 740 of the 2,000 locations sample coli counts were high enough to render the water unfit for use as a water supply or for bathing. At 1,160 locations the water was unfit for bathing and of questionable quality as a source of water supply. Recurring cases of typhoid fever and other intestinal diseases are traceable to swimming and boating in these waters. Mr. Holman Harvey, a student of this important problem, has pointed out that—

> More than 3,400 cities and towns, inhabited by 29,000,000 persons whose bathtubs are the envy of the world, discharge a daily volume of 2,500,000,000 gallons of raw sewage into our waterways plus about 3,750,000,000 gallons of industrial wastes. On both our Atlantic and Pacific seaboards, particularly the Atlantic, streams and rivers and long stretches of both our coast lines are seriously polluted. Bathing beaches have been declared unsafe and some oyster and clam grounds have been damaged and some even destroyed.
> Turning inland, we find almost 1,000 miles of the Ohio River from Pittsburgh, Pa., to Cairo, Ill., gravely overburdened with raw sewage. In the Ohio River Basin, annual death rates from diarrhea and enteritis have risen during the past 12 years, and bathing has become a serious health hazard.
> Not alone the Ohio but all the great river basins which drain densely populated industrial areas are dangerously loaded with waste. Figures from a cross section of only 14 communities show 240,000 cases of epidemic gastroenteritis traced within 15 years to polluted water supplies.

Mr. Speaker, one of the major natural assets of our country are our rivers, streams, and lakes, which know no State lines, and the control of which does not lie with any one State. The commerce clause of the Constitution gives the Federal Government control over the navigable streams, and the problems of preventing stream pollution naturally falls within the province of Federal jurisdiction. This is made necessary by reason of the inability of any one State or community to control waterways and prevent stream pollution from passing from one State to another. While it is true a number of our States and municipalities have inaugurated programs for ridding their streams of pollution, in most cases they are powerless to achieve satisfactory results due to the fact that pollution from bordering communities or States is borne by the streams into the communities which are employing satisfactory methods to clean up their own streams.

The Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House of Representatives, on which I have the honor to serve, has had before it for a number of years legislation having for its purpose the establishment of a national program of assistance to States and local communities in solving this important problem of prevention of stream pollution. During the Seventy-ninth Congress we considered three bills, H. R. 519, H. R. 587, and H. R. 4070, which were introduced by Representatives MUNDT, SMITH of Maine, and SPENCE, respectively. After careful consideration of these proposals the Rivers and Harbors Committee, through its chairman, the gentleman from Texas, Representative MANSFIELD, introduced H. R. 6024. This is a compromise measure agreed upon by the committee and contains features of all three bills above referred to and which, in the views of the committee, would provide legislation setting forth a long overdue program of preventing, abating, and controlling the sources of water pollution in the United States and its possessions. Under it the law would be administered by the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service. The Surgeon General is directed to prepare comprehensive programs for eliminating and reducing the pollutive substances of surface or underground waters in or bordering any State. This would be done in cooperation with the Federal and interstate agencies, industries, State and municipal health authorities concerned in the problem and with due regard for necessary conservation of improvements, propagation of fish and acquatic life, and recreational, agricultural, industrial, and other legitimate uses. Joint investigations with the agencies concerned are authorized where there is a harmful discharge affecting such waters. The bill provides that the Surgeon General shall encourage, in the interest of water-pollution control, the States: First, in cooperative activities; second, the enactment of uniform State laws; third, compacts between the States; and shall make available to all concerned the results of studies and investigations conducted, and furnish such assistance to State agencies as authorized by law.

Consent is also given under the bill for two or more States to negotiate compacts and establish agencies deemed desirable for the furtherance of water-pollution control and enforcement of the laws of the respective States relating thereto. Under the bill, surveys and investigations are authorized to be conducted by the Public Health Service upon the request of any State health authority and subject to the approval of the Surgeon General with respect to any water-pollution problem confronting such State or community. The bill also provides for loans and grants in certain cases for the assistance to the States and local communities, as well as aid to industrial enterprises through loans. Grants in aid shall not exceed 33⅓ percent, and loans are required to be made on such terms and conditions as the President may prescribe for projects having the approval of the State health department and the Surgeon General, loans to bear a reasonable rate of interest. Adequate provision is made for an extension of time for the cleaning up of existing stream pollution so that no hardship will be visited upon local communities or industrial enterprises. The committee was careful to incorporate in the bill adequate safeguards to prevent injustice to any municipalities or industrial enterprises in the problem of preventing stream pollution or in the eradication of existing pollution.

Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, due to lack of time and the heavy program of postwar legislation confronting the Seventy-ninth Congress, we were unable to secure enactment of this legislation before the recess. I sincerely hope that there will yet be time for the House to continue its consideration of H. R. 6024 so that it may be passed to the Senate at the earliest practicable time. Even though the Seventy-ninth Congress is unable to secure final consideration of this important legislation, the fact that we have made this headway toward the goal is encouraging and, if a Member of the Eightieth Congress, I will urge that the legislation be taken up early in the session so that it may receive final consideration and become a law.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BLAND asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article entitled "The Maritime Commission and National Security."

HOSPITAL AND PUBLIC-HEALTH CENTERS PLANNING

Mr. BULWINKLE submitted a conference report on the bill (S. 191) to amend the Public Health Service Act to authorize grants to the States for surveying their hospitals and public-health centers and for planning construction of additional facilities, and to authorize grants to assist in such construction.

PROCEEDINGS AGAINST GEORGE MARSHALL

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will continue to read the privileged report.

The Clerk read as follows:

"205 East Forty-second Street, room 1613, New York City, to be and appear before the Un-American Activities Committee of the House of Representatives of the United States——

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is not a quorum present.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, a point of order——

The SPEAKER. There is already one point of order pending.

Mr. MUNDT. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MUNDT. I wish to inquire whether in view of the fact that the House has emphatically by roll-call vote declared itself in favor of continuing the dispatch of public business, and in view of the fact that frequent roll calls have proved that a quorum is present, whether it is not engaging in dilatory tactics to repeatedly hinder public business by asking for a roll call to establish a quorum?

I have the precedents before me indicating that Speakers have previously ruled such to be dilatory tactics.

The SPEAKER. Only when it was obvious——

Mr. MUNDT. Has it not become obvious?

The SPEAKER. Only when it was obvious that a quorum was present.

The Chair does not think the gentleman will find anywhere in the books that any Speaker of the House has held that a point of no quorum was dilatory, because it is a constitutional question, particularly where it is obvious that a quorum is not present.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I have precedents before me.

The SPEAKER. Well, the Chair has reviewed the precedents and he is not going to hold with the gentleman at this time.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, is it not dilatory to be interrupting the reading of a document when every two or three sentences a point of order is made to prevent a vote on it?

The SPEAKER. It is a matter that the House is going to be called upon to vote on and the assumption, if there is one, is that a quorum must be present to hear things upon which it is going to vote.

The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and eighty-two Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. RANKIN and Mr. MARCANTONIO moved a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 240 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

If there is no objection, further proceedings under the call will be dispensed with.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. COLE of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HOOK) there were—ayes 115, noes 1.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present, and I make a point of order that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently no quorum is present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. COLE of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COLE of Missouri. Should this motion be voted down and should further proceedings under the call be not dispensed with will the Chair please state the procedure to be followed then?

The SPEAKER. We stay here until the Sergeant-at-Arms brings in enough Members to make a quorum or to make the full membership.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MICHENER. Would it not be the fact that if this motion were voted down the House would find itself in a room that is supposed to be locked and the Sergeant-at-Arms would be presumed to be out notifying absentees?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. If they continue to make points of no quorum will it prevent the consideration of the so-called amputees' bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has nothing to do with——

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, that is an unfair criticism. They may call up the amputees' bill. Why do they not do so?

The SPEAKER. Just a moment. The Chair is answering a supposed parliamentary inquiry.

The Chair has no control over the action of Members when the doors are unlocked and they have access to the outside.

Mr. COLE of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, a further parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COLE of Missouri. Should the doors be locked, does that mean that the quorum acquired is retained until we can continue with business?

The SPEAKER. It would take other action of the House to lock the doors to keep a quorum here. The Chair has seen that done in State legislatures.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RANKIN. Let us get this business straightened out. If this motion were voted down it would be the duty of the Speaker to issue writs of arrests for absent Members and have them brought to the floor of the House until every Member of the House was brought back or until further proceedings were dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The Chair could issue a warrant because this is an automatic roll call. Usually the Chair does not do that without action of the House specifying that it be done.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MUNDT. It would not be necessary for the Chair to issue warrants, however, if a quorum were found present and locked in the Chamber. Is that not correct?

The SPEAKER. That is correct.

The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 187, nays 58, not voting 185, as follows:

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Speaker, to say the least, I am utterly disgusted with the horrible waste of precious time here today—time during which we should be considering and passing such legislation as the amputee veterans' bill, payment of the enlisted men's terminal-leave-pay bill in cash, and speedy construction of low-cost housing projects. I trust both sides in this impasse will agree to turn to the legislation I mention and not take further valuable time answering no-quorum calls of the House.

SENATE

TUESDAY, JULY 30, 1946

(Legislative day of Monday, July 29, 1946)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

Rev. Byron W. John, of the Montgomery Methodist Church, Montgomery, W. Va., offered the following prayer:

O God, our Heavenly Father, Thou art the God of wisdom and light. In ages past Thou hast blessed Thy people with understanding. We come, therefore, at this time making known our faith in Thee and asking Thee for Thy guidance in this hour and day. Let the light of Thy countenance be upon us.

Give unto these elected representatives of our Nation a sustaining spirit that shall enable them to stand firmly for justice in a world of confusion. Bless those who meet for peace conferences. Grant that fear and doubt shall cease and that the spirit of the Prince of Peace shall prevail in the hearts of all the peoples of the earth.

Blot out our transgressions, national and individual; have compassion upon us; and give us strength to turn from our proneness toward evil. Make us more eager for the coming of Thy kingdom on earth as it is in heaven.

Grant us Thy favor in our supplications, we beseech Thee. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

EDUCATION OF WORKERS AND WAGE EARNERS

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Some time ago I introduced Senate bill 2457, to develop extensive education among workers and wage earners. I ask unanimous consent that a statement by me in reference to the bill may be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I realize that the bill is imperfect in technique and that it will never become law as presently written, but I introduced it in order to give to those persons interested access to an idea which I think is vitally important in the development of our industry labor relations. I am sure that if problems dealing with the relations between industry and labor are given study by the persons most affected when those relations are bad that we will have produced something extremely worth while to our national economy and made one more step forward toward the peaceful settlement of all differences in our industry labor field.

I had the honor recently to deliver the opening speech at an institute at the University of California, Berkeley, Calif. The institute was sponsored jointly by the Extension of the University of California and the California Labor School. Those attending were from all walks of life and subject dealt with were the subjects of most timely interest to the people of America.

The idea, Mr. President, is too good to be allowed to slip back into the realm of inactivity and thoughtlessness. It seems that the only time our people become thoughtful about our industry labor relations is when we find ourselves in the midst of strikes and industrial strife. Then we try to legislate ourselves out. Education by the legislation process is the most deadly of all educational methods. If we can build from the ground up then we can develop legislation built upon the facts of history and the ideals of our progressive American beliefs.

The bill proposes to authorize appropriations to develop a labor extension program through grants-in-aid to State universities, land-grant colleges and universities, and other educational institutions for use in developing and making available courses of instruction for wage and salary earners. The program would be to a considerable extent analogous in form to that of the agricultural extension program which has been carried on for many years with the assistance of Federal appropriations by the Department of Agriculture.

The basic idea of developing a labor extension program in the Department of Labor has already been endorsed by the major labor organizations—the American Federation of Labor, the Congress of Industrial Organizations, and the Railway Brotherhoods. Support for the proposal has also been announced by the Young Women's Christian Association, the United Council of Church Women, the Detroit and Michigan Federation of Teachers, the Labor and Management Center at Yale University, the Hudson Shore Labor School, and the National Farmers Union. The legislative conference of State-Labor Department officials and representatives of labor organizations held in December 1945, endorsed "the principle of a labor-extension service in the United States Department of Labor to act as an authoritive clearing house in the field of labor education and to administer a program of grants-in-aid for the development of a labor education program on a State and local level," and urged the Department of Labor "to proceed forthwith with the development and formulation of this program."

There is great need for the enactment of such proposed legislation. It has been pointed out by organized labor as well as by persons and organizations having experience in the field of workers' education, that industrial workers and others in the low income groups of our population are to a great extent limited to educational opportunities which go no higher than the primary grades. The proportion of our workers who have the opportunity to complete high school is small while the number who are able even to begin college or university education is still smaller.

It is particularly important that these facts be recognized by the Congress. Wage and salary earners at the present time number well over 50,000,000. Lack of adequate opportunity for so large a group of our citizens with respect to education and training in such basic matters as industrial relations, government, responsibilities of citizenship, community programs and labor problems generally, constitutes a serious drag upon the intellectual development of the whole Nation. It is a serious deterrent in developing the ability of the average wage or salary earner to deal intelligently with the complex problems which confront all Americans as citizens in the world of today, and it handicaps organized labor in understanding the problems involved in working out satisfactory relationships with employers and with other groups in the community. The purpose of the proposed bill is to make a modest beginning toward enabling the more than 50,000,000 wage and salary earners to become more valuable citizens through more constructive participation in the activities of the community, through greater understanding of their rights and responsibilities as citizens of the United States, and through greater appreciation of the intricate problems involved in attempting to work out labor-management relationships under modern industrial conditions.

The diffusion of knowledge and education among our people to the greatest extent possible must be a central policy of this Government. The levels which we have reached in carrying out this policy has been a source of national strength and welfare and has contributed materially to our ability to survive successfully the recent difficult days of World War II. Firm adherence to this policy will, on the one hand, be one of our surest guaranties against encroachment on the liberties of the people by special privilege and selfish economic interests, and, on the other hand, against the manipulation of the people by would-be dictators seeking power for their own advantage.

There is precedent for such legislation in the principle set forth in the Morrill Act of 1862. The principle announced in the act was to promote the diffusion among the people of useful knowledge concerning agriculture and the mechanic arts. As I have said, the program which would be established by this type of legislation for the benefit of wage and salary earners is similar in form to that which has long been given to farmers and their families by the Agricultural Extension Service in the Department of Agriculture, and would provide instruction and educational activities in the fields of labor problems generally, industrial relations, government, community programs, techniques of workers' education, responsibilities of citizenship, and for the participation in the development of the program by labor organizations and by other groups and individuals interested in workers' education.

In material terms the status of wage earners and organized labor has been improved tremendously in the past 10 years. These years have built a record of accomplishment in promoting the economic well-being of wage earners, greater economic security against unemployment and old age, and greater recognition of the rights and responsibilities of workers. Our efforts to make educational opportunities available to the workers have not, however, kept pace with these developments. It is time that the Congress made an effort to expand these opportunities to the greatest possible extent.

The ideas behind the proposed legislation should receive the careful study of every Member of the Senate in the months before the convening of the new Congress in January 1947. It is very likely that as a result of careful study of the problem changes in the bill may appear to be desirable. It is my hope that when the bill is reintroduced early in the next session, with such perfecting changes as may be desirable, it will receive prompt hearings and early enactment.

DEVELOPMENT OF OIL AND GAS ON THE PUBLIC DOMAIN—CORRECTION

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, when the conference report on Senate bill 1236, a bill amending the Mineral Leasing Act of February 25, 1920, was drafted and filed, a clerical error was made in compiling the report. The engrossed copy of the bill, however, has not yet left the Senate Chamber. I have consulted with the ranking Republican member of the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, the minority leader, and the majority leader, and I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a concurrent resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Senate to make the necessary correction.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. I understand these changes simply correct the clerical mistake which was made, so the measure will conform to the intent and purpose of the conference committee.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The concurrent resolution makes effective the conference report, precisely.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The concurrent resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 75), as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of the Senate, in the enrollment of the bill (S. 1236) to amend the Mineral Leasing Act of February 25, 1920, as amended, in order to promote the development of oil and gas on the public domain, and for other purposes, be, and he is hereby, authorized to make the following correction, namely: In the language inserted in the conference report, in respect to House amendment No. 19, after the word "limits", the first word in such language, insert the words "are found by the Secretary to"; and after the phrase "where such lease", strike out the comma and the words "or a lease for which it is exchanged" and the comma; so that the language inserted in the conference report would read as follows: "limits are found by the Secretary to exist on the effective date of this act, and (2) any production on a lease from an oil or gas deposit which was discovered after May 27, 1941, by a well or wells drilled within the boundaries of the lease, and which is determined by the Secretary to be a new deposit; and (3) any production on or allocated to a lease pursuant to an approved unit or cooperative agreement from an oil or gas deposit which was discovered after May 27, 1941, on land committed to such agreement, and which is determined by the Secretary to be a new deposit, where such lease was included in such agreement at the time of discovery, or was included in a duly executed and filed application for the approval of such agreement at the time of discovery."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution?

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 75) was considered and agreed to.

AWARD OF CONGRESSIONAL MEDAL OF HONOR TO WILLIAM MITCHELL

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 881) authorizing the President of the United States to award posthumously in the name of Congress a Medal of Honor to William Mitchell, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the President of the United States is requested to cause a gold medal to be struck, with suitable emblems, devices, and inscriptions, to be presented to the late William Mitchell, formerly a colonel, United States Army, in recognition of his outstanding pioneer service and foresight in the field of American military aviation.

SEC. 2. When the medal provided for in section 1 of this act shall have been struck, the President shall transmit the same to William Mitchell, Jr., son of the said William Mitchell, to be presented to him in the name of the people of the United States.

SEC. 3. A sufficient sum of money to carry this act into effect is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

PROPOSED PARTITION OF PALESTINE

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I understand that at the present time the administration is considering a new plan for the partition of Palestine, which has been proposed by the British, and I wish to comment very briefly on that plan. As we all know, the Balfour Declaration originally provided for the creation of a Jewish national home in Palestine. The Senate adopted a resolution stating its opinion of what that intended. The President demanded that the Britsh admit 100,000 Jews into Palestine temporarily. Then an Anglo-American Commission of inquiry was appointed, and the Commission made a very elaborate report, which included the recommendation that 100,000 Jewish refugees be admitted into Palestine. The Commission made other rather extensive recommendations which have not generally been accepted as yet, but which are under serious consideration.

Instead of immediately proceeding to comply with the recommendations and admitting these refugees into Palestine, the British Government refused to proceed, and then our State Department, instead of insisting on carrying into effect the recommendations made in the report of the Anglo-American Commission for the Investigation of Palestine, appointed another committee from the State Department which went over to London and met with certain British representatives, as I recall, within the past 2 weeks. They have just recommended this new partition plan which proposes to set up a Jewish state containing 1,500 square miles, leaving the other 43,000 square miles to the Arabs in Palestine. Furthermore, even in that 1,500 square miles there is no sovereignty and no control except under the direct supervision of the British mandate in Jerusalem.

During the First World War the British Government pledged itself to permit the establishment of a Jewish national homeland in Palestine, giving the Jews of Europe a refuge and an opportunity to purchase and settle land in an undeveloped area of 45,000 square miles. In that area the Jews of Europe accomplished a miracle in agriculture and industry, in trade, and in culture. Now this new British plan proposes to splinter Palestine into tiny pieces, and confine the Jews to an area of 1,500 square miles, approximately 3 percent of the original 45,000 square miles covered by the Balfour Declaration. The new British plan means not only complete frustration for the Jews of Palestine, but discouragement for the 1,500,000 surviving Jews of Europe.

The British Government, in projecting this partitioning plan, has asked the Government of the United States to collaborate, and, if the Truman administration accedes to Britain's request, it will be making the United States a party to the creation of a ghetto in the Near East—the very land where the Jews were promised an opportunity for free and independent national life. Moreover, the British plan stipulates that the entry of 100,000 Jews into Palestine must be subject to the acceptance of the partition plan by the Jews and by the Arabs. This new plan evades the unanimous recommendations of the Anglo-American Commission made within a very brief period of time, and, if successful, would give Britain the right-of-way to repudiate the promise made in her mandate over Palestine.

This is a description of the plan, as it appeared in the New York Times on July 25:

Under the plan the British would control defense, foreign relations, the police, prisons, the courts, railway and port facilities in Haifa, the post office, the telephone and telegraph systems, customs, excise taxes, civil aviation, broadcasting, and antiquities.

The provinces—

The 1,500 square miles would be the Jewish province—would have their own assemblies but the central government would appoint speakers without whose approval no bill could become law. The executive authority in the provinces would be vested in councils of ministers appointed by the British High Commissioner. He would have emergency power to supersede a provincial government in whole or in part.

This is considerably less than the freedom enjoyed by our forefathers in this country when we were but a British colony.

Americans have been called upon to help fight two world wars in 30 years. Each time we gave our best manhood and untold resources, in the hope that a better world might emerge. Now we see the seeds of new hatreds, new tyrannies, and new bloodshed on the horizon. Ironically, the worst of these seems to be growing in the Holy Land of Palestine with the aid of some of our representatives.

I sincerely hope that the Truman administration will think carefully before committing the Government of the United States to the presently proposed British plan. Persecuted and homeless Jews of Europe certainly deserve some measure of fair play in their treatment by two great world powers.

AMENDMENT OF SOCIAL SECURITY ACT AND INTERNAL REVENUE CODE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7037) to amend the Social Security Act and the Internal Revenue Code, and for other purposes.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the amendments of the committee be first considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will proceed to state the amendments of the Committee on Finance.

The first amendment of the Committee on Finance was, under the heading "Title I—Social security taxes," on page 2, after line 14, to strike out:

SEC. 103. Appropriations to the trust fund. The sentence added by section 902 of the Revenue Act of 1943 at the end of section 201 (a) of the Social Security Act, which reads as follows: "There is also authorized to be appropriated to the Trust Fund such additional sums as may be required to finance the benefits and payments provided under this title.", is repealed.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, that amendment simply restores the language which was heretofore inserted, and leaves the language in the act as follows:

There is also authorized to be appropriated to the Trust Fund such additional sums as may be required to finance the benefits and payments provided under this title.

The House repealed that provision, and the effect of striking out section 103 is to restore the language.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 2, after line 14.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Title II—Benefits in case of deceased World War II veterans," on page 4, line 15, after the word "the", to strike out "Board" and insert "Federal Security Administrator"; in line 17, after the word "unless", to strike out "it" and insert "he"; in line 21, after the word "The", where it occurs the first time, to strike out "Board" and insert "Federal Security Administrator"; in line 22, after the word "by", to strike out "the Board" and insert "him"; on page 5, line 4, after the word "the", to strike out "Board" and insert "Federal Security Administrator"; in line 5, after the word "the", to strike out "Board" and insert "Administrator"; in line 9, before the word "pursuant", to strike out "Board" and insert "Federal Security Administrator"; in line 17, after the word "the", to strike out "Board" and insert "Federal Security Administrator"; and in line 18, after, the word "by", to strike out "the Board" and insert "him."

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, these are technical amendments, made necessary as a result of the President's reorganization order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 2, after the words "by the", to strike out "Board," and insert "Board or the Federal Security Administrator."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 6, to insert:

SEC. 202. When used in the Social Security Act, as amended by this act, the term "Administrator," except where the context otherwise requires, means the Federal Security Administrator.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Title III—Unemployment compensation for maritime workers," on page 8, line 25, after the words "approved by the", to strike out "Board" and insert "Federal Security Administrator (or approved by the Social Security Board prior to July 17, 1946)"; on page 9, line 14, after the words "to the", to strike out "conditions imposed by subsection (b) of this section upon permission to State legislatures to require contributions from instrumentalities of the United States", and to insert "same limitation, with respect to contributions required from such person and from the officers and members of the crew of such vessel, as is imposed by the second sentence (other than clause (2) thereof) of subsection (b) of this section with respect to contributions required from instrumentalities of the United States and from individuals in their employ.'"

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia a question with regard to the interpretation of the language appearing on page 9, lines 10 to 14. In New Jersey, at the 1945 session of our legislature, we extended our unemployment compensation law to cover the services of seamen. In view of the nature and characteristics of such employment, the legislature provided that seamen should be ineligible for benefits for a 2-week period following the termination of employment under shipping articles. This period of ineligibility is not applicable to other employees covered by the law. Would this difference of treatment conflict with the provisions of the pending bill on page 9, lines 10 to 14?

Mr. GEORGE. I will say to the Senator from New Jersey that I do not think so. I am advised that there is no conflict. The whole purpose of the language beginning at line 10 relates to wage credits, and therefore benefits, and does not raise any discrimination against the State of New Jersey, which may have a different wage period in the case of seamen. My understanding is also that the representatives of all the States very carefully went over these provisions, and that no conflict exists between this provision and the New Jersey State law.

Mr. SMITH. I thank the Senator. I thought probably that would be the construction, but I wished to ask the question for the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 8, beginning in line 25.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. GEORGE. I am glad to yield.

Mr. LANGER. Referring to page 3, as I read section 210, if a soldier were hurt during the war and died within 3 years, his family would be protected. Is that correct?

Mr. GEORGE. His dependents are given the benefit of the old-age and survivors insurance. The whole of title II was passed as a separate bill by the Senate some time ago, went to the House, and the House has incorporated the bill passed by the Senate as title II of this bill, with only certain minor technical changes.

Mr. LANGER. In other words, the soldier's dependents would be protecteed, would they?

Mr. GEORGE. His dependents would be protected if he died within 3 years after discharge.

Mr. LANGER. Will the Senator tell me this: If a young man was killed in actual combat during the war, what would be the amount of protection which his wife and children would receive, as compared to the benefits received by the dependents of a soldier who died after the war ended?

Mr. GEORGE. He is covered by the laws with respect to the Veterans' Administration. Generally speaking, in the case of a soldier who is killed in action, the benefits paid to his wife and children are greater than the old-age and survivors benefits which would accrue to the dependents of soldiers who died within 3 years after the war ended.

This title does not cover the beneficiaries or dependent wife or children of a soldier who was killed in action, because his case is handled under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration. The compensation paid to the widow is $60 a month, I believe, with an allowance for each child under 18 years of age, which on the whole would be above the benefits received by the survivors of a veteran who died within 3 years after the war ended, but who had not been able to reestablish his position under the Social Security System and had not obtained employment or had not acquired sufficient credits to reinstate him. This provision gives to each veteran who dies within 3 years after discharge the status of a covered employee on the basis of a salary of $160 a month and on the basis of $200 earned during any quarter of a year in which he served 30 days or more.

Mr. LANGER. Then as I read line 16, which provides—to have died a fully insured individual—

That means insured under the Social Security Act; does it?

Mr. GEORGE. That is correct.

Mr. LANGER. It has nothing to do with his own insurance policy?

Mr. GEORGE. It has nothing to do with his insurance policy.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 23, to insert:

(b) The amendment effected by subsection (a) shall not operate, prior to July 1, 1947, to invalidate any provision, in effect on the date of enactment of this Act, in any State unemployment compensation law.

Mr. GEORGE. That is a saving clause, which is intended to cover particularly a situation in Ohio.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 8, after "Federal Security Administrator,", to strike out "hereinafter referred to as 'Administrator'."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, after line 21, to strike out:

(d) The term "Federal maritime wages" means remuneration determined to be wages pursuant to section 209 (o).

And in lieu thereof, to insert the following:

(d) The term "Federal maritime wages" means remuneration determined pursuant to section 209 (o) to be remuneration for service referred to in section 209 (o) (1).

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 2, to strike out:

(c) The term "State" includes the District of Columbia, Alaska, and Hawaii.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 4, to strike out:

(f) The term "United States," when used in a geographical sense, means the several States, Alaska, Hawaii, and the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 1, after the word "had", to insert "(subject to regulations of the Administrator concerning the allocaton of such service and wages among the several States)".

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, the amendment has occasioned some comment and has given rise to a fear that it was the purpose and intention of the committee to subject the administration of funds going to the maritime workers to more rigid control by the Federal Administrator in Washington. That is not the purpose. This provision is a temporary one. It goes into effect almost immediately—with approximately 5 weeks, I believe. The purpose is to make sure that administration may be possible without any undue embarrassment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 15, beginning in line 1.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment was, on page 15, in line 4, after the word "and", to strike out:

wages under such law, except that—

(1) in any case where an individual receives compensation under a State law pursuant to this title, all compensation thereafter paid him pursuant to this title, except as the Administrator may otherwise prescribe by regulations, shall be paid him only pursuant to such law; and

(2) the compensation to which an individual is entitled under such an agreement for any week shall be reduced by 15 percent of the amount of any annuity or retirement pay which such individual is entitled to receive, under any law of the United States relating to the retirement of officers or employees of the United States for the month in which such week begins, unless a deduction from such compensation on account of such annuity or retirement pay is otherwise provided for by the applicable State law.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

wages under such law; except that the compensation to which an individual is entitled under such an agreement for any week shall be reduced by 15 percent of the amount of any annuity or retirement pay which such individual is entitled to receive, under any law of the United States relating to the retirement of officers or employees of the United States, for the month in which such week begins, unless a deduction from such compensation on account of such annuity or retirement pay is otherwise provided for by the applicable State law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 22, after the words "by the", to strike out "Board" and insert "Administrator".

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 18, after the words "to the", to strike out "Board, for the use of"; in line 19, after the word "the", to strike out "Administrator, such" and insert "Administrator such", and in line 22, after the words "by the", to strike out "Board" and insert "Administrator".

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, in line 24, after the word "funds", to strike out "appropriated to carry out" and insert "for carrying out"; in line 25, after the word "title" and the period, to insert "During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, funds appropriated for grants to States pursuant to title III shall be available for carrying out the purposes of this title."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that wherever the word "Board" occurs in the bill, the appropriate change to "Administrator" may be made, so as to conform to the President's reorganization order—unless the context, of course, clearly indicates to the contrary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 14, after the words "as the", to strike out "administrator" and insert "Administrator."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was under the hearing "Title IV—Technical and miscellaneous provisions", on page 22, line 7, after "Sec. 401.", to strike out "Definition of 'State' for Purposes" and insert "Amendments."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, after line 14, to strike out:

(b) The amounts authorized to be appropriated and directed to be allotted, for the purposes of title V of the Social Security Act, as amended, by sections 501, 502, 511, 512, and 521 of such act, are increased in such amount as may be made necessary or equitable by the amendment made by subsection (a) of this section, including the Virgin Islands, in the definition of "State."

And in lieu thereof to insert the following:

(b) Effective with respect to the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and subsequent fiscal years, title V of the Social Security Act, as amended, is amended as follows:

(1) Section 501 is amended by striking out "$5,820,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$15,000,000."

(2) Section 502 (a) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 502. (a) Out of the sums appropriated pursuant to section 501 for each fiscal year the Federal Security Administrator shall allot $7,500,000 as follows: He shall allot to each State $50,000, and shall allot to each State such part of the remainder of the $7,500,000 as he finds that the number of live births in such State bore to the total number of live births in the United States, in the latest calendar year for which the Administrator has available statistics."

(3) Section 502 (b) is amended by striking out "$1,980,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$7,500,000."

(4) Section 511 is amended by striking out $3,870,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$10,000,000."

(5) Section 512 (a) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 512. (a) Out of the sums appropriated pursuant to section 511 for each fiscal year the Federal Security Administrator shall allot $5,000,000 as follows: He shall allot to each State $40,000, and shall allot the remainder of the $5,000,000 to the States according to the need of each State as determined by him after taking into consideration the number of crippled children in such State in need of the services referred to in section 511 and the cost of furnishing such services to them."

(6) Section 512 (b) is amended by striking out "$1,000,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$5,000,000."

(7) Section 521 (a) is amended by striking out "$1,510,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$5,000,000" and is further amended by striking out "$10,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$30,000."

(8) Section 541 (a) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 541. (a) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, the sum of $1,500,000 for all necessary expenses of the Federal Security Agency in administering the provisions of this title."

(c) The amendments made by subsection (b) shall not require amended allotments for the fiscal year 1947 until appropriations have been made in accordance with such amendments, and allotments from such appropriations shall be made in such manner as may be provided in the act making such appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, the object of this series of amendments which were offered by the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] and, I believe, by the distinguished Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], is simply to increase the grants for maternal aid and child health from $5,820,000 to $15,000,000, for crippled children from $3,870,000 to $10,000,000, and for child welfare from $1,510,000 to $5,000,000. The administrative provision is merely an authorization for an appropriation which would have to be made subsequently.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 7, after the words "striking out", to insert "leaving", and in line 9, after the words "in lieu" to strike out "therefor 'no widow or child who would, upon filing application, be entitled to a benefit for any month under subsection (c), (d), or (e) of this section'," and insert "thereof 'if such individual did not leave a widow who meets the conditions in subsection (d) (1) (D) (E) or an unmarried child under the age of 18 deemed dependent on such individual under subsection (c) (3) or (4), and'."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, line 10, after the words "by the", to strike out "Board" and insert "Administrator."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I wonder if the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee would direct his attention on page 26 to line 20. I have received some correspondence from officials in California who have handled the matter of lump-sum death benefits for the families of veterans. It has been pointed out to me that the 2-year period which is now in the present law is a rather short period of time. The suggestion has been made that, as a matter of equity, the time should be extended to cover a longer period, and 5 years has been suggested to me. I ask the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee whether there would be any objection to an amendment on page 26 in line 20, after the words "expiration of", to strike out "two" and insert "five", in order to afford protection to families of veterans who have not had an opportunity, because of their lack of knowledge, perhaps, to file their claims.

Mr. GEORGE. I may say to the distinguished Senator from California that this language makes no change in the existing law. The Finance Committee made no change in the text as it was reported to the House and passed by the House.

On page 31 of the report will be found a statement with reference to the suggested change of the period of 2 years to a period of 5 years. The statement reads as follows:

Although the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act of 1940, as amended, tolled the 2-year requirement in connection with deaths in military service, no such relief was furnished with respect to civilian deaths. Nevertheless, in many cases such civilians were in the service of their country abroad at the time of death. Accordingly, a modification of the time for filing applications for benefits would appear to be equitable.

The military personnel is already cared for by the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act of 1940. This provision relates to the civilians who were in the employ of the Government.

It was the opinion of the committee, I may say to the Senator from California, that the hardship cases were being reasonably cared for in the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act, and it is not believed in the case of the individuals with whom this provision of the bill deals, that the 2-year period is inadequate or would work any undue hardship.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, that is not the information I have received. I will see if I can find the correspondence to which I have referred. What I am particularly interested in is a case in which the veteran would be entitled to payment under this section. The information furnished me was to the effect that, due to the 2-year limitation, some persons were not filing under rights which they had, and that a longer period of time would evidently be equitable under the circumstances.

Mr. GEORGE. I have no objection to taking an amendment to conference and giving it fuller consideration. It is a matter which had not been brought to my attention.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, on page 26, in line 20, after the words "expiration of," the word "two" be stricken out and that the word "five" be substituted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is agreed to.

The clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment was, on page 27, line 4, after the numerals "1101", to strike out "(b)" and insert "(a) (2)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, line 22, after the word "the", where it occurs the second time, to strike out "Board" and insert "Administrator."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 19, after the words "of the", to strike out "Board" and insert "Administrator."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, line 8, after the word "the", to strike "Board" and insert "Administrator."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, line 23, after the word "are", to strike out "designated" and insert "redesignated."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, after line 8, to insert:

SEC. 416. Withdrawal of employee contributions for disability benefits.

(a) Paragraph (4) of subsection (a) of section 1603 of the Federal Unemployment Tax Act, as amended, is amended by striking out the semicolon at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the following: ": Provided, That an amount equal to the amount of employee payments into the unemployment fund of a State may be used in the payment of cash benefits to individuals with respect to their disability, exclusive of expenses of administration;".

(b) The last sentence of subsection (f) of section 1607 of the Federal Unemployment Tax Act, as amended, is amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the following: ": Provided, That an amount equal to the amount of employee payments into the unemployment fund of a State may be used in the payment of cash benefits to individuals with respect to their disability, exclusive of expenses of administration."

(c) Paragraph (5) of subsection (a) of section 303 of the Social Security Act, as amended, is amended by striking out the semicolon immediately before the word "and" at the end thereof and inserting in lieu of such semicolon the following: ": Provided, That an amount equal to the amount of employee payments into the unemployment fund of a State may be used in the payment of cash benefits to individuals with respect to their disability, exclusive of expenses of administration;".

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I will say with reference to that amendment that the entire section 416 was inserted in order to assist particularly the State of California, as I recall, which State now recognizes disability or total disability as a basis for payment out of funds of the State. The section does not affect Federal funds at all, but merely permits the State to draw down its own funds which, of course, are deposited in the Treasury here in a separate account.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the next committee amendment.

The next amendment was on page 37, after line 12, to insert:

SEC. 417. Expenditures necessitated by this act in the fiscal year 1947.

Expenditures to meet the increase, resulting from this act, in the cost of administering the Social Security Act, and payments to the States pursuant to titles I, III, IV, V, X, and XIII of the Social Security Act, as amended by this act, may be made during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, from appropriations available for these respective purposes, without regard to the apportionments required by section 3679 of the Revised Statutes (31 U. S. C. 665).

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Title V—State grants for old-age assistance, aid to dependent children, and aid to the blind," on page 38 after line 3, to strike out:

SEC. 501. Old-age assistance.

Section 3 (a) of the Social Security Act, as amended, is amended by striking out "$40" and inserting in lieu thereof "$50."

SEC. 502. Aid to dependent children.

Section 403 (a) of such act is amended by striking out $18 wherever appearing and inserting in lieu thereof "$27", and by striking out "$12" and inserting in lieu thereof "$18."

SEC. 503. Aid to the blind.

Section 1003 (a) of such act is amended by striking out "$40" and inserting in lieu thereof "$50."

SEC. 504. Effective date of title.

The amendments made by this title shall be applicable only to quarters beginning after September 30, 1946, and ending before January 1, 1948.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 501. Old-age assistance.

(a) Section 3 (a) of the Social Security Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"(a) From the sums appropriated therefor, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to each State which has an approved plan for old-age assistance, for each quarter (1) an amount, which shall be used exclusively as old-age assistance, equal to the Federal percentage (as defined in section 1108) of the total of the sums expended during such quarter as old-age assistance under the State plan with respect to each needy individual who at the time of such expenditure is 65 years of age or older and is not an inmate of a public institution, not counting so much of such expenditure with respect to any individual for any month as exceeds $50, but the amount payable to the State by the United States with respect to any individual for any month shall not exceed $25; and (2) an amount equal to the Federal percentage of the total of the sums expended during such quarter as found necessary by the Administrator for the proper and efficient administration of the State plan, which amount shall be used for paying the costs of administering the State plan or for old-age assistance, or both, and for no other purpose."

(b) Section 3 (b) of such act is amended (1) by striking out "one-half", and inserting in lieu thereof "the State percentage (as defined in section 1108)"; (2) by striking out "clause (1) of" wherever it appears in such subsection; (3) by striking out "in accordance with the provisions of such clause" and inserting in lieu thereof "in accordance with the provisions of such subsection"; and (4) by striking out ", increased by 5 percent."

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent on line 6, page 39, to strike out "65" and insert "62." The reason for my suggested amendment is this: Under the Reorganization Act which was adopted by both the House and the Senate a few days ago Representatives and Senators are eligible to old-age retirement at 62 years. I do not believe we ought by legislation to say that citizens and veterans have to be 65 years of age in order to secure old-age assistance when Senators and Members of the House can be retired at 62.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I shall be compelled to object to that amendment, I will say to the Senator from North Dakota, and I desire to make a brief explanation to him. In the first place, if we were to reduce the age for old-age assistance we would, of course, add considerably to the cost. I have no estimate of how much the cost would be but it would be considerable.

In the second place the last title of this bill provides for a complete study and investigation by the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation of the whole question "of old age and survivors insurance and all other aspects of social security, particularly in respect to coverage, benefits, and taxes related thereto." Furthermore, it requires a report to the Congress not later than October 1, 1947.

The committee is as conscious as anyone else that the whole question of social security, social-security benefits, old-age assistance, benefits to the blind and to dependent children must be reexamined. If we were now to change the 65-year limitation there would be not the slightest chance to get the House in these closing days of the Congress to agree to the bill. It would simply foredoom the bill. We may have great difficulty anyway because of the parliamentary situation.

I hope the Senator will not insist on his amendment because all questions relating to social security and old-age pensions must be reexamined if this bill passes and becomes law as the committee has written it and the report must be submitted, not at some far-distant year, but by October 1 of next year.

I again say that the committee is entirely conscious of the need for a complete restudy and general revision and overhauling of our whole security system.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the distinguished Senator a question. Are there not some States where old-age benefits are payable at 60 years?

Mr. GEORGE. I believe that is true of a few States, but I am not sure of that.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield let me say that Colorado is the only State that provides old age benefits or retirement benefits at 60; but the Government does not match any payment between 60 and 65 years.

Mr. LANGER. That is what I was going to inquire about. In other words, the State would have to pay the total sum between the ages of 60 and 65.

Mr. GEORGE. Exactly, because the Federal act fixes the age 65.

Mr. LANGER. I was wondering how the distinguished Senator could defend the fact that under the Reorganization Act, Senators and Members of the House will be able to get retirement compensation at 62, but here we say 65 for others.

Mr. GEORGE. We have various ages for retirement of Federal employees. We go as low as 55 years in some instances in the case of Federal employees, and in the Army and Navy at 64. But the old-age benefits do not carry any contributory feature at all; where the recipient is otherwise qualified, he gets the assistance without regard to any contributions. In the case of Representatives and Senators, if any of us should take advantage of the reorganization law, we would have to make a contribution.

Mr. LANGER. I understand that, but here is the situation: Take an old pioneer, or, for example, a farmer in Kentucky or Georgia, who paid his taxes year after year but lost his money in a closed bank some years ago. He contributed taxes during all these years, which is, of course, a form of contribution. Now we say that a Senator or Member of the House may get his retirement benefit at 62, but others have to be 65 before they can secure old-age assistance. That does not seem to be fair.

Mr. GEORGE. I agree with the Senator that the whole question must be restudied and I think undoubtedly the whole security system as we have developed it will have to be overhauled. The purpose of the Finance Committee has been to do that. More than a year ago the distinguished Senator from Michigan offered a resolution calling for a joint study between the House and Senate. The House committee preferred to make their own individual study.

We are now seeking to put in this bill itself a provision for a joint study, to the end that we may cover all the questions the Senator raises. There are many troublesome questions, let me say, in the Social Security System that cannot be answered altogether to the satisfaction of anyone.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, I want to applaud the suggestion of the distinguished Senator from North Dakota. This is another example of his warm, human heart, his understanding, and the common-sense view he takes of this problem as it affects the American people.

The figures, Mr. President, are these: About 10,000,000 of our people are past 65 and 5,000,000 are between 60 and 65. The percentage of unemployment because men can no longer hold jobs is almost as great between the ages of 60 and 65 as among those exceeding 65 years. The anguish, the misery, and the destitution of many hundreds of thousands of the group under 65 and over 60 is almost as great as among those over 65. Any common-sense plan would recognize that the breaking point of workers physically, and in their inability to get jobs, often comes at about 60. As a matter of fact, 90 percent of the American people, as disclosed in the Gallup polls, have recognized something which Congress has been too blind to recognize, that is, that the age limit should be 60 instead of 65.

I should like to say to the distinguished Senator that later in the debate there will be offered as an amendment to this unfortunate bill, the Townsend plan, and the Senator will have a chance to vote for that, and in that the age limit is reduced to 60 years.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I wish to raise a question about this whole section, because the committee has placed in the bill what is known as the variable grants section. Heretofore the old-age pensions and the other two grants, to the blind and to dependent children, have been on a 50–50 basis. That has been so from the beginning of the Social Security Act. An effort was made to change it in 1940, as I recall the year, but it was defeated. It is a fundamental change in the whole basis of distribution. Since the committee acted I have been informed that in the Committee on Ways and Means of the House it has been the subject of a very bitter controversy. The plan included in the bill was proposed and was turned down, and there was a general agreement finally to leave it out. It seems to me that to include it now not only has the disadvantage of making a fundamental change at a time when we are dealing with a temporary bill, but I believe it is going to weaken the chances of the whole bill in the House of Representatives.

The Senator raised an objection to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota, but this amendment is a far more fundamental change than the change from 65 years to 62. It seems to me that if we put this in the bill it will defeat the bill. I do not believe the House will ever consider the bill with that in it, under the existing circumstances. I do not know whether the Senator hopes to have the bill sent to conference or not, nor do I know what hope there is of securing the passage of the bill if this variable grants provision remains in it.

Mr. GEORGE. I had hoped we might send the bill to conference. It is not certain that the House will accept this provision. But I may state to the Senator that the Ways and Means Committee did itself approve the variable grants principle. This provision was taken out of the original bill considered by the House Ways and Means Committee because of the inability of the committee to secure a close rule, or a rule satisfactory to the committee. In order to secure such a rule, the committee then decided to increase merely the ceilings, and otherwise leave undisturbed the existing old age and blind and dependent children formula.

Mr. TAFT. As I understand, one objection in the House would prevent the bill going to conference. If anything as controversial as this provision is included, I doubt if there is any chance of the passage of the bill.

I am not very much opposed to the variable-grants provision, but it seems to me so fundamental a change as that should be dropped, in view of the other rather important provisions contained in the bill, because I am afraid it will defeat the whole bill.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from Ohio if he believes the House would object to reducing the age from 65 years to 62.

Mr. TAFT. I am not informed as to that. I think they would, because the difficulty is that the House has generally pursued the policy of making no fundamental changes, waiting until next year. I think it is most unfortunate that they did not make a complete study, and try to bring the entire system up to date. There are many other things which should be done to the Social Security System, but the House did not do them, and, in effect, they have taken the position that they are going to consider this subject on the return of Congress the 1st of January, and I imagine any fundamental change in the act would meet with their disapproval. They increased the total from $40 to $50. That the House did, and that is the only important change they made in the Social Security System. I think we are much safer if we do not make any fundamental changes, except in the creation of the committee to study the whole subject and make a prompt and effective report next year.

Mr. LANGER. Does the Senator believe that since the House accepted the retirement age of 62 for Senators and Representatives in the Reorganization Act we have just passed we should fix the retirement age for the pioneers who made this country at 65 years?

Mr. TAFT. I do not think the two are parallel. I do not say the age should not be 62, but I do not think the two are parallel, particularly as the other plan is a contributory plan, and the one here under consideration is not. That is one reason. There are other reasons. I do not care to argue the merits of the Senator's proposal or the merits of the variable grants provision. I think that if this provision is included in the bill, there will not be any bill, and, in my opinion, it is unfortunate to insist on it at this time.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. DOWNEY. I wish to say, in reference to what has been said by the distinguished Senator from Ohio, that very probably he may be right in his political analysis of the conditions in the House, but I say that the bill as it comes from the House is largely a worthless bill, and should be defeated. It seems to me that the variable grants provision at least is an attempt to do something decent.

Senators may be rather surprised when I say this, but the bill as it comes to the Senate will probably give California 50 percent of all the additional sums provided in the bill, and will almost certainly give to five States, which are liberal in their pension laws and in their payments, 90 percent of any additional money that may be payable under the bill.

The State of California now receives more money from the Federal Treasury in old-age assistance than 11 Southern States combined. California will immediately take advantage of the proposal to add $5 for great groups of its citizens because we are already paying $50 a month in California, and I think we are destined to pay $60 or $75 shortly. Consequently this bill as it comes from the House will not benefit any of the Southern States; it will not benefit any of the States in which smaller pensions are paid; it will not benefit a single anguished heart in Georgia or Kentucky or elsewhere in the South. So far as I am concerned, I hope the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Finance will stand out for this variable grants provision, and either win that concession from the House of Representatives, or let the bill go to defeat.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. McFARLAND. I wish to compliment the Senator from Georgia for the work he has done in securing the adoption of the variable-grant amendment in this bill. I think the variable-grants formula is an improvement. I am not satisfied with the pending amendment, but I feel that it is a step in the right direction. The cost of living has increased at least 35 percent and the increase provided in this connection is not sufficient to meet this increase, but it will help. A group of us, including the Senator from Georgia and myself, joined in an amendment to H. R. 5626 which would have increased the Federal share to old people by $5, to the blind by $5, to dependent children by $3. The House, instead of accepting this amendment, adopted the provisions of the bill under consideration. The variable-grants amendment is an improvement of the bill as it is more equitable. I am hopeful that the House will adopt the amendment. The time has come when we have to do something for the old people, and I cannot conceive that the House will refuse to adopt this amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. I thank the Senator. I recognize the force of the suggestion made by the distinguished Senator from Ohio. Yet I believe that the committee should insist upon its amendments, and take the bill to conference, if the House will grant a conference; and if not, then the responsibility will rest where it properly should rest. This bill has been under consideration in the House for quite a long time, and the Senate Finance Committee has had to await action by the House. The bill reached the Senate only the end of last week, on Friday. The Senate committee had obtained a committee print of the bill prior to its actual passage, and began its study of the bill. The one important amendment made in the bill is the variable-grants provision. I think the distinguished Senator from Ohio is not arguing so much the merits of the grant, because he says frankly that he might not oppose the variable grants. The parliamentary situation which he points out undoubtedly exists, and it may be very difficult and may prove even impossible to complete action on the bill. But somehow I have the hope that we may be able to get the House to agree to the bill if we can pass the bill and let it go to the House sometime during the day for further consideration.

Mr. President, I do not know that it is necessary to read all of the amendment dealing with the variable grants, because all the amendment undertakes to accomplish is, first, to raise the present ceiling for old-age assistance from $40 to $50, to raise the assistance to the blind from $40 to $50, and to raise the ceilings for dependent children, which is the same provision as was contained in the House bill. Then it adopts the variable grants on the basis of the per capita income of each State as compared to the per capita income of the Nation as a whole.

It is a provision which presents an equitable principle, and it would give some relief to a very large number of States that now are receiving very meager benefits. As the Senator from California properly points out, the House bill would simply aggravate and continue the inequities and hurt all the States whose average per capita income is below the average of the national per capita income.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia ask that the remainder of the amendment, down to and including line 4 on page 44, be not read?

Mr. GEORGE. I ask that the reading of it be dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and, without objection, the amendment will be considered without further reading.

The amendment was, at the top of page 40, to insert sections 502, 503, 504, and 505, as follows:

SEC. 502. Aid to dependent children.

(a) Section 403 (a) of such act is amended to read as follows:

"(a) From the sums appropriated therefor, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to each State which has an approved plan for aid to dependent children, for each quarter, an amount, which shall be used exclusively for carrying out the State plan, equal to the Federal percentage (as defined in sec. 1108) of the total of the sums expended during such quarter under such plan, not counting so much of such expenditure with respect to any dependent child for any month as exceeds $27, or if there is more than one dependent child in the same home, as exceeds $27 with respect to one such dependent child and $18 with respect to each of the other dependent children; but the amount payable to the State by the United States with respect to any dependent child for any month shall not exceed $13.50, or, if there is more than one dependent child in the same home, shall not exceed $13.50 for any month with respect to one such dependent child and $9 for such month with respect to each of the other dependent children."

(b) Section 403 (b) (1) of such act is amended by striking out "one-half," and inserting in lieu thereof "the State percentage (as defined in sec. 1108)."

SEC. 503. Aid to the blind.

(a) Section 1003 (a) of such act is amended to read as follows:

"(a) From the sums appropriated therefor, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to each State which has an approved plan for aid to the blind, for each quarter (1) an amount, which shall be used exclusively as aid to the blind, equal to the Federal percentage (as defined in section 1108) of the total of the sums expended during such quarter as aid to the blind under the State plan with respect to each needy individual who is blind and is not an inmate of a public institution, not counting so much of such expenditure with respect to any individual for any month as exceeds $50, but the amount payable to the State by the United States with respect to any individual for any month shall not exceed $25; and (2) an amount equal to the Federal percentage of the total of the sums expended during such quarter as found necessary by the Administrator for the proper and efficient administration of the State plan, which amount shall be used for paying the costs of administering the State plan or for aid to the blind, or both, and for no other purpose."

(b) Section 1003 (b) (1) of such act is amended by striking out "one-half," and inserting in lieu thereof the State percentage (as defined in section 1108)."

SEC. 504. Definitions.

Such act is amended by adding after section 1107 a new section to read as follows:

"'FEDERAL PERCENTAGE' AND 'STATE PERCENTAGE'

"SEC. 1108. (a) Definition.—For the purposes of titles I, IV, and X the 'Federal percentage' and 'State percentage' therein referred to shall be percentages determined as follows:

"(1) In the case of a State the per capita income of which is equal to or greater than the per capita income of the continental United States, and in the case of Alaska, Hawaii, and the District of Columbia, regardless of the per capita income, the Federal percentage shall be 50 percent and the State percentage 50 percent.

"(2) In the case of a State the per capita income of which is not more than 66⅔ percent of the per capita income of the continental United States, the Federal percentage shall be 66⅔ percent, and the State percentage shall be 33⅓ percent.

"(3) In the case of every other State, the State percentage shall be one-half of the percentage which its per capita income is of the per capita income of the continental United States (except that a fraction of one-half percent or less shall be disregarded, and a fraction of more than one-half percent shall be increased to 1 percent), and the Federal percentage shall be 100 percent minus the State percentage. In no case under this paragraph shall the State percentage be less than 33⅓ percent or the Federal percentage greater than 66⅔ percent.

"(b) Ascertainment of per capita income: The Federal percentage and State percentage for each State shall be promulgated by the Administrator between July 1 and August 31 of each even-numbered year, on the basis of the average per capita income of each State and of the continental United States as computed by the Department of Commerce for the three most recent years for which satisfactory data are available. Such promulgation shall for the purposes of this section be conclusive for each of the eight quarters in the period beginning July 1 next succeeding such promulgation, and also, in the case of the percentages promulgated in 1946, for the three quarters beginning October 1, 1946, January 1, 1947, and April 1, 1947.

"(c) 'Continental United States': For the purposes of this section the term 'continental United States' does not include Alaska or Hawaii."

SEC. 505. Effective date of title.

The amendments made by this title shall be applicable only to quarters beginning after September 30, 1946.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. Would the Senator from Georgia be willing to take to conference a change of age, to make the age 62 years, and see what the House will do about it?

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator from California proposes to offer an amendment which will incorporate that principle.

Mr. LANGER. His amendment provides for the change of age to 60 years. My proposal is 62 years. I wonder if the Senator would not be willing to take my proposal to conference, in view of the fact that under the reorganization act Senators and Representatives can retire at 62? I wonder if the Senator would not attempt to have proposal accepted?

Mr. GEORGE. I will say to the Senator from North Dakota that if the bill passes and goes to conference, the age question could easily be in conference, because all these provisions will be in conference. I shall be glad to suggest the proposal to the House conferees, and if the House is willing to consider it at all, it will not be objectionable to me, I will say.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. I desire to make a brief observation. I first wish to commend very highly the able Senator from Georgia, the chairman of the Committee on Finance, and the committee, for having reported to the Senate this variable-grants amendment. There have been many of us who have been advocating, as has the able Senator from Georgia, this formula for a long time. It was reported to the House of Representatives by the House Ways and Means Committee, and therefore has the authority of that great committee behind it.

The question, Mr. President, is simply this: Shall we appropriate more money from the Federal Treasury which shall be fairly and equitably distributed over the country and enjoyed by the recipients of this service, or shall we appropriate money which shall go into a very few States and not into the great majority of States to the same class of people? An intolerable situation prevails at the present time, where one or two States secure the major part of the money, although the people who are the recipients of it individually are in the same category in the several States. That discrimination is due to the disparity and the ability of some States to match dollar for dollar these Federal funds for the aged and for the other classes affected, and the inability of other States to match 50–50 the Federal funds.

There can be only two arguments made, it seems to me, for the matching principle at all. One is that States should be required to do their part for their own people, and the other is that States should have a direct interest in the administration of these funds so that they shall add their own careful supervision to the expenditure of the funds. But, Mr. President, those two principles do not require any State to do more than its relative share or to do more than it can do. And the Southern States particularly, in which I am most vitally concerned, simply are unable to put up as much money as are the rich States, because they do not have the money. They should not be penalized for their inability, and yet that is what the present law does. As the able Senator from California has, with his characteristic generosity and public spiritedness, pointed out, his State would get, I believe, about 90 percent of the increase in the Federal appropriation, and would get more money than all the Southern States put together out of this increased Federal appropriation.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. DOWNEY. California is already getting more money from the Federal Treasury in the way of grants of this nature than the 11 Southern States.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, it is most gracious of the Senator from California to disclose that fact, because he, of course, is thinking of the public interest in this matter.

Senators will recognize that that is an intolerable situation, and it forces some of us to the statement that I made before the Finance Committee the other day when I appeared with the Senator from California in behalf of this principle, that if we cannot bring about equity and fair dealing in the distribution of Federal funds in these categories we will have to oppose the matching principle entirely and insist that the whole appropriation be from the Federal Treasury, so that people in the same category of need throughout our great country shall get the same amount of Federal money.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I wish to express myself as being in agreement with the statement made by the able Senator from Florida. It is true that a number of States, and particularly States in the South, simply cannot possibly match the Federal money. Yet the Federal Government, under existing law, is in the position of favoring a citizen of one State by reason of the fact that he happens to live and have citizenship in a State of wealth, and penalizing a citizen who happens to live in a State whose per capita income and the general wealth do not permit taxation to such extent that the State can raise the revenue necessary to match the Federal funds.

Mr. PEPPER. Exactly.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I served as a Member of the House at the time this law was first enacted. The matching provision seems to have rather an appeal in itself, as the Senator said, in order to cause the States to do their part. But I would say that today that requirement is no longer necessary, because the citizens of the States and the States themselves will go just as far as they can to implement any contribution made by the Federal Government. I say that, as a matter of justice and equity, according to every proper standard, we ought to eliminate the requirement of matching and whenever the Federal Government makes contribution of aid, especially of this character, to individual citizens who need it for the sustenance for life, it should be provided on the basis of the Government dealing with its citizens, and not on the basis of the Federal Government dealing with the citizen of this State or another State, for under that formula discrimination is bound to exist.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. I wish to reinforce, if I can, what the Senator from Arkansas has said. If the Federal Government owes any obligation to the aged, it owes it directly to the citizen, and it ought not to be conditioned on what some other agency does or does not do. The result of the present law is that if one of these dependents lives in a rich State he receives a large amount of assistance, and the man who lives in a poor State which does not contribute much receives a much smaller rate. So the system aggravates the situation by helping the one who lives in a State which makes a heavy contribution, and penalizes the man who lives in a poor State by cutting down his allowance. If the Federal Government owes anything, it owes a person in one State just as much as it owes a citizen in another State. Geography has nothing to do with the obligation.

I thoroughly agree with the Senator from Arkansas that sooner or later we shall have to do away with the principle of matching and let the Federal Government make a direct grant. Then if the State wishes to supplement what the Federal Government pays, it may do so. But so far as the Federal grant is concerned, it ought to be on the same basis as all other pensions. It is in the nature of a pension, and it ought to be on the same basis as all other pensions. In granting allowances to veterans of World War I, World War II, or the Spanish American War, we do not discriminate on the basis of where a man lives. If he fought for the flag he is given a pension, regardless of his residence. Under the civil service retirement plan we do not ask a man what State he comes from. We grant retirement on the basis that it is a Federal obligation. The old-age pension should be on the same basis as other grants. We must come to the principle of making it a direct Federal grant.

Mr. PEPPER. I thank the Senator. I know that for a long time he has been an advocate of this principle.

Mr. CONNALLY. I once introduced a bill providing that the Federal Government should contribute two-thirds, letting the States match one-third. That would not have met the situation, but it would have gone a long way toward making it possible for the poorer States to receive their share of the benefits.

Mr. PEPPER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. As a Senator coming from a so-called rich State, I wish to emphasize my approval of the remarks made by the Senator from Florida, the Senator from Texas, and the Senator from Arkansas. For some time I have felt that justice and equity require a change. I commend the Senator from Florida for his persistency in advocating the new formula. I know that he has been working on the problem for several years. During the past two or three years he has appeared before the Committee on Finance a number of times.

What is suggested by the Senator from Florida is the humane thing to do. The citizen of a poor State ought not to be discriminated against by the National Government when it comes to old-age assistance and other benefits. They should be treated all alike. I wish to express my hearty approval of the remarks of the Senator from Florida, the Senator from Arkansas, and the Senator from Texas.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am very happy to hear what the Senator from Texas, the Senator from Arkansas, the Senator from Massachusetts, and the Senator from Florida have said. For a long time I have felt that sooner or later the Federal Government would be required, as a matter of good morals and obligation, to deal with all its older citizens in the same way, without discrimination because of geographical location. It costs just as much for an old man, an old woman, or a couple to live in Arkansas as it does to live in Kentucky, Missouri, Illinois, or any other State similarly situated. And yet, either because of the indifference or lack of comprehension of the legislature, which fixes the maximum payment, only one-half of which the Federal Government now matches, a person in Arkansas, where it costs just as much to live as in Kentucky or Missouri, may receive not more than half as much as a citizen of Kentucky or some other State may receive.

Mr. PEPPER. We have been talking about the aged, but we must also bear in mind that what we are saying relates as well to dependent children and the blind. I wish to make that clear.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is undoubtedly true. For a long time I have felt that some of these days the Federal Government would have to come to the point of recognizing its uniform obligation to all citizens in the same category. As the Senator from Texas has indicated, if, in addition, a State wishes to supplement what the Federal Government pays, all well and good. I have no doubt that many of the States, especially the less rich States, could find ample opportunity to spend well the amount which they might contribute in addition to what the Federal Government puts up; but that would be a matter for their discretion. I feel that some of these days—and I hope the time will not be far distant—the Federal Government must inaugurate a uniform system all over the United States for the same kind of people, regardless of geography and regardless of anything else which now depends upon whim, poverty, indifference, or any other reason why one State cannot make as large a contribution as some other State makes. I am very glad to have these excellent statements from Senators confirming the feeling I have entertained for a long time.

Mr. PEPPER. I thank the Senator from Kentucky very much.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. The striking inequality and injustice of the present system is illustrated by the following example: We take the money from the Federal Treasury. We owe the old people and other dependents a certain obligation. We say to one of them, "Where are you from?" He replies, "I am from Massachusetts." We say to him, "All right, old man. You are in need. We will give you $35 or $40 because you are from Massachusetts."

We say to another, "Where are you from?" He replies, "I am from Arkansas."

Mr. PEPPER. If the Senator will allow me to give him the figures, in the case of Massachusetts the payment would be $46.22 a month.

Mr. CONNALLY. We are studying geography. We say to each applicant, "What State are you from?" Of course the obligation of the Federal Government is the same to all its citizens, but one of them has the misfortune to live in Arkansas or Texas.

Mr. PEPPER. In Arkansas the rate is $16.87.

Mr. CONNALLY. We give the citizen of Massachusetts $46.22, and the citizen of Arkansas $16.87. We say to him, "That is all you need."

Mr. BARKLEY. How much do I get? I am from Kentucky.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not know what the Senator will get after he is off the roll here.

Mr. PEPPER. The Kentucky applicant receives only $11.71.

Mr. CONNALLY. No wonder the Senator favors an increase.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will give it to Arkansas. [Laughter.]

Mr. PEPPER. The figure for Texas is $24.61.

Mr. CONNALLY. Texas is a little better off than some of the other States. The rate in Texas ought to be higher. Texas is a great, rich State. However, this program is new to us.

These figures illustrate the injustice of the situation. If the Federal Government does not owe these people anything, let us not pay them a cent. But if it does owe an obligation, it owes the same obligation to every citizen under the flag, whether he lives in Podunk or on Fifth Avenue. So if we have any conception of justice and equality, the system proposed is bound to be adopted sooner or later.

I thank the Senator from Florida for yielding.

Mr. PEPPER. That is indeed a very interesting and dramatic showing of the disparity which we have been complaining about.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I merely wish to add to what has been said—and I think I can do so with as good grace as can any other Member of the Senate—that the State of Washington pays the highest old-age assistance benefits that are paid in the United States. The average payment made in our State is $53.14. That is the highest figure shown in the table. We have been very progressive about this matter. We also make the highest payments for children.

In table 3, on page 20 of the report, in the column marked "average per family", it will be seen that the figure for the State of Washington is 100, whereas in the case of some other States it is 26.30 or 36.18 or 27.84 or 23.38.

My position on this matter is similar to that of the Senators who have spoken on this point. I think the State of Washington makes the highest payments and our people receive the largest payments under the Federal fund. Our people receive more because our State matches more. My opinion is that the sooner we make the system uniform throughout the Nation, the better it will be for the aged people of the United States.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. DOWNEY. I wish to call attention to the fact that no State gets less than $20. Any State that pays $40 gets the full amount.

Mr. PEPPER. That is correct.

Mr. President, my position is that whatever the Federal Government gives, the sooner it is done in a uniform way, the sooner the other States will increase their payments to the amounts paid by the State of Washington, and the sooner we shall treat all people in such circumstances in a uniform manner.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington said that Washington makes the largest payments. Of course, that is true on the basis of the amount received by each person. But on the basis of the total amount paid, California pays a larger total amount, of course, because her population is considerably larger.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I understand. I mean to say that the State of Washington pays the full amount, and the State contributions are matched by the Federal Government.

I agree that the sooner old age assistance funds are made uniform throughout the Nation, the sooner the States will treat their people properly. I am glad to see the amendment adopted.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me now?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. WILLIS. I was going to ask the Senator from Texas how long the money he was handing out so freely would last. I observe that it has already disappeared.

Mr. CONNALLY. All the money the Senator gets disappears quickly, I will say. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIS. I think the Federal money that we devote to this purpose will disappear.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator. However, if it is going to disappear anyway, I would much rather have it go to the older people who have borne the burden and the heat of the day in the past. I cannot get out of my mind the fact that when the Federal Government distributes these gratuities—because that is what these payments are—when an old fellow comes up and says, "I have only one leg", under the present system he is not asked very much about that, but he is asked, "What State are you from?" If he comes from one State, he receives only $5 or $6, but if he comes from another State he receives $20 or $40, or whatever the amount may be.

So I wish to adhere to the position I have held for many years.

Let me say to the Senator from Indiana that if Indiana wishes to cooperate with the Federal Government and to make a grant in addition to whatever amount the Federal Government pays, it will be proper to do so, under Indiana's sovereignty as a State and under States' rights, and so forth.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, let me say that this change also will help do away with another evil which has arisen because of the difference in payments. It happens that many of the elderly people will move to States where greater payments are made—and I do not blame them, of course—and they will establish residence there. That results in placing a greater burden on those States. So any tendency to equalize the payments as between the various States not only will be fairer to the people concerned but will be fairer to the States.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. McFARLAND. I concur in the statements which have been made about payments by the Federal Government. I have, ever since I have been in the Senate, advocated adequate old-age assistance. It should be paid entirely or at least largely by the Federal Government.

There is another step which I think we should take; namely, do away with the need clause, or at least modify and improve it. I think these people should not have to feel that they are in poverty. They should feel that they are getting something which they have earned by the payment of taxes during their lifetime. I hope that will be the next step, and that we can do something in regard to the troublesome need clause.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to another matter which is very discriminatory against some of the States. For example, in my State in connection with every dollar we receive from the Federal Government for this purpose, we have what we call in our law a reimbursement clause. I have seen a situation, a few years ago, where all an old man had was a wedding ring and a cot; but before he could receive any old-age assistance he had to turn them in. I investigated and took up the matter with the Social Security System, and I found that the reimbursement clause applies in only 17 States. In other words, in the State of Minnesota, right next to the State of North Dakota, a person receiving such assistance can have a life-insurance policy or can own a certain amount of property and he does not have to reimburse either the State or the Federal Government. But in North Dakota such a person has to reimburse both the State and the Federal Government to the extent of his ability to pay. Before he can receive any old-age assistance at all, he has to deed over to the State and the Federal Government, on the basis of an equal division everything he possesses.

So when this law is finally drawn up, I hope that discriminations will be removed insofar as the particular 17 States are concerned.

Mr. PEPPER. I thank the Senator, and I shall comment on that matter a little later.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. ANDREWS. I wish to express my appreciation of what the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] has done, as far as he has gone, and I hope he will do better. Ten years ago when I was elected to the Senate, I was criticized severely by those who opposed me because I favored old-age assistance. The junior Senator from Florida will recall that.

The reason why the matter affects Florida so definitely is that we have more elderly people there per capita than has any other State of the Union. Elderly people go there when they retire. In many cases after they went to Florida they found that in 1930 their industrial bonds suddenly became worthless, and they lost all they had. I have seen many of them in tears.

So I have been pledged to aid in this situation, ever since I came to Washington. I helped the Senator from Texas, who referred to the fact that he tried to get the law amended 4 or 5 years ago. I am deeply in sympathy with trying to do something for these elderly people, without classifying them as paupers. They have lived to be 60 or 62 years of age or more, and they have paid their taxes and they have carried this Government on their shoulders, and by the eternal, we ought to try to do something for them when they are in trouble. It is our duty to do it.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I attest to everything the able senior Senator from Florida has said about his long advocacy of this principle.

BENEFITS TO NAVAL RESERVISTS

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I desire to take up a matter of importance, because it relates to a correction of the RECORD, and it is necessary to make the correction in order that the papers may go to the committee.

Mr. President, for the purpose of making an amendment in the nature of a correction to the bill (H. R. 7039) to further amend section 304 of the Naval Reserve Act of 1938, as amended, so as to grant certain benefits to naval personnel engaged in training duty prior to official termination of World War II, which was passed by the Senate yesterday, I ask unanimous consent that the votes on the passage of the bill and the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading be reconsidered and that the following amendment be made:

On page 2, in line 6, before the word "amendment", to strike out "This" and insert "The", and in the same line, before the word "shall", to insert "contained in section 1", so that the section will read:

"SEC. 2. The amendment contained in section 1 shall be effective as of December 1, 1945."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. Without objection, the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts will be agreed to, and the bill will be considered as having gone through its various parliamentary stages, and passed.

INTERCHANGE OF PROPERTY BETWEEN THE ARMY AND NAVY

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] that he ask that the Senate proceed to consider a certain bill which was passed over yesterday?

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I have talked with the majority leader and he told me that later there will be a call of the calendar. Yesterday, during the call of the calendar, the Senator from Massachusetts, under a mistaken belief that House bill 6057 was a bill to which certain persons had objected, objected to its consideration. He has since ascertained that he was in error, and I now ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to consider the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is the calendar number?

Mr. OVERTON. The calendar number is 1790.

Mr. WALSH. The bill yesterday was passed over temporarily.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read by its title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 6057) to amend the act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat. 132) relating to the interchange of property between the Army and the Navy, so as to include the Coast Guard within its provisions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF SOCIAL SECURITY ACT AND INTERNAL REVENUE CODE

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 7037) to amend the Social Security Act and the Internal Revenue Code and for other purposes.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I rose to add my own support and advocacy to the adoption of the variable grant amendment. But I am speaking only in relation to the law as it now exists. I am glad that Senators have pointed out that even if we adopted the variable grant amendment it will fall far short of the principle of unanimity which Senators have advocated today.

I wish to take occasion publicly to commend the able Senator from Massachusetts, the able Senator from Washington, and the able Senator from California, all of whom come from States where high rates are paid to the recipients of the benefits to which we have referred. I know of the humane sentiments of the able Senator from Massachusetts which were written into the laws of his State, and it is not new for him to hear his friends express their approval.

But, Mr. President, allow me to make this observation with reference to the shortcomings even of this matching amendment. In the first place, in no case will the recipient in any State receive the entire $50 without the State, however poor it may be, being required to put up dollar for dollar with Federal money, to the extent of $25. It is only in respect to the lower amounts that the Federal Government will put up a larger share. But when we get up toward the top amount of $50, still the State will be required to match dollar for dollar in order that recipients may receive the meager pittance of $50 a month for their support.

The second thing which I wish to observe is that in spite of the fact that we may secure this variable means, grant amendment, the odious means test, as it has been pointed out, is still in the law. That means that the so-called needy are the only ones who can get it. That means that in many of our States they will receive as little as $5 a month, $7.50 a month, and $10 a month, because some social worker has decided that that is all that can be made available. A State senator in my State, Mr. Raymond Sheldon, called me on the telephone a few days ago and said that in the city of Tampa he knew of cases on the same street where one old person was receiving $2.50 a month, another $5 a month, and another another amount, when all were alike needy.

Mr. President, what I should like to see, and what the able Senator from California, the able Senator from Idaho, and the junior Senator from Florida will attempt to provide for by means of an amendment which will be considered later, is the principle of universality, not only geographically, but for all of the people in the same category. That is to say, that every person 60 years of age in every State in the Union, in every family in the Nation, would receive the same amount of money. That is the American principle of universality and equality under the law. That is the only way in which we will give equal justice to all our people. However, as compared with the present law, the Senator from Georgia and the Committee on Finance are entitled to the commendation of all of us for the improvement they have suggested in the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment was, on page 44, after line 3, to insert:

TITLE VI—STUDY BY JOINT COMMITTEE ON INTERNAL REVENUE

TAXATION OF ALL ASPECTS OF SOCIAL SECURITY

SEC. 601. The Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation is authorized and directed to make a full and complete study and investigation of old-age and survivors insurance and all other aspects of social security, particularly in respect to coverage, benefits, and taxes related thereto. The Joint Committee shall report to the Congress not later than October 1, 1947, the results of its study and investigation, together with such recommendations as it may deem appropriate.

SEC. 602. The Joint Committee is hereby authorized, in its discretion, to appoint an advisory committee of individuals having special knowledge concerning matters involved in its study and investigation to assist, consult with, and advise the Joint Committee with respect to such study and investigation. Members of the advisory committee shall not receive any compensation for their services as such members, but shall be reimbursed for travel, subsistence, and other necessary expenses incurred by them in connection with the performance of the work of the advisory committee.

For the purposes of this title the Joint Committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to sit and act at such places and times, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, to procure such printing and binding, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words.

SEC. 604. The Joint Committee shall have power to employ and fix the compensation of such officers, experts, and employees as it deems necessary in the performance of its duties under this title, but the compensation so fixed shall not exceed the compensation prescribed under the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, for comparable duties.

SEC. 605. The expenses of the Joint Committee under this title, which shall not exceed $10,000, shall be paid one-half from the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, upon vouchers signed by the chairman or the vice chairman.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the committee amendment. On page 44, in line 10, after the words "social security," I move to amend by inserting the words "including the Townsend plan."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from California will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 44, in line 10, after the words "social security" and the comma, it is proposed to insert the words "including the Townsend plan."

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, allow me to say that I shall support the amendment. It does not commit the investigating committee to the adoption of the plan, but any plan which has as its advocates several million American citizens is entitled to consideration. I hope the able Senator from Georgia will be agreeable to accepting the amendment and allow the conference committee to have the matter before it for its attention.

Mr. GEORGE. I was about to say, Mr. President, that the committee amendment is broad enough to include the Townsend plan and all other plans.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield,

Mr. DOWNEY. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I entirely agree with the viewpoint of the Senator from Georgia. This language is the exact language of a resolution which I submitted in January 1945 and which was agreed to by the Senate, requiring a report to be filed not later than October 1, 1945. The House declined to agree to the resolution, and as a result of that disagreement we have lacked the benfit of this study. As a result of the lack of the study we find ourselves at the end of another session of Congress without an adequate base on which to do the things which are so obviously necessary in expanding coverages and benefits in connection with social security.

Mr. President, I make this frank statement to the Senator: My opinion again is that it will be very difficult to obtain the acquiescence of the House in connection with title VI. The language of it is an exact duplicate of the resolution to which the House objected 2 years ago. I offered it then, and I offered it again in connection with this bill. I do not believe we will ever make substantial progress in liberalizing social-security coverages and benefits until a study of this nature is made. I do not have too much hope that the House will agree with us this time. I am perfectly sure that the House will not agree with us if we undertake to write any specifications in the text.

In my opinion, the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation will be obligated to include the Townsend plan in an investigation of old-age and survivors' insurance, "and all other aspects of social security." I would want them to do it. I totally agree with the Senator that they should do it. I simply submit to him that, in my opinion, in view of our previous experience with the House on precisely the same proposition, we will probably fail to get anything except as we cling to the general language indicated.

After making that statement, if the Senator wants to insist upon the inclusion of the language he indicates, I shall not resist it. I think it is already included. I believe the Senator endangers the entire study by insisting upon its textual inclusion. I leave the matter in the Senator's hands, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, of course I can never help but be influenced by the distinguished Senator from Michigan, because he is always logical, always most persuasive, always most vigorous and right in what he says, and I cannot help but admit the general truth of what he has said. Yet, at the end of it, I come to a totally different conclusion than does he.

I am strongly of the opinion that unless this language, "the Townsend plan," is included in this amendment the persons carrying on the investigation—I do not now refer of course to any Senator—will hold the Townsend plan up to scorn and contempt, and there will be no true and sympathetic attempt to understand the simple common sense necessity of Dr. Townsend's program.

I am only asking that this language be included so that whatever group of men may carry on this investigation they will be compelled to recognize that here is a great program close to the hearts of many millions of Americans, and at least some attempt to understand and evaluate it must be made.

I wish to say to the distinguished Senator that, in my opinion, a majority of the 15,000,000 unfortunate senior citizens, past 60, hold in their hearts a hope that still keeps them going that sometime a more merciful government may relieve them of their poverty and their anguish by reducing the age limit to 60, and granting them a decent payment, free of heartache and the humiliation of the means test.

Just one word further and I shall be through.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I should like to interrupt the Senator at that point, if he will allow me.

Mr. DOWNEY. Certainly.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator, of course, is discussing the merits of social dividends and social security, and I do not wish his comments, since they are elicited by my remarks, to indicate that I am in disagreement and that he has challenged my own point of view regarding social security. I would reduce the age to 60 this afternoon, if I could. I totally agree that the benefits have to be expanded by way of value and coverage in many directions, and I completely agree, regardless of the merits of the Townsend plan, that it has achieved the attachment of millions of our people and that most emphatically and undoubtedly it ought to be included, not as a byproduct but as a main consideration, in any such investigation as this. But I say to the Senator that if this title is passed as indicated, the Senator from Georgia, and I, of course, will be members of the joint committee—we are now members of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation—and I think we can both say that we shall insist that the Townsend plan be given every fair consideration along with other aspects of social security and social-security benefits.

I beg the Senator not to seem to indicate that I am resisting in any way a movement for the expansion of social security. On the contrary, I am trying, and I have tried for 2 years, to lay the basis for actually achieving results. This language was my language 2 years ago when the Senate adopted it and the House declined it. It is again my language, and I am simply saying to the Senator now that, in my view, since the House declined the language before, I very much fear it will decline it again, and that particularly it will decline the language if we undertake to make textual changes. I submit to the Senator that if we arrive at the same place today, namely, having again failed to create a special responsibility and obligation for this investigation, we will again have just that much longer postponed the better days to which the able Senator from California has so earnestly dedicated himself and for which he fights so valiantly.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President——

Mr. DOWNEY. Does the Senator from Georgia want me to yield to him?

Mr. GEORGE. No. I wished to say a few words, but might say at this time that I hope the Senator from California will not insist upon his amendment because the Townsend and any and all other plans are clearly contemplated by the text of the bill, and undoubtedly will be fully and carefully explored.

The Senator from Michigan has already indicated that both of us happen to be members of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation. At the present time I am chairman of that committee, and I can assure the Senator that the Townsend plan will be specifically studied, along with any other plan that may be presented, and certainly our whole Social Security System program. So I hope the Senator will not insist on his amendment because I think the House would be very likely to say that they do not want to be committed to study any particular phases.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, let me first express my appreciation of what both distinguished Senators have said. I clearly understand the Senator from Michigan, he is expressing no opinion on the Townsend plan and no opposition to a better Social Security System, but that on the contrary he is anxious for it. I agree with him that the language is sufficient to call for an investigation of the Townsend plan, but, of course, we are dealing with an unusual condition. By his opponents Dr. Townsend has been branded as charlatan, a demagog, a half-wit, and an opportunist. I believe that Dr. Townsend is 20 or 30 years ahead of the actuarial professors here in Washington. I believe old-age assistance and old-age security are steadily breaking down and that we are going to come to his simple, common-sense, inspired plan of reducing the age to 60, so that that great group now too old to get jobs and too young for pensions will be relieved of their desperation and poverty. I believe we will come to his idea of basic and sufficient social dividends to free from humiliation and anguish those who would be its beneficiaries. I believe we will come to his plan, a pay-as-you-go plan, with no great reserve built up, but involving a monthly tax, paid out in monthly dividends. I believe we will come to all those features of his program. They are simple; they are necessary; they appeal to the common heart of humanity. But as I have said the men who have built up this vast actuarial system hold Dr. Townsend in contempt as a fool and an opportunist, and so far these same groups have closed their minds and hearts to any fair or sympathetic consideration of his plan.

The House Ways and Means Committee recently had an investigation that cost $50,000. It resulted in a book almost as large as this I hold in my hand—the Calhoun report. I read every word in it and was discouraged by its defects.

The Calhoun report contained imperfect and untrue tables, illogical deductions, facts were suppressed, there was no facing of realities, no fair consideration of the basic provision of the Townsend plan. I am at least determined to do what I can, as long as I remain a Member of the Senate, to attempt to get some fair consideration of the Townsend plan.

Mr. President, I have the highest admiration for the ability of the two Senators who have been speaking to me, and entire confidence in their integrity, and upon the basis of their statements to me that they will undertake to see that if this amendment becomes law, and there is the investigation contemplated in the pending proposal, there will be a fair and just consideration and investigation of the Townsend plan, I withdraw my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator withdraws the amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I concur in that. I supported the Senator from California, and I concur in every tribute he pays Dr. Townsend. As I said before the Committee on Finance a few days ago, I am not ashamed to say that I see the merit and virtue in the Townsend proposal. I think the Senator from California has paid Dr. Townsend a deserved tribute, and that the time will come when he will be considered as a forerunner in giving to the people of this country the security which they deserve, and in contributing to the humanitarian betterment of the citizens of this Nation in a signal way through his plan.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I merely wish to add to what the Senator from Florida has said, that the Senator from California has used the words I would have employed about the Townsend plan. But as I see it, under the bill now pending, there will be a right to investigate in that particular field without any amendment to the bill. But if any amendment is needed to insure that the plan shall be investigated along with the others, I think the bill should be amended, for we want to do what is right and just to the old people of the United States.

The amendment which has just been adopted, the variable-grants amendment, will help out in a great many of the States, the poorer States of the Nation. It is badly needed at this time. This will encourage them to put in even more money, in order that the beneficiaries may get more, and it is going to start an increase in the benefits for the old people throughout the United States. I am glad to see it done at this time, even before the investigation is made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Georgia a question. The Senator from Georgia will recall that at the time the act was before the Senate, the Senator from Arizona and myself submitted an amendment adding a flat $5 to the Federal contribution, regardless of what the States contributed. That was changed in the conference, was it not?

Mr. GEORGE. The variable grants principle did add a little more than $5.

Mr. MAGNUSON. As the bill reads, it is raised from $20 to $25?

Mr. GEORGE. That is correct.

Mr. MAGNUSON. But it must be matched?

Mr. GEORGE. That is correct.

Mr. MAGNUSON. The amendment of the Senator from Arizona and myself added $5 to the Federal contribution regardless, so it has been changed in that respect?

Mr. GEORGE. In that respect, yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment was, on page 45, after line 20, to insert the following:

TITLE VII—INCOME TAX PROVISIONS

SEC. 701. Employees' annuities.

(a) Section 22 (b) (2) (B) of the Internal Revenue Code is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof a colon and the following: "Provided, however, That the amount contributed by an employer to a trust to be applied by the trustee for the purchase of annuity contracts for the benefit of an employee of said employer, shall not be included in the income of the employee in the year in which the amount is contributed if (i) the amount is contributed to the trustee pursuant to a written agreement entered into prior to October 21, 1942, between the employer and the trustee, or between the employer and the employee, and (ii) under the terms of the trust agreement the employee is not entitled, except with the consent of the trustee, during his lifeime to any rights under annuity contracts purchased by the trustee other than the right to receive annuity payments."

(b) The amendment made by this section shall be applicable with respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1938.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That completes the committee amendments.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, I have at the desk an amendment in the nature of a substitute which will embody the so-called Townsend plan as a part of the pending measure, and I wish to call the amendment up at this time.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOWNEY. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK. I should like to call a situation to the attention of the distinguished Senator from Georgia. Under the Veterans' Emergency Housing Act of 1946 all the regulations, directives, and orders made under the act come under the provisions of the administrative act which was passed some weeks ago. It has been found that the program for the veterans' housing is hampered, impeded, and almost hamstrung, to such an extent that something must be done to alleviate the situation.

This morning I conferred with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT]; the minority leader, the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE]; and the majority leader, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], about an amendment I have to present, and they have all indicated that they have absolutely no objection to it. It has nothing whatever to do with the subject matter of the pending bill, but it is absolutely necessary at this late hour in the session that some legislative vehicle be made available in order to carry this amendment.

The amendment merely provides that the administrative act shall not be applicable to the Veterans' Emergency Housing Act. The Housing Act, as we all understand, will expire on December 31, 1947, and the administrative act was never intended to cover emergency legislation. We have in the act itself—and I think since then—exempted from its provisions certain emergency laws.

I ask the Senator from Georgia at this time if he will allow me to use the social security bill as a vehicle to carry this amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I shall be delighted to do so.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I am familiar with the situation. I know that if the Veterans' Emergency Housing Act should come under the strict interpretation of the administrative law, which requires 30 days' notice, and the like, to which attention was called, it would materially interfere with the efficient administration of the Veterans' Emergency Housing Act. I hope the Senator from Georgia will agree to the amendment going on the bill.

Mr. GEORGE. I shall be glad to take the amendment to conference. But, frankly, I am very much inclined to believe that the House will be more reluctant to accept the bill if we add anything to it. I shall not object to its going in if there is no objection to the amendment. I understand it is an unobjectionable amendment.

Mr. MURDOCK. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] assured me he had no objection, the minority leader gave me similar assurance, and the majority leader did likewise.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 46, after line 15, it is proposed to add a new section, as follows:

SEC. 702. Section 2 (a) of the act of June 11, 1946 (Public Law 404, 79th Cong.), is amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting a semicolon and the following: "and the Veterans' Emergency Housing Act of 1946."

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. President, I ask that the clerk be directed to number the section appropriately.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. MURDOCK].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert at this point in the RECORD an explanation of why the amendment is necessary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NECESSITY FOR THE PROPOSED AMENDMENT

The Veterans' Emergency Housing Act of 1946 is a temporary statute. For a limited period, it grants powers necessary to expedite the production of building materials, to allocate building materials for house construction and other essential purposes, and to provide that veterans of World War II shall have preference in purchasing or renting the housing produced with these materials.

The provisions of the act, and all regulations and orders issued thereunder, terminate on December 31, 1947.

The Veterans' Emergency Housing Act of 1946 is centered directly on providing the legal basis for dealing swiftly and expeditiously with the production and allocation of materials needed to provide housing for veterans. To subject these functions to the requirements of the Administrative Procedures Act as to 30 days' notice and formal hearings would defeat the objective of the Veterans' Emergency Housing Act of 1946.

The Administrative Procedures Act specifically recognizes that this type of temporary emergency function should not be included within the scope of provisions which are necessary and desirable in the case of permanent and continuing functions. Under section 2 (a) of the Administrative Procedures Act there are exempted from all the provisions of the act, except those relating to publication of organization, delegations, procedures, and rules and regulations in the Federal Register:

1. Functions which by law expire within any fixed period after the termination of hostilities,

2. Functions which expire on or before July 1, 1947, and

3. Functions conferred by the Selective Training and Service Act, the Contract Settlement Act of 1944, and the Surplus Property Act of 1944.

The amendment would merely add the Veterans' Emergency Housing Act temporary emergency functions to those temporary emergency functions already exempted by section 2 (a) of the Administrative Procedures Act. Thus, like the temporary emergency functions already excepted, similar functions under the Veterans' Emergency Housing Act would be excepted from the time consuming provisions which would defeat the accomplishment of the purposes thereof, but would remain subject to the requirements as to publication in the Federal Register.

TYPICAL EXAMPLES SHOWING THE NEED FOR THE PROPOSED AMENDMENT

Under the Veterans' Emergency Housing Act, the Housing Expediter is authorized to issue orders or regulations allocating, or establishing priorities for the delivery of, materials or facilities suitable for the construction and completion of housing for veterans. He also has power to issue directives to other agencies (including the OPA) to exercise their powers, to the extent authorized by law, in such manner as will increase the supply of housing accommodations.

There may arise the situation where it is necessary to issue a directive to the Office of International Trade to place under export licensing control certain grades of construction lumber urgently needed to complete housing for veterans. If the functions under the Veterans' Emergency Housing Act were not excepted from the Administrative Procedure Act, it would be necessary to give 30 days' notice of the proposed issuance of this directive and to hold formal hearings thereon. Thus, by the time that the directive was issued, large quantities of construction lumber sought to be retained for, and which otherwise would have been channeled into, the construction of housing for veterans would be exported during this waiting period.

Another typical example would be in the case of construction plywood which is in extremely short supply and which is urgently needed for the veterans' housing program. As the production of peeler logs is increased through the use of premium payments being made under the Veterans' Emergency Housing Act, it may be possible, without adversely affecting users of other types of plywood, to issue a direction requiring that the set-aside of construction plywood shall be increased from 60 to 75 percent. If this directive were subject to the requirements of 30 days' notice and formal hearings large quantities of peeler logs which otherwise would have been channeled into construction plywood required for the construction of homes for veterans would be diverted into other types of nonresidential construction.

The same would be true with respect to building materials declared surplus to the War Assets Administration. In this case it might be desirable to issue a directive requiring that these building materials be sold only to the holders of priorities issued for the construction of housing for veterans. If notice of the issuance of such a directive had to be given 30 days before it became effective, the major portion of these surplus building materials would be drained away from house construction into other types of nonresidential construction.

It is also pertinent to note that the Second War Powers Act, which, administratively, ties in very closely with the priority and allocation functions under the Veterans' Emergency Housing Act, expires prior to July 1, 1947. Thus, regulations and directives bearing on allocations and set-asides issued under the Second War Powers Act are not subject to the requirements of the Administrative Procedure Act as to 30 days' notice. If a similar exception were not made in the case of the functions under the Veterans' Emergency Housing Act, there could arise the altogether undesirable situation where regulations and orders issued under the Second War Powers Act and relating to matters involved in nonresidential construction would not be subject to the requirement of 30 days' prior notice, while all regulations relating to housing and the allocation of materials therefor would be subject to the 30-day requirement. The failure to except the functions under the Veterans' Emergency Housing Act from the requirement of 30 days' prior notice would tend to divert building materials from house construction into nonresidential construction and thus defeat the intent of the Congress to give the construction of housing for veterans first preference.

Mr. MURDOCK. I thank the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I wish to submit a unanimous-consent request that mere technical changes or corrections, and the renumbering of the sections in the bill, and the like, be permitted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I also ask consent that there be inserted in the RECORD at this point a three-page statement of the practical effect of the variable grants provision. The practical effect of that provision will not be so much to raise the actual benefits paid to recipients, though some will be raised, of course; but to enable many States to place on the rolls persons who are now entirely off the rolls.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Georgia?

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PRACTICAL EFFECTS OF VARIABLE GRANTS

There are two things which may be done with the extra Federal funds from variable grants. First, the State may use the funds to increase the amount of assistance given those already on the State rolls. Second, the State may use the funds to put additional needy persons on their rolls. Actually the States will use the funds for both purposes.

Increased cost of living means that those on the rolls need more assistance. Increased cost of living also means that some persons with small fixed incomes which were sufficient for them to get by on in normal times now have insufficient income and should be put on the rolls for enough assistance to enable them to meet the increase in living costs.

I should like to point out that the proposed variable grants would not bring up the average of assistance in the low-income States to the level of assistance in the high-income States, nor would it even bring up the Federal expenditure per recipient in the low-income States to the Federal expenditure per recipient in the high-income States.

The average of old-age assistance in the lowest income States for April 1946 was $19.54 and even if all the additional Federal funds were used to increase the size of benefits the average payment would still be under $30 and Federal funds per recipient under $20. On the other hand, the average payment in the high-income States is already around $38, even though a considerable part of benefit cost is unmatched by Federal funds. With the ceiling lifted, as is proposed, Federal funds in large amounts will be made available to match these expenditures and doubtless these average payments will rise to at least $42 or $43. Thus in these States Federal funds per recipient will continue to exceed Federal funds per recipient in low-income States.

The general level of assistance in high-income States will continue to be at least 25 percent above that of low-income States. I believe, in view of the necessity of taking more on the rolls in the low-income States, that the difference in average payments will remain even greater than I have indicated. But even a 25 percent difference is much greater than is the difference in the cost of living in the high-income and low-income States.

I have so far been referring to the 11 States whose per capita income is so much below the national average that they will receive two-for-one matching under the bill. Twenty other States will receive more than dollar-for-dollar matching but less than two-for-one matching. We might take New Hampshire as an example. The Federal share, 58 percent, is about halfway between the 50 percent minimum and the 66⅔ percent maximum. New Hampshire payments at present average about $31 per capita. The State would receive around $6.80 additional funds per recipient, so its average payments would be around the present average of the high-income States, but less than the new average which the rise in ceilings should give the high-income States.

A further example of a State around the halfway mark is Texas, with a 62-percent Federal share. Texas payments at present average about $24.60 per recipient. The variable matching would average about $7.60 per recipient, bringing the average payment up to around $32.20, still some $5 below the present average of the highest-income States, and around $8 below the probable future average of the highest-income States. The Federal funds per recipient would remain less for Texas than for the high-income States.

No system for measuring grants to States is a perfect system. I believe, however, that the approach of lifting the ceilings and providing variable grants based on per capita income works out more equitably than any other proposal. I feel certain that in its practical effects it is a much more equitable arrangement than presently exists. At present aged citizens of the United States in the lower-income States receive only about half the assistance—and half the Federal funds—that is received by other aged citizens in the higher-income States. Thus dollar-for-dollar matching may be equitable from some viewpoints but not from the viewpoint of equitably providing assistance to the aged. The pending bill is designed to lessen the present inequity and should accordingly be enacted.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I desire the RECORD at this point to show, from the committee report, that the State of Washington for old-age assistance pays to 64,794 recipients the sum of $3,443,361, or an average of $53.14, the highest in the Nation. Very few States come anywhere near that average, with the exception of the State of California.

I should also like to have the RECORD show with respect to the other important section of Federal aid and State aid to dependent children, that the State of Washington pays to 4,880 families with 12,020 children, the sum of $448,010, or an average of $100 per family, which is more than double the average paid by most States, and again is the highest in the Nation.

I wish the RECORD to show further that in its aid to the blind the State of Washington pays to 629 recipients $36,752, or an average of $58.43, which again is the highest in the entire Nation.

So in all three features of social security aid I am proud to point out that my own State, with respect to all three of them, pays the highest average in the Nation to receipients thereof.

Mr. President, I wish to say that my State legislature has not only been humanitarian and progressive with respect to these matters, but ours was the first legislature to make such provisions. I myself in 1932 served in the first State legislature that abolished the poor houses in the State and adopted a State social security law which provided for the payment in aid to these three great classes of our citizens. We have come a long way since that day. I think the pending bill is a step forward. I hope we can go further. I hope some of the ideas of the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] can in the future be incorporated in Government aid to these three great groups of individuals.

I hope the day will come when our great rich Nation can abolish the so-called needs test. My State had a great deal of trouble with the Federal Government respecting the needs test. We have raised the money and we want to pay these high amounts. We want to pay higher average amounts than are paid by any other State in the Nation. But we find that because we receive the maximum in matching funds, namely $20, the Federal Government has laid down certain tests which it feels that our State should also incorporate in our needs test before the Federal Government will pay the matching funds. We have been far more liberal in that respect than has the Federal Government. For that reason the officials of my State who are in charge of the social security program have had to wage a constant fight. They come to Washington three or four time a year and always have to struggle with the Social Security Board so we may be allowed to pay the amount of money we want to pay, and to establish the test we want to establish. I hope the needs test can be abolished in a very short time.

In the early days of this program, social snoopers, as they have been called on the floor of the Senate, used to go around to the elder people who were in need, and to embarrass them by doing many things that should not have been done. If the program is right in the beginning, if we should make payments to our elderly citizens, we should pay with the minimum of a needs test. The so-called social snoopers did many things to elderly people that caused them embarrassment. Some of that procedure has been abolished. But we found in the early days that in many States, including my own State, the administrative cost of trying to find out whether an elder person was entitled to old-age assistance far exceeded the amount that in might cost the State if the State actually paid old people after they reached a certain age.

Mr. President, the country which has had the greatest experience in this matter is Sweden. Sweden long ago abolished the so-called needs test. Sweden says to her citizens, "When you have reached the age of 65 years you can come to your Government and we will give you some assistance." I suppose there are chiselers in Sweden as there are in this country, but we are spending a great portion of this social-security fund to hire persons to try to find out whether the elderly people need assistance. I hope the joint committee will go into that question, and I believe they will find that in the long run the administrative cost of qualifying the applicant for assistance is far greater than if the money were paid out in a flat sum at a certain age.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. DOWNEY. I think there is a great deal of truth in that statement. Sometimes I myself have spoken harshly about the social-security agents who go into the homes of these unfortunate people, inquiring about all their personal affairs to determine whether or not they are entitled to pensions. They are merely operating under the law. I could tell of hundreds of cases involving such humiliation and anguish as to make one almost cry over the situation. I know of one woman who was on the old-age-assistance roll. She required a serious operation. Over a period of 2 or 3 years, out of her scanty payments she had saved several hundred dollars to have the operation performed. Unfortunately the social-security agent found out about it. She had broken the law. She could receive no more benefits until her excess money—I believe any sum above $500—had been used up. The anguish, the humiliation, and the heartbreak of that particular woman were beyond description. It is impossible for me to understand how, in the wealthiest, most fertile land in the world, we have surrounded our retired workers, who built this Nation for the rest of us, with the aroma of the poorhouse and the humiliation attendant upon such a status. I congratulate the Senator from Washington and his State. They are the pioneers in these great movements. We in California are proud that our State is one of the Pacific-coast States which are leading the way, with Washington and the other Western States, toward at least a certain degree of decent and generous treatment of our retired citizens.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I thank the Senator from California. I share his opinion. I know that the social-security agents are required by law to do certain things. I am hoping that the day will soon come when we can change the law. Probably some persons would accept old-age assistance after reaching a certain age, even though they did not need it; but I believe that the number of such persons would be so small that the amounts paid to them would not come anywhere near equaling the administrative cost of trying to find out who can qualify under the act. As I previously stated, Sweden and some of the other progressive countries in Europe—Sweden being the leader in this field—learned that lesson 28 years ago; and since that time the cost of the program has been less.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. DOWNEY. It is rather sad for a patriotic American to reflect upon our boasting about our great benevolence, and to learn, as the Senator has indicated, that many other nations in the world, with little wealth compared with ours, have pension systems very much superior to ours. I do not mean that they have better pension systems in amounts than have California and Washington, but judged by our national average, the United States has nothing to be proud of when we consider what it does—or rather what it does not do—for retired and elderly people.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have printed in the RECORD. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment, which is very long, be waived. I shall make a brief explanation of the meat of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be printed in the RECORD.

The amendment offered by Mr. DOWNEY is as follows:

Beginning with line 3 on page 1, strike out down to and including line 3, on page 8, and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"RULES AND REGULATIONS

"SEC. 202. The taxes imposed by this title shall be collected by the Bureau of Internal Revenue under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, and shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States as internal-revenue collections.

"SEC. 204. The Secretary of the Treasury shall be empowered to designate the manner and place for filing returns and payment of tax and shall provide such forms and instructions as may be necessary for the proper administration of this act.

"SEC. 205. The tax shall be computed on the total gross income of all persons and companies at the end of each calendar month and a complete return filed with the Secretary of the Treasury before the 20th day of the calendar month following the month in which the tax accrues, unless no tax is due under the exemptions as provided in section 201.

The taxpayer may, at his election, apply an overpayment credit to taxes subsequently accruing hereunder.

"SEC. 209. If any person having made the return and paid the tax as provided by this act feels aggrieved by any assesment so made upon him for any specified period by the Secretary of the Treasury, he may appeal from said assessment by filing a petition in the manner provided by section 871 of the Internal Revenue Code. The provisions of chapter 5 of the Internal Revenue Code shall be applicable to proceedings with respect to any such petition, except that where final judgment is in favor of the taxpayer for the repayment to him in whole or in part of taxes paid the Secretary of the Treasury shall, upon the presentation by the taxpayer to him of a certified copy of such final judgment, issue his warrant against any funds collected under this act.

The Secretary of the Treasury shall submit annually to the Bureau of the Budget an estimate of the appropriations to be credited to the account.

On page 21, beginning with line 10, strike out down to and including line 11 on page 32.

On page 32, strike out lines 15 to 18, inclusive.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOWNEY. I yield.

Mr. REED. May I inquire of the Senator from California if this is the amendment which is lying on the desks of Senators?

Mr. DOWNEY. Yes. It embodies the Townsend plan. I have attached to the amendment the measure which is now pending in the House of Representatives. As a matter of fact, there are two identical bills in that body. I have been given to understand that more than 40 percent of the Members of the House have been anxious to bring those bills to the floor, but so far have been unsuccessful.

Stated generally, the amendment embodies the principles of the so-called Townsend plan. The age at which the retired worker could enjoy his benefit is reduced to 60 years. The means test is abolished; and any retired citizen not engaged in a gainful occupation would be entitled to receive benefits whether he were rich or poor. As the distinguished Senator from Washington has already pointed out, there is such a small percentage of rich persons that that element is not very important.

The amendment provides for the levying of a 3-percent tax on gross incomes, to be collected monthly. The fund would then be paid out in monthly benefits to the beneficiaries entitled to benefits. So the amount of benefits would fluctuate with the national income. In periods of inflation and prosperity the retired senior citizen would be entitled to more than in periods of deflation and depression. In order to finance the plan a 3-percent gross income tax is provided for in this amendment.

Mr. President, in my opinion the two parallel pension systems which we have in the United States are steadily collapsing. I shall attempt to prove, by data of the Social Security Board itself, the almost complete futility and inefficiency of these two plans. I think one of the reasons why we have plans which are so worthless and illogical is that the whole subject is so complicated and abstruse that Senators and Representatives, living under almost unremitting pressure of consideration of matters of great moment, have not been able intellectually to understand the lack of logic, inhumanity, indecency, and absurdity of our two pension plans.

We have two parallel systems. One is called old-age assistance, which I shall hereafter refer to as the assistance program. It is the matching program, the charity program, only for the indigent. The other program is called old-age and survivors' insurance. It is the so-called contributory plan, under which certain workers in covered occupations are presently contributing 1 percent of their pay, up to a maximum of $3,000 in wages or salaries a year, the employer paying an additional 1 percent upon the same pay.

The first thing that greets the human mind as it begins to examine into these pension systems is that the benefits generally paid under both plans are so meager as to leave the recipients living in a state of insecurity and poverty.

The second phase of the two plans which immediately attracts the attention of any intellectual person is that under the contributory plan the workers, those who pay taxes, are receiving substantially less than the beneficiaries of the indigency program. In other words, in this case it pays not to be a contributor to a plan, but rather to have nothing, and to come under the plan in a state of destitution.

Mr. President, in order that we may have definite and precise figures in the RECORD, I now ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks a table to be found on page 32 of the February, 1946, Social Security Bulletin, showing old age assistance payments, by States, for December, 1945.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the table will be printed in the RECORD.

(See exhibit A.)

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, this table shows that the payment to the recipients varies from a high of approximately $50 in Washington, California, and one or two other States, down to approximately $10 a month in Georgia, Kentucky, and several other States. So it will be immediately noted that the range is from $10 up to a high of $50 a month. The average payment, taking into consideration all the States and all the recipients, is $30.82.

It should also be noted, and I emphasize this for later use, that in the event one of the beneficiaries of the assistance is married and has a wife who is past 65 years of age, his wife is entitled to receive the same amount. Again Mr. President, an absurdity which is so grotesque, to me, that it approaches sheer idiocy, appears in the plan.

In the assistance plan, where the recipient makes no contribution, if his wife is entitled to receive a pension by reason of being 65 years of age, the amount of the pension is therefore doubled. But under the contributory system, where the worker pays taxes, if he has a wife who is entitled to receive such payments, only 50 percent is added. Can the human mind make any sense out of such an arrangement? Can there possibly be any defense for giving to a person under the assistance program double the amount, in the event he has a wife who is entitled to receive such payments, but under the old-age insurance system giving to a worker whose wife is entitled to receive such payments only a 50 percent increase, even though he makes contributions by way of taxation?

Mr. President, I desire to have printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks a table showing the average monthly primary old-age insurance benefits in force, by States, on December 31, 1945, and I ask unanimous consent to have that done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit B.)

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, I may say that this table, like the other one, was prepared by the Social Security Board. It shows the amount of benefits paid to beneficiaries under the contributory system. Immediately we are attracted by the rather extraordinary fact that the average payment in the case of old-age insurance is only $24.14, whereas in the case of old-age assistance it is $30; and, as I have already stated, under the contributory system only 50 percent is added when the wife is also 65, as against double the amount under the old-age assistance program.

In the case of the old-age assistance program, we see a variation in the payments to recipients of from $10 to $50. In the case of the contributory system the variation in payments is from $19.04 in Mississippi up to approixmately $26 in one of the more fortunate States.

Mr. President, the old-age insurance system is allegedly based, in respect to the payments to the recipients, upon the contributions made by the workers, the employees. A vast actuarial scheme has been set up, requiring the attention and deliberation of highly trained actuaries. Great shelves are being filed with volumes of statistics, weighted averages, median lines, maximums, minimums, involved and intricate forms. At the end, what happens? At the end, the average worker comes out with about $24 a month, far less than he would get if he were under the old-age assistance program. Mr. President, this plan actually contemplates that these actuarial calculations will become effective against a boy 16 years of age who is in a covered occupation, and that for 50 years, until he is 65 years of age, the Social Security Board will keep track of his employers and of the tax payments made from his wages; also of his wife, his children, his job, and his compensation; and then, as a result of those calculations, it will determine what that young man will receive 50 years from now. In other words, these actuarial calculators are now calculating whether 50 years from now that boy will get $10.50 or $12.13 or $19, or $20.

Mr. President, in the next 10 years or 20 years we are going to have crisis after crisis; what these crises may be, no one can readily predict; but certain it is that many of them will bring widespread economic dislocation. And here is a group of men who solemnly assert that by means of this actuarial system they are at this time determining how much workers will be paid 10 or 20 or 30 or 40 or 50 or even 100 years from now. The sad and pathetic aspect of it is that these payments will amount to only approximately $10 a month, which is the minimum, or up to approximately $60 a month, which is the maximum. As a matter of fact, Mr. President, these payments are so meager and so low that they nauseate and sicken the human heart. I have already submitted for the RECORD a statement of the average payment made to these beneficiaries by each State, showing an average payment of approximately $24 a month. Now I wish to offer for the RECORD a more definite statement showing the entire futility and absurdity of this whole law. I have before me a letter from the Social Security Administration, and I ask that the entire letter be included in the RECORD at the end of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit C.)

Mr. DOWNEY. The letter is dated July 9, 1946. It shows that of the total number of recipients under the contributory plan, 8.3 percent are receiving a minimum of $10 a month. Mr. President, what good is any pension system which affords to a man only $10 a month? Can he even starve to death on that sum of money? Of what value is it? Why should we have this vast and complicated system, these great actuarial tables and these records which are now occupying whole warehouses? I understand that the Social Security Administration now is approaching 100,000,000 records of various wage earners. Somewhat less than 10 percent of recipients are receiving the minimum of $10 a month. As a matter of fact, from the standpoint of social security, that is putting the situation far too optimistically. Almost one-half of the workers whose records are laboriously kept, and which follow them from job to job, and from year to year, will never even qualify. From the record it is apparent that from 40 percent to 50 percent of them, who will pay very scanty contributions into this plan, will receive nothing in return.

Let us take one great group which we all recognize immediately, namely, the young women who are coming forth from the schools and colleges. Most of them, when starting to work, are employed in covered occupations. They pay their scanty contributions. In order to be entitled to any dividends, the worker must remain under the contributory plan for 40 calendar quarters, or approximately 10 years. The women to whom I refer, who come out of high schools and colleges and work in covered occupations for 4, 5, 7, 8, or 9 years, and make faithfully their payments during all that time, will be totally excluded if they never complete the entire 40 quarters. There are many men who are approaching ages 50 and 55, who pay year after year, who will be excluded because they are not employed a sufficient amount of time in covered occupations.

So, Mr. President, as the plan is working out, almost half of the men, whose records now fill warehouses, and will soon amount to hundreds of millions in number, will never receive anything under this plan although they pay their taxes regularly. But, to those who are fortunate enough—if I may bring myself to use that word—to be beneficiaries, let us go down the line and see what tragic and miserable sums the Government pays. I do not know of any American professing Christian principles who can advocate payments of only $20 or $30 a month. Some payments are so low that the persons receiving them live in worse circumstances of destitution and starvation than do the starving peoples of Europe. They are living on from 500 to 1,000 calories a day. Yes, Senators, we pretend to represent principles of benevolence and Christianity, and yet we degrade our workers with payments so miserly that I wonder that the senior citizen wants to continue his struggle to live; and, indeed, Mr. President, many of them do not; many of them die by their own hands, by malnutrition, or by gradually wasting away.

Mr. President, am I exaggerating? Let us go over the figures once again. Almost 10 percent receive the minimum of $10 a month, another 10 percent receive from $10 to $15 a month, 28 percent receive between $20 and $25 a month, and 21 percent receive between $25 and $30 a month. As a matter of fact, a large percentage of the beneficiaries under old-age insurance are receiving less than $30 a month—and that in a land of great wealth and vast yearly production.

Suppose we were so fortunate, or unfortunate, as to be living among savages in some part of the world. Let us take, for example, the Eskimos. The Eskimo hunters come in from their hunting grounds at night with the meat which they have captured during the day. The elders of the tribe sit around and do not engage in the hunting. What would we think of Eskimos if they threw perhaps only 5 percent or 10 percent of their catch to the elders of the tribe who no longer can go hunting. No; Mr. President, savages do not do that kind of a thing. When a man has completed his life's work among the savage tribes he lives in the same dignity and under the same security as does the worker. But this Christian country—there are some others of course—has worked out a method which gives a pension of approximately 10 percent or 15 percent of the income of the average working population—scarcely sufficient to keep body and soul together. We love to boast of our benevolences and our generosity to foreign lands. We love to tell of our wealth and fertility. But we lack either the will or the desire to work out for our senior citizens a method by which they may receive more than $10 or $20 or $30 a month.

Mr. President, there are so many harsh and cruel things in this law that I shall not take the time of the Senate to explain them. But let me show another harsh joker in the law. As I have already said, if a man on the assistance rolls is married and has a wife 65 years of age, the amount of money which he will receive will be doubled. If he is under the contributory system, where he pays taxes, the amount is not the same. Why we penalize a man because he pays taxes, I do not know, but that is the law which was passed by the Congress of the United States. Congress has provided for an average old-age assistance of $30 when the unfortunate has nothing else upon which to live, or $24 under the insurance plan. That, in fact, is the plain result of our experience for practically a decade under these two plans.

Now, suppose the insurance-plan beneficiary is married. You may say, Mr. President, "Well, he gets at least something more." But that is not so in the majority of cases. Why? Because the average man at age 60 or 65 has a wife who is 5 years younger than he is. So here we are giving an average benefit of $24 a month. We add $12 a month to it if the recipient has a wife. We are generous. But the average man will not receive it until he has reached the age of 70 years. Does it make any difference to that man, as he watches his poor helpmate slowly starve, whether she is 57 or 58 or 61 or 62 years of age? Oh, Mr. President, in these pension laws we have divorced our system from any reality, from any decency, from any generosity, and we have a strangely bad system.

There is another thing which I cannot understand. I cannot understand the reasoning of the actuaries in connection with this contributory system. I suppose that what they were trying to do with their sharp pencils, their logarithms, and their involved calculations, was to try to cut a certain piece of cloth in a certain way, and if they had to add here or cut there in order to reach the results which they were trying to achieve, they did it without any thought of the human heart or of giving any consideration to realities. Mr. President, allow me to show you to what absurd lengths they went.

As I have said, in the assistance program, where no tax is paid, in the event the wife is 65 the amount is doubled. That makes some sense. If we were paying fifty or sixty or seventy-five a month to a man and he had a wife who was entitled to have him paid that much, that would make some sense.

How did the Social Security Board figure out that an elderly woman married to a contributor would need only 50 percent more than her husband? They used an argument that had a certain degree of plausibility. The argument is that two living together, husband and wife, can, relatively speaking, live for less than one. In other words, for two living together it does not cost as much to live as for two living apart, relatively. There is a certain degree of plausibility in that. Just how they can apply that rule to these miserable dividends of ten, twenty, or thirty dollars a month, I do not know. I do not know how any human beings could envisage a husband living on $20 and a wife on $10 more. But there is a certain degree of plausibility in that, as I have said.

Let us take up the next case, where the primary beneficiary has the entitled wife, and the two of them have been getting 50 percent additional because two can live cheaper than one. The husband dies. Then what should the widow get? The Social Security Board then figures that one can live for half as much as two, and will pay the widow 75 percent of what her husband got. So in this futile, miserable, abominable law, the average payments to the widow are about $18 or $19 a month, while those to the primary beneficiary, the male, are about $24 a month. That is the kind of logic that is used; 50 percent to the wife, 75 percent to the widow, 100 percent to the primary beneficiary, and none of them getting enough to live on with any degree of human decency.

Mr. President, if some of the Social Security Board experts were here they could not deny the validity of any of my figures, because my figures all came from them. I wish to digress at this point in my argument to thank the actuaries and the heads of the Social Security Agency for having very laboriously, patiently, and courteously furnished me with my figures, which they knew I would use here in an argument against them. So I say they cannot deny these figures I am using, because they are the figures of the Social Security Board.

How does the Social Security Board justify giving a much smaller payment than old-age assistance to the man who pays a tax under insurance? The Social Security Board says that assistance is based on indigency, and the recipient can have no other source of income beyond a certain amount fixed for the standard of living. Why? The contributory system envisions a social dividend which the worker may collect without any humiliation, and then add to it whatever income he himself may have.

To show how extreme is the difference in the amount taken between the two systems, let us take a case in California as an example. Under the insurance system a husband and his entitled wife, in an average case in California, will get somewhat more than $30 a month. Under old-age assistance they would get $100. So the assistance program pays almost three times as much in California, and in several other States of the Nation, as the contributory system.

I have said the Social Security Board will attempt to justify that by claiming that the contributory system produces a social dividend, an insurance policy, which the worker may add to when he wishes.

I have heretofore spoken of and condemned in very strong language the so-called Calhoun report. That is a report prepared under a special House resolution and under direction of the House Ways and Means Committee. The report is a large volume, almost as large as the volume of hearings on the pending bill, and contains more misleading facts than any other document of which I know.

The Calhoun report attempts to face this problem by saying that we have created a charity system which gives substantially more than the contributory system, and then it attempts to answer that charge. I read now from page 78 of that report:

> If OASI beneficiaries as a group were persons dependent entirely on insurance benefits to meet living costs, the problem of liberalizing benefits within the general framework and relationships of the present system to meet all these costs would appear formidable if not hopeless.

But listen to this:

> But, by and large, the great majority have some other sources of support. The economic status of various classes of recipients and potential recipients and the significance of OASI payments to them are most important in appraising the present benefit schedule and proposals for this change.

I skip certain language and continue quoting:

> If the old-age-assistance means test as applied in the several States is taken as a guide, it would appear from OASI benefit statistics that fewer than 1 in 10 of the aged OASI recipients may presently be expected to fall in the group with no private income or resources. In large eastern cities only about 8 percent of the male primary beneficiaries were receiving old-age assistance in 1944. In southern cities the percentage was much smaller—only a little above 2 percent; in Los Angeles, where public-assistance eligibility conditions are relatively lenient, the percentage of OASI beneficiaries receiving old-age assistance runs well over 20 percent.

Let us see exactly what the authors of the Calhoun report are there attempting to show and attempting to prove. If workers in receipt of insurance benefits do not get enough to live on they are entitled to claim old-age assistance, and in Los Angeles, as it is stated, over 24 percent of them are already doing so. The Calhoun report finds that only a minor proportion of these people are getting old-age assistance. Therefore they reach the conclusion that 9 out of 10 of the contributors to the insurance system have other means of support which they can add to their social dividends and have enough for a decent living.

In the Calhoun report there are three tables in an appendix cited in support of that. I examined those three tables for hours, and they do not support the statement at all. I called into consultation one of the best experts in social security, and I was advised that they realized those tables, which are imperfect, loosely thrown together, and totally irrelevant, do not support the statement in the Calhoun report.

The reason why this question is of life-and-death interest to the Social Security Board is that if we have now reached the condition in which the great number of our people will get more from assistance than they would from the contributory program, the contributory program is going to be swept out of our laws, because what would be the use of maintaining thousands of calculators trained in the intricacies of the law and the scores of hair-splitting decisions of the Social Security Board as well as tens of thousands of other employees to work the benefits of a complicated system, if the great proportion of contributors are to get less than under old-age assistance and would have to go on old-age assistance to enable them to live?

Mr. President, if the Calhoun report had gone into reports of the Social Security Board itself, it could have found unlimited statistics indicating that 80 percent of these unfortunate people have no other income from investments of any kind after they are retired. They would have found that 80 percent have an insufficient amount for any decent living, even when added to their social security benefits.

Now let us read these figures, which should strike at any man's heart with the slight kindness or Christian principles in it. I read from the Social Security Bulletin of July, 1943, the top of page 4. This is a report on the financial condition of many thousands of beneficiaries under old-age insurance who were interviewed in Baltimore, St. Louis, Philadelphia, and Los Angeles.

I have carefully examined this bulletin and I think it is a very fine piece of work. Incidentally Mr. President, it agrees very much with polls taken in the investigation I made in California, and, to anticipate what it says, it is to the effect that 20 percent had hardly any income at all and 80 percent had virtually nothing. I will read the statement and then it will be plain:

> Only a small proportion in each survey appeared to have sources of income which could be expected to provide lifelong security. For example, slightly less than one-fifth of the male beneficiary groups had incomes of $600 or more which were derived solely from old-age and survivors insurance benefit plus retirement pay, private annuity, veterans' pension, or yield on investments or savings.

It should be noted that they speak of the male beneficiary groups, and in the definition that includes the wives. What the statement I have just read means is that less than 20 percent of these beneficiaries, with all their income, including old-age insurance, had as much as $50 a month, and in one-third of the cases the wife was receiving something, too, and the other 80 percent ranged from $50 a month down to $10 a month.

We have also another most interesting report from the Social Security Board. The Board interviewed recipients in middle-sized cities in Ohio, and in St. Louis, to determine the permanent money income of beneficiaries groups in addition to benefits, and this is what the results show. Forty percent of those interviewed had no source of income except their benefits. This does not include old-age assistance. Of course, they were entitled to aid and many of them did receive old-age assistance as a supplement but outside of that they had nothing. Thirty-seven percent had less than $25 a month. So there, Mr. President, is the dismal figure—40 percent with not 1 cent of their own private income and almost 40 percent with less than $25 a month.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOWNEY. I yield.

Mr. WILLIS. I have been interested in what the Senator has been saying as to the amount these people are now receiving. What is the Senator's estimate of what a person over 60 years of age would receive under this plan, with 3 percent gross income tax, with certain exemptions, and cost of administration, and then the remainder to be divided per capita?

Mr. DOWNEY. I would expect that with our present national income it would give an individual from $75 to $90 a month.

Mr. WILLIS. On what does the Senator base those figures?

Mr. DOWNEY. They are based on statistics we have secured, I will say to the Senator. I would also say that the most valuable statistics we have are from the State of Indiana. As the Senator knows, Indiana has a partial gross income tax, and the results which the State of Indiana has developed are most interesting. In California we believe it should be $75 a month for one individual and $125 a month for two. That is the minimum amount on which any individual or couple can live in human decency.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOWNEY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. CORDON. Does the Senator have any figures as to the relationship between the annual amount of transactions to which the proposed tax would be applied and the annual business of the country which, we understand, now is around $150,000,000,000 a year?

Mr. DOWNEY. I think it is generally thought that for every dollar of net income, the total of which is approximately $150,000,000,000, there would probably be $3, $3.50 or $4 of gross income.

Mr. CORDON. The gross income is the taxable amount under the Senator's proposed amendment?

Mr. DOWNEY. Yes.

As I have already stated, the Calhoun report, judging by the standard of old-age assistance, reached the conclusion that 9 out of 10 of these contributors had some other source of income than the old-age insurance benefits. When I dug through the tables in the Calhoun report I found that they considered even the sum of $5 a month, if given by a child, as the source of income. If the children were farmers' children and brought in $5 worth of groceries, that was considered. If they had even a room in the barn or outdoors or some other building outside the home, that was considered a resource. As a matter of fact, in one of the reports from which I have been reading the representatives of the Social Security Board interviewed unfortunate people trying to live on $10, $20, or $30 a month to try to find out what other sources of income they had, and how they could live at all on those amounts. I simply wish to read to the Senate some of these facts dredged up out of the depths of misery, despair, and anguish, and then ask if Senators are proud that they are Americans. In the cases I am going to read will be found the support of the Calhoun report that these unfortunate people, attempting to live on $20, $30, or $40 a month had other sources of support. Let us see the tragic character of them.

Mr. and Mrs. G. would like assistance in getting clothes, as their monthly benefit check of $31.65 is used entirely for rent ($12 a month) and food, leaving them nothing for clothes, medical care or miscellaneous items. They bought what they could and when the money was gone they went without.

Those two people, Mr. President, count on second- and third-hand clothing received through charity as an additional source of income. That is a resource, according to the social-work concept—a resource, Mr. President, in a country which has just demonstrated its ability to fight a global war and not only to turn out what we needed for our own vast Army but for those of our allies.

Mr. President, when I was before the Finance Committee I recited four lines from the great philosopher and poet Pope, and the majority leader corrected me in the use of one word. What I quoted is as follows:

Vice is a monster of so frightful mien,
As to be hated needs but to be seen;
Yet seen too oft, familiar with her face,
We first endure, then pity, then embrace.

That, Mr. President, is the position of the Social Security Administration. It has looked at this frightful condition of poverty and misery for so long that it now embraces it as an inevitable fact when all the circumstances of our national life demonstrate how much our social vision lags behind our ability to banish poverty if we will only do so. Mr. President, it is beyond my understanding—I believe it is beyond human understanding—how social security experts could sit around a table and carry on investigations to find out how a decent man and woman in America past 65 years of age could live on $31.65, and then say they had other sources of income because they could go to some charity and get some second- or third-rate clothing. Is that the kind of thing we have to do in rich, fertile America? The savages do not do it.

I now read another case:

The only income of the beneficiary, an unmarried man, was his insurance benefit. He had lived with his son, daughter-in-law, and two grandchildren for a long time, and after retirement he turned over his entire income to his son.

Later it appeared that this entire income is $18.75 a month.

His son's annual income was $1,820. The beneficiary felt that his monthly benefit of $17.50 helped, and doubted that without it his son would have been willing to support him.

Mr. President, this particular case exemplifies a condition of tragedy in most of the homes of America. One-half our unfortunate people in their later years are dependent upon their children. It may be said "That is perfectly decent and proper. If the parents cannot support themselves in their old age, let the children do it."

Yes, Mr. President, and here is a typical case which I have read. The average worker in the United States supporting one or two or three parents of himself and his wife is making $150 a month. He has two to three children, and his wife, living in a two-bedroom house. Just think of the tragedy and the anguish and the unhappiness of bringing into an already overcrowded house one or two elderly parents. Just think of children trying to get any happiness for themselves, when their parents bring one or two elderly persons into the two-bedroom house, which the man has to keep up on $150 a month, and also support all his dependents. That is the kind of additional resource that the Social Security Board relies upon to show that this plan will work out. I can imagine the investigator trying to justify his use of this miserable $18.75 as an additional resource. He may say, "But do you not believe your son would take you in if you did not have that additional resource?" The poor old gentleman would perhaps say, "Well, maybe he would. Maybe in the kindness of his heart he would, yes."

Mr. President, if a man is well-to-do, or a wealthy man, if he has a large or spacious house, with servants, he can take care of his parents without any trouble. But if he is a man with an income insufficient to support his own children and wife, living in a small house, to be burdened with one or more parents creates a condition which to my mind is little short of tragedy.

Let us read another of these miserable, tragic statements dredged out of the depths.

Mr. and Mrs. Y's chief source of income was $602 a year from roomers, but rent took $360 of this amount. The monthly benefit amounted to $288 a year. Unemployment compensation payments of $171 paid for the winter's coal.

I should like to have the attention of Senators to this:

Mrs. Y remarked that she had had to pawn her wedding ring and other jewelry for coal prior to the receipt of unemployment compensation. They had previously cashed in two insurance policies.

Yes, Mr. President, in the wedding ring—I suppose treasured for 40 or 50 years—the woman found another resource of two or three dollars with which to eke out her existence. I sometimes think that men of great wealth and large income in some way lack the penetrating imagination to understand the misery, the humiliation, and the degradation of people trying to live on $20, $30, or $40 a month. Apparently the greater incomes men have the less they can understand destitution and degradation. I say to any Senator who is interested in the preservation of capitalism and free enterprise that he had best be about it to see that some decent, humane, sufficient social-dividend plan is worked out so that retired workers, who do our jobs for us, will not be cast into insecurity and degradation when their life's work is done and they can do no more work.

Here is another example of a common tragedy:

Mr. and Mrs. S. reported income during the survey year as follows: $277 from wages, $240 from unemployment compensation, and $123 from insurance benefit. Their daughter, who lived with them, earned $1,373. She expected to marry soon and move from the household. Mr. and Mrs. S. had no assets and owed $257. They did not know how they would manage, as they could not qualify for old-age assistance because of the State residence requirements.

That case is typical of hundreds of thousands, and perhaps millions of cases today in America. Aged parents are being supported by a daughter or son who is making $125, $150, or $200 a month. The son or daughter must choose between the tragedy of leaving the parents to destitution and giving up marriage. But do we care? Apparently not. We are willing to let millions of young women take the burden of supporting their parents, even though that burden forbids the most priceless experience of any woman, namely, marriage. Many of the reports show such a condition. The son or daughter wishes to marry and is unable to do so because his small income is supporting his parents.

Here is another example:

Mr. and Mr. T. were in desperate financial straits. Mr. T. had earned good wages, but had been able to save nothing. He borrowed $400 from a finance company during the survey year, on which he had to make monthly payments of $39.20, including $5 interest. Their income during the survey year was $72 from unemployment compensation, $150 from a son outside the household, and $737 from monthly benefit. There were no assets. The son was captured at Corregidor.

Mr. and Mrs. W. withdrew $500 from their savings during the survey year, leaving a balance of $400. They owned their home, valued at $1,857. Their income during the year was $480, all but $13 of which was derived from insurance benefit. The $13 represented interest paid on their savings account. Two hundred dollars of their savings was used for doctor and dentist bills, as Mr. W. required constant medical care because of tuberculosis. The balance of the savings was used to pay the taxes and to meet current expenses.

Mr. and Mrs. A. depleted their assets substantially during the survey year. Their income, derived from noncovered employment, assets, and insurance benefit, totaled $420. Mr. A. had sold some property several years earlier for which he received $37.50 a month. This money, in addition to cash savings of $720, was spent to meet living expenses. When their cash assets are depleted to the point where they are eligible for old-age assistance, they plan to apply. The big fear of Mr. and Mrs. A. was that taxes and upkeep on their home could not be paid out of their small monthly income.

Mr. and Mrs. B. owned their home, valued at $3,000. This was their only asset. Their income during the survey year was $126 from earnings from employment, and $180 from insurance benefit. Their son, who lived with them, paid $60 a month toward household expenses. He had been drafted and expected to leave soon. Mr. and Mrs. B. then planned to apply for old-age assistance. The passage of the Servicemen's Dependents Allowance Act may have made their application for old-age assistance unnecessary.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. DOWNEY. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. Does the Senator know that up until a short time ago, if one of those aged people did some work on the side and earned enough to bring his income up to a little more than the amount required to make him liable for payment of income tax, the calculation of the income tax included the old-age pension?

Mr. DOWNEY. I had not supposed that our Government was so parsimonious. The Senator has brought out a most interesting fact, and I appreciate his contribution.

Mr. LANGER. I took the question up with the Bureau of Internal Revenue, and a ruling was issued to the effect that income tax calculations should not include old-age pensions, but up to that time they were included.

Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for the purpose of suggesting the absence of a quorum?

Mr. DOWNEY. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] is recognized.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. DOWNEY. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Let me say, first of all, that earlier in the day I offered an amendment from the floor, and the able chairman of the Finance Committee accepted it, and it was adopted. It appears on page 26, in line 20, and by the amendment we struck out the word "two" and inserted the word "five."

However, since that was done, I have discussed the matter with representatives of the Social Security Board, and they have pointed out that due to subsequent changes in the language of the original act, the amendment would not do what was intended to be done. Furthermore, they have assured me that the protection to the families of veterans in regard to the filing of claims under this measure is taken care of by a provision at another place.

So, Mr. President, under those circumstances, at their request, I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the amendment was adopted earlier in the day be reconsidered and then I shall withdraw the amendment, and thereby restore the word "two" at the point indicated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? Without objection, the vote by which the amendment on page 26, in line 20, was adopted is reconsidered, and the amendment is before the Senate.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I now withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, at this point I should like to address a question to the able chairman of the Finance Committee, regarding a matter in which the unemployment authorities in the State of California are greatly interested. I understand that one feature of the bill under discussion recently proposes to pay reconversion unemployment benefits to seamen performing services on vessels operated by the War Shipping Administration through general agents. Although I understand that the War Shipping Administration has taken the position that such seamen are employees of the Federal Government, the Attorney General of California in an opinion issued December 17, 1943, under No. NS 5261 held that such seamen were employees of the general agents in California, rather than employees of the Federal Government, and that such general agents were required to report such employment and to play the California unemployment tax upon such wages. My question is this, Is not it the intent of Congress in passing this bill to provide these benefits throughout the United States to such seamen as were employed on those War Shipping Administration vessels operated through such general agents, and in the event this bill is enacted into law, would not the Federal Security Administrator in respect to the State of California pay for the reconversion benefits provided for in section 306 of the bill?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, section 1205 of the bill, starting near the bottom of page 18, reads in part as follows:

Each State shall be entitled to be paid by the United States an amount equal to the additional cost to the State of payments of compensation made under and in accordance with an agreement under this title, which would not have been incurred by the State but for the agreement.

I would say that it is undoubtedly the theory of the bill that the employees in the employ of the general agent of the War Shipping Administration were employees of the Federal Government, and that the Federal Government would, under the bill, assume responsibility for the payments on the account of such workers, and that none of the States, including California, would be expected to make payments of benefits out of their own compensation fund.

I do not know that I quite understand the situation. I should like to make this point very clear. If the State of California has, in fact, collected from the general agent payments for and on account of the employees of the general agent, and the State of California retains the sums of money so paid, I would not think that the State of California would have the right to expect the Federal Government to reimburse it because, in effect, it would be double payment. But if the State of California should return the money to the general agent, or the general agent had not, in fact, paid it, it is undoubtedly the intent of this bill to put the employees of the general agent on the basis of Federal employees, and the Government itself becomes responsible for the payment.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I thank the Senator from Georgia for his explanation. It will clarify an important issue in the minds of the people of California. So far as I am aware, all other States, in dealing with this problem, have considered such seamen to be employees of the Federal Government, and it has always seemed fair that in providing for these payments the proposed program should operate in the same way in all States of the Union.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, I have already occupied the floor for some time. I desire to conclude my remarks as rapidly as possible, and therefore if it suits my colleagues I would prefer not to be interrupted during the remainder of my remarks.

Mr. President, I wish to say to all my colleagues that if, in what I have already said, I have seemed at times too emotional and too vehement, I ask their pardon.

I have no doubt that if he once fully understands the difficulties in the present pension plan, each Senator will be willing, sincerely, and immediately to address himself to a solution of our difficulties.

Mr. President, when the old-age insurance law was first being considered by the Finance Committee, several of the Senators were most reluctant to accept it. Among these was the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] who repeatedly cautioned that the prophecies of its sponsors as to how it would work out were much too optimistic and doomed to failure. It is most unfortunate that the committee did not more carefully scrutinize the questions raised by the Senator concerning certain aspects of the insurance measure, for his discriminating judgment in emphasizing coming difficulties has been all too well demonstrated.

On this subject, as on all others which involve the welfare of the masses of our people, the Senator from Wisconsin has been consistently on the side of those whose daily bread is earned by daily toil; whose weekly pay envelopes are never fat enough to buy more than the necessities of a decent living and who inevitably must face a jobless retirement, living at the mercy of society itself.

The distinguished Senator from Wisconsin was a member of the Special Committee to Investigate the Old-Age Pension System, of which I had the honor to serve as chairman. From our association on that committee I know the disappointment which the Senator must share with me that the Congress should have been so negligent in dealing with the economic distress of our senior citizens.

While I am speaking of the attitude toward pensions of the Senator from Wisconsin, I should like to take the opportunity to pay him a tribute for his dynamic and effective leadership in bringing through to a successful conclusion the congressional reorganization plan. Throughout the Nation's press for the past several days there have appeared hundreds of editorials in high praise of this measure. With its passage, this Congress turned its back upon a large part of its cumbersome committee system and its antiquated procedures—some of which go back almost to the founding of the Republic.

Great credit belongs to all those who actively sponsored and worked this measure through the many legislative difficulties that confronted it, but there can be no doubt that the major part of the credit belongs to the distinguished senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] who served from its inception as chairman of the Special Committee on the Organization of Congress. Although the Senator has already had a long and illustrious career in the Senate, he is still young and is destined, I am sure, to render even greater service to his State and Nation.

Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] and the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR] have joined with me in sponsoring an amendment to the pending bill in the nature of a substitute, by which the Townsend plan would be embodied in the bill.

For well over a decade Dr. Francis E. Townsend has been the great leader of millions of our aged citizens. In him millions of our elder citizens who have been subjected to the finely spun cruelties of social workers have found some hope for a dignified and comfortable retirement when working days are over.

Both Senators who have joined with me in this bill have long and fervently been committed to the pension cause, and I am most happy to be associated with them in this amendment.

As perhaps every other Senator knows, the Townsend plan would reduce to 60 years the age at which persons would receive pensions, it would eliminate the means test, provide a social dividend, by the levy of a gross income tax payable monthly, the proceeds of which would be disbursed equally to the beneficiaries monthly.

The Townsend plan will cost money, yes, but when we contrast the few billions which it might entail with the national income we can expect next year—around $150,000,000,000—we see the expenditure in its true perspective. Measured against our resources, it is a negligible amount. Measured against our older citizens' needs, it is even more negligible. To give only this much is barely fair; to give less would be folly. Our intention, I believe, is not to distribute penury. It is to share abundance.

No one doubts by this time, I feel sure, the capacity of our farms and factories to produce that abundance. We have demonstrated it in war; we are proceeding to demonstrate it in peace. Our real question has been, and will be again, how to distribute our purchasing power in such a way as to prevent the accumulation of excess savings and to provide a steady market for all our goods and services. An adequate Federal program of pensions is an instrument to that end. To some it may seem an expensive instrument to buy. I think they are wholly wrong for we can be well assured that it will pay for itself in the end, many times over.

Nevertheless, there will be many in the Senate, I have no doubt, as there are in the House, who will raise shocked eyebrows at even the suggestion of the Townsend program. They number not merely those who have never acknowledged the need of any social security system, who affect to believe that anyone of moderate virtue and moderate ability can save enough to support a serene old age, and who are content that those who fail should die in poverty. They number also those politicians who approve of a Government security program in principle, but who shut their minds to the brutal facts of its operation. They find it more comfortable to assume that passage of the Social Security Act ended the problem of the indigent aged; they ignore the blatant reality that it has only made poverty official.

Let us get the shameful data out in the open, where they belong. Let us strip aside the propaganda by which the Social Security Board has concealed the facts showing the total failure of the insurance scheme.

First. How many senior citizens have we? About 15,000,000 men and women over 60 years of age; about 10,240,000 over 65.

Second. How many of these are usually able to support themselves by their earnings? According to the Social Security Board, only 19 percent of those over 60; only 12 percent of those over 65.

Third. How many of them have usually been able to save enough to retire independently? In 1937 the Social Security Board found that of an average group of 1,000 Americans over 65, only 128 had current earnings, only 150 had any savings at all, and only 73 had public or private pensions, while 203 were depending wholly or in part on private or public charity, and 446 were living on the handouts of friends and relatives or just starving slowly. Again, in 1942, another Social Security investigation of 2,571 families receiving old-age insurance benefits showed that less than a fifth of the male beneficiaries and their wives had total incomes from all sources—including their old-age insurance payments—of more than $50 a month. And the rest had anywhere from $50 down to $10 monthly.

Fourth. Have not the high wages of wartime permitted most people to make substantial savings toward their retirement? A study by the Federal Reserve Board in 1945 shows that 17 percent of the families who were investigated were going into debt, 13 percent were not saving anything at all, and 40 percent had managed to put by an average of only $40 worth of Government bonds, savings deposits, and demand deposits. It is tempting for the well-to-do to assume that these low savings can be attributed to spendthriftiness and improvidence. The temptation should be resisted. Remember that 80 percent of our urban workers earn less than $200 a month. How much can a city family save on that?

Fifth. How much would our workers have to have in order to retire on their investments? We have about 75,000,000 adult citizens. Suppose that just half of them—37,500,000 saved enough to return to each of them an annual income of $1,000 at 4 percent. That would imply a debt structure of $937,500,000,000. And the debt structure of the whole country in 1940, private, corporate, and banking, for young and for old was only about $200,000,000,000. Of course, war indebtedness has increased this by another $300,000,000,000. But who owns this? As the above Federal Reserve report shows, 20 percent of our savers own 75 percent of our savings.

Sixth. Granted that most of our people can neither earn a living after 60 or 65, nor have savings to retire on, is it not true that at least most of them are generally covered by the old-age insurance provision of the Social Security Act? It is not true. As the special committee of the Senate declared in its 1941 report:

> Our present provisions for old-age insurance and assistance have tragically failed to reach more than a small fraction of our retired workers. Of the 14,000,000 people now above age 60, nearly 12,000,000 remain outside the scope of the present program.

Seventh. But certainly those who are covered by the Social Security Act are well provided for; are they not? It depends on the criteria. Many of the beneficiaries are doing about as well as starving Europeans. In terms of what Americans have come to regard as decent, they are faring miserably indeed.

Eighth. Just what is the average benefit paid to a retired worker under the insurance provisions? According to the latest compiled figures, the average single male beneficiary is getting $24 per month. That comes to less than $6 a week.

Ninth. What about the old-age assistance payments? In September 1945 they averaged $30.17 per month for the whole country. In June of that year the three lowest States—Georgia, Kentucky, and North Carolina—were paying $11.42, $11.46, and $12.50, respectively.

Tenth. Do these old-age insurance benefits and old-age assistance payments bear any relation to (a) the minimum cost of keeping body and soul together; (b) the fraction of the national income which we could afford to set aside for our retired workers; or (c) the principles of Christianity we pretend to uphold? Answer to all three questions: None whatever.

Yet, there are men administering this program so blind to the power of our industrial plant, so smug in their isolation from the human struggle that with straight faces they can assert that any larger pensions and allowances may weaken the moral fiber of our people by making life too easy and too secure. No man could speak those complacent and fatuous words who had ever eaten the bitter bread of poverty; none but the deluded could suggest that the prospect of decent security after 65 could debauch the character of our youth or of the American workingman. It has always been the precious privilege of the rich to worry over the morals of the unfortunates; this right should not be usurped by Government officials.

What are we to do? It seems to me that we have two broad choices: To continue to tinker with the present Social Security Act, as we are now doing, or to scrap it and build afresh. The present pension laws are futile, cruel, and worthless—a sham and an abomination. I hope the day is not far distant when we will forever obliterate them and enact a truly sound and sensible program fitted both to our resources and to our responsibilities.

Such a program would rest upon two main pillars: The concept of tax-as-you-go, and the concept of social dividends. It would do away with the phony actuarial system beloved by the Federal Security Agency's bureaucrats; it would eliminate the odious means test. It would provide for ample monthly benefits, and it would provide them for all retired citizens—not just that fraction of the population which the Federal Security Agency has found it administratively feasible, under its complex and cumbersome scheme, to cover. It would found its taxation upon the broad, dependable base of our national gross income. It would give more to more people; give it simply and less expensively; give it without the humiliation which now shadows Government assistance; in effect, give it sufficiently, decently, and fairly as contemplated in the Townsend plan.

Cost: To many people, the bugbear of any proposal to alter or replace the Social Security Act is the question of cost. The hobgoblins of congressional profligacy and Federal bankruptcy prey upon their imaginations. That is natural. But it is not realistic.

For it has become by now a truism among all reputable economists that the underlying problem of our modern American economy is that of savings: the problem of how to prevent our national savings from swelling higher than our year-to-year capacity to invest them. Conversely, our problem is how to maintain a purchasing power in the hands of our consuming public adequate to take off the flood of goods streaming from our productive plant.

A full-scale pension plan is one major answer to this double problem. By providing security for everyone's old age, it reduces the urge to save—and the collective tendency to save more than our businesses can invest. By distributing purchasing power to groups formerly impoverished, it puts strong underpinnings beneath the demand for consumers goods and significantly lessens the danger of mounting inventories and subsequent "recession."

The cost of a decent security program must be measured against this crucial role which pensions can play in maintaining the equilibrium of our economy. It must also be measured against the income which we as a nation can expect to enjoy.

In 1947, it is estimated, our national income will approximate $150,000,000,000. A reasonably generous, comprehensive pension program of the sort I have outlined would cost about $10,000,000,000—or about 6 percent of our national income. Our senior citizens over 60 comprise about 10 percent of the population. Is it unsound or unjust to set aside 6 percent of our income for 10 percent of our people?

Only those can think so who are so deeply imbued with the niggardly philosophy of the Social Security Act that they would rather preserve an inadequate, pinch-penny program which starves and humiliates millions than to run the risk of paying a few thousand exceptional elderly people a little more money than they need. Only those can think so who are frightened by abundance, who have no conception of the meaning of social dividends in terms of purchasing power. Only those can think so who imagine that they can tackle the problem of excess savings and inadequate consumer demand through disbursing pensions of $10 or $20 or $30 a month. These are amounts suited to the age of the wheelbarrow, not the steam shovel. In our era of Aladdin-like production in all fields—industry, commerce, agriculture—the notion of stemming the onrush of a business crisis with such puny sums is as pathetic as that of any army defending itself with butterfly nets against a shower of atomic bombs.

I ask the Senate: Will we never be able to apply mathematical rules to our economic thinking? Will we never be able to realize that to the extent that some men cannot buy, other men cannot work? Will we never act upon the certainty that depleted purchasing power and underconsumption will necessarily build and maintain armies of unemployed? Will we never decide to distribute a social buying power sufficient to consume the products that would so bountifully flow from general employment?

Certainly, we never can produce to full capacity, never abolish unemployment, never relieve penury under the philosophy of poverty that imbues the Social Security Act. So long as its meager bounties are the chief purchasing power of the retired workers of America, thus long must they despair, thus long unemployment must remain a menace, thus long must all society be afflicted with insecurity.

The Townsend plan which I am offering as an amendment to the pending measure holds out an offer of assistance and security to every group. To labor, first, for it will shift a large share of the pension costs from its back to the financially stronger shoulders of the big income class. To many a burdened family, for it will lift from it the support of unfortunate parents no longer able to finance themselves. To youth, for by enabling hundreds of thousands of senior citizens to retire each year, it will open up as many jobs for newcomers upon the employment market. To businessmen, for though individually they may pay more and get a bit less in pensions, the plan's effect of reducing the excess savings of all age groups and of stimulating the buyer power of the senior citizenry will give such a boost to the economy as will more than compensate in rising profits for any personal tax losses.

Last, and most pertinently, to the older partners of our Nation, the plan promises their heart's wish—dignity and security. Neither the stigma of charity nor the aroma of poverty will surround their pensions. The Government will finally have recognized that it was they who by honest sweat built the cities, the factories, the highways, the utilities, by virtue of which the rest of us now live, and it is they who are entitled to ample social dividends from the vast wealth they helped to create.

FEDERAL SECURITY AGENCY,
SOCIAL SECURITY BOARD,
Washington, D. C., July 9, 1946.

Hon. SHERIDAN DOWNEY,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR DOWNEY: We are furnishing herewith replies to three of the questions among the nine which Mr. Bowie of your office left with Mr. Fisher July 8.

1. Among workers who have at any time earned wage credits under old-age and survivors insurance, what proportion has retired from the labor force with no eligibility for primary benefit?

It is difficult to furnish a definitive reply to this question because retirement from the labor force is not necessarily a permanent condition for many persons. This lack of permanency is particularly true for women, many of whom leave the labor force on marriage but reenter it at a later date because of the husband's death or for other reasons. Under conditions of acute labor shortages, such as we experienced during the war, many persons reentered the labor force who had thought of themselves as retired for all practical purposes.

An approximation of the magnitudes you are seeking may be attempted, however, from the insured status of persons 65 years and over with wage credits. The Bureau of Old-Age and Survivors Insurance estimates that on January 1, 1946, there were 2,489,000 living persons 65 years and over who had earned some wage credits since January 1, 1937, distributed by insurance status as follows:

	Number	Percent
Total	2,489,000	100
Not fully insured	1,063,000	43
Fully insured	1,426,000	57
Primary beneficiaries	611,000	25
In current-payment status	518,000	21
In deferred or conditional payment status	93,000	4
Potential primary beneficiaries	815,000	33

It should be pointed out that the 1,063,000 persons who lacked fully insured status included an unknown number of workers still in the labor force, some of them in covered employment, who might in time acquire fully insured status. Not all of them had retired from the labor force. The 57 percent with fully insured status should be viewed, therefore, as a minimum estimate of the proportion who might eventually become eligible for primary benefit.

2. What is the distribution of primary benefits, by size of benefit, for the latest available date?

The distribution of primary benefits in force on December 31, 1945, follows:

Total number	610,842
Percent	100.0
$10	8.3
$10.01–$14.99	9.4
$15–$19.99	9.6
$20–$24.99	28.4
$25–$29.99	21.4
$30–$34.99	12.3
$35–$39.99	7.0
$40–$44.99	3.6

The maximum primary benefit possible in 1945 under the act was $43.60.

The Board believes that since old-age and survivors insurance is a family benefit program, somewhat more significance attaches to a distribution by size of family benefit (primary plus supplementary in this instance) than by size of primary benefit only. We therefore give below a distribution of family benefits in force on December 31, 1945, for families containing a primary beneficiary.

	Primary only		Primary and wife	Primary and 1 child
	Male	Female
Total number	338,500	78,400	181,100	8,300
Percent	100.0	100.0	100.0	100.0
$10.00	7.7	15.7
$10.01–$14.99	9.0	15.5
$15.00–$19.99	9.3	15.2	11.0	13.2
$20.00–$24.99	27.5	36.6	5.3	6.5
$25.00–$29.99	22.4	11.6	5.3	6.5
$30.00–$34.99	13.1	3.5	17.0	19.7
$35.00–$39.99	6.4	1.2	18.1	18.6

$60.00–$64.99			5.6	3.1
$65.00–$69.99			[2] 6	[2] 7

[1] $43.60 maximum possible in 1945.
[2] $65.40 maximum possible in 1945.

3. What are the latest figures on the number of persons in the United States aged 60 years and over?

The latest estimates released by the Bureau of the Census are for July 1, 1945 (series P-46, No. 2):

Total	15,416,576
Men	7,528,690
Women	7,887,886

We hope to have replies to additional questions ready for you later in the week.

Sincerely yours,

I. S. FALK,
Director.

A. PERMANENT MONEY INCOME OF BENEFICIARY GROUPS IN ADDITION TO BENEFITS: PERCENTAGE DISTRIBUTION BY ANNUAL MONEY INCOME FROM PERMANENT ECONOMIC SOURCES IN ADDITION TO BENEFITS. MEAN AND MEDIAN INCOME

NOTE.—From 33 to 66 percent of the different types of beneficiary groups in the two surveys reported receiving no cash income from permanent economic sources such as assets, retirement pay, veterans' pensions, and private annuities, other than old-age and survivors insurance benefits. The amount derived from these economic sources indicates how much the beneficiaries could have counted upon as permanent cash income if they had not received insurance benefits.

Income from permanent economic sources other than old-age and survivors insurance benefits was frequently low; half of each of the different types of male primary beneficiary groups reported such income amounting to not more than $221 in Ohio and $400 in St. Louis. Only 6 to 8 percent of the nonmarried men and 15 to 22 percent of the two types of married men reported $600 or more. Female primary beneficiaries, aged widows, and widows with entitled children had less cash income from such sources than the men beneficiaries. The median incomes of these groups ranged from $20 to $120; only 1 to 8 percent received as much as $600.

Type of beneficiary group and money income from permanent economic sources in addition to benefits	Percent of beneficiary groups with specified income from permanent economic sources in addition to benefits
	Ohio middle-sized cities	St. Louis resurvey
Male primary beneficiaries, total	100.0	100.0

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, there is one brief amendment which the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HUFFMAN] wishes to present at this time. I am willing to accept the amendment. It simply treats Alaska and Hawaii as States under this measure.

Mr. HUFFMAN. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 42, after line 10, it is proposed to strike out all down to and including line 22, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

(1) In the case of a State the per capita income of which is equal to or greater than the per capita income of the continental United States, the Federal percentage shall be 50 percent and the State percentage 50 percent; and in the cases of Alaska and Hawaii, until satisfactory data concerning average per capita income for three successive years have become available from the Department of Congress, the Federal percentage shall be 50 percent and the State percentage should be 50 percent.

(2) In the case of a State per capita income of which is not more than 66⅔ percent of the per capita income of the continental United States, the Federal percentage shall be 66⅔ percent, and the State percentage shall be 33⅓ percent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HUFFMAN].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further amendments to be offered, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments, and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read for a third time.

The bill (H. R. 7037) was read the third time and passed.

COMPENSATION OF EMPLOYEES OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA NURSERIES

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, I desire to ask unanimous consent to have a couple of small bills affecting the District of Columbia taken up and passed. They are emergency measures.

House bill 8716 was passed and went to conference, and the President delayed signing it, so the employees of the nurseries of the District of Columbia worked 16 days without any compensation. We have already appropriated the money, and the bill I am now introducing is designed to give the Welfare Board authority to pay for the 16 days which elapsed from the time the bill passed to the time it was signed by the President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the bill by title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 7126) to amend section 2 of the act of July 16, 1946 (Public Law 514, 79th Cong.), relating to the establishment and operation in the District of Columbia of nurseries and nursery schools, so as to permit payment of compensation for services rendered after June 30, 1946, and prior to the enactment of such act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FIREBOAT FOR DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, I ask unanimous consent to report favorably without amendment the bill (S. 2498) to provide for fire protection of Government and private property in and contiguous to the waters of the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be received and placed on the calendar.

Mr. BILBO. The District Commissioners, Mr. President, sent a special message to me earlier today and asked me to have the bill reported from the committee for immediate passage, because of its emergency nature. The bill provides for the transfer of a fireboat by the Secretary of the Navy, to the Government of the District of Columbia for the protection of all Government and private property in and contiguous to the waters of the District of Columbia. The bill does not involve any expenditure. It simply provides authority to the Secretary of the Navy to make the transfer.

Mr. WHITE. Is the Senator introducing the bill now?

Mr. BILBO. It is a bill which has already been introduced, and the Committee on the District of Columbia has reported it favorably.

Mr. WHITE. Has the bill been considered by the committee?

Mr. BILBO. The committee has reported it.

Mr. WHITE. When did this situation become so emergent?

Mr. BILBO. It is necessary to get the bill, which is a Senate bill, to the House before Congress adjourns. The transfer of this boat to the District government will afford protection to Government and private property contiguous to the waters of the District of Columbia.

Mr. WHITE. When did this situation arise?

Mr. BILBO. A special message came to me from the District Commissioners about an hour ago.

Mr. WHITE. And the Senator is introducing the bill today?

Mr. BILBO. No; the bill was introduced some time ago and has been reported, and I now ask for its consideration and passage.

Mr. WHITE. The bill has not been referred to the committee yet, has it?

Mr. BILBO. Yes; the committee has passed on it. I have polled the committee.

Mr. WHITE. That is not the question. It has not yet been referred to the committee, has it?

Mr. BILBO. It was referred to the committee, and I polled the committee, and the committee members understand it and have agreed to have the bill reported, because it is an emergency matter.

Mr. WHITE. When did it become emergent, this afternoon?

Mr. BILBO. It has been emergent for some time. It will save the District of Columbia about $10,000 a year and give protection to Government property and private property.

Mr. WHITE. Then it has been emergent for a month, is that it?

Mr. BILBO. I presume so, It is the first time the emergency has been brought to my attention. I do not know how long it has been emergent.

Mr. WHITE. The Senator does not know anything about the bill?

Mr. BILBO. I know that it will save the taxpayers about $10,000.

Mr. WHITE. It seems to me that without justification the Senator is really undertaking to short-cut every rule of the Senate in respect to the consideration of measures.

Mr. BILBO. My information is that when a situation is urgent, consideration can be given by unanimous consent.

Mr. WHITE. The Senator has not received unanimous consent yet.

Mr. BILBO. I have asked for it. I thought I had received it.

Mr. WHITE. Having told the Senator what I think about the procedure, I shall not object.

Mr. BILBO. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 2498) to provide for fire protection of Government and private property in and contiguous to the waters of the District of Columbia, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to provide for fire protection of all Government and private property in and contiguous to the waters of the District of Columbia, the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to transfer, without exchange of funds, a fireboat of the YBT-225 type, excess to the Navy's needs, to the government of the District of Columbia, and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to accept, operate, and maintain such fireboat, and to dispose of the obsolete fireboat now in their possession.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Maurer, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment, the bill (S. 2020) granting a right-of-way at a revised location to the West Shore Railroad Co., the New York Central Railroad Co., lessee, across a portion of the military reservation at West Point.

The message notified the Senate that Mr. DURHAM, Mr. SIKES, and Mr. CLASON had been appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. AWARD OF SPECIAL MEDAL TO GENERAL OF THE ARMIES JOHN J. PERSHING

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, yesterday the Senate passed House bill 3944. It was a bill to award a special medal for Gen. John J. Pershing. In that bill both in the House and in the Senate the words "at the Bureau of the Mint" were left out. It is customary that such medals be struck off at the mint, and I am sure that that is where this medal will be made. At the request of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] I have made this statement.

PRINTING OF EDITORIALS ON PEARL HARBOR REPORT

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, last week the Senator from Illinois asked unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD a series of editorials dealing directly with the Pearl Harbor report. I did not submit the editorials one by one. I submitted them as a group and asked that they be printed in the RECORD.

I now raise the parliamentary inquiry as to whether the Senator from Illinois can submit editorials as a group after obtaining permission from the Senate to do so, or will I have to submit them one at a time so as to avoid having the Public Printer advise me that I am violating rule No. 10 of the Joint Committee on Printing?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will say that it all depends on the nature of the request made by the Senator from Illinois. If the Senator requested that they be printed as a group, the Senate can give its consent thereto. How did the Senator submit the editorials?

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I should like to say that I believe that the difficulty is that the group of editorials in all amounted to more than two printed pages in the RECORD. If they did, the Senator was required to have an estimate of the cost made, and state the cost to the Senate. Then he could receive permission from the Senate to have the editorials printed in the RECORD. If they were submitted separately, at different times, of course, they would not take up two pages.

Mr. LUCAS. The point I make is this: Am I entitled to stand here and submit one editorial after another, identifying each editorial, and have them printed in the RECORD one by one, even though they occupy six pages of the RECORD, without having to submit an estimate of cost?

Mr. HAYDEN. The Senator could take up more than two pages of the RECORD by obtaining unanimous consent separately to print each individual editorial, or he could submit them altogether, abide by the rule, and have an estimate of cost made and state the cost to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It all depends upon the length of each editorial. If the editorial amounts to more than two printed pages of the RECORD, an estimate of cost must be submitted.

Mr. LUCAS. There is no editorial among those I have in my hand which amounts to as much as two pages. But I wish to submit a series of editorials, and in all they will be more than two pages in length.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then an estimate of the cost should be submitted.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I do not dislike to disagree with the distinguished President pro tempore, but I think his ruling is wrong.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can appeal from the ruling if he desires.

Mr. LUCAS. No; I shall not do so.

Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial entitled "The Pearl Harbor Report," published in the Chicago Times of July 22, 1946.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

(The editorial appears in the Appendix along with other editorials on the same subject submitted by Mr. LUCAS.)

LIABILITY FOR ACTS PERFORMED UNDER SELECTIVE SERVICE REGULATIONS

Mr. McCARRAN obtained the floor.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nevada yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, I wish to make a brief statement and give notice to the Senate that it is my hope that possibly today or tomorrow we may be able to consider House bill 6035, Calendar No. 1851, known as the double liability bill. It seems to me particularly necessary that the Congress pass this bill before final adjournment, for the reason that employers throughout the United States took the word of the Administrator of the Selective Service System, General Hershey, that veterans were entitled to seniority in their jobs when they were discharged from the armed forces. Most of the employers did take the word of the man who was the Administrator of the law passed by the Congress, and they did give the veterans seniority. There was no contrary court decision on this matter until January 26 of this year, at which time there was a decision to the effect that a nonveteran with superseniority could hold his job. That was finally confirmed by the Supreme Court, on May 24. That decision leaves the employer liable for the salary of a nonveteran who has been displaced by a veteran.

I believe that this bill is very fair, and that Congress is obligated to give relief to the employers. Therefore, I give notice that at the earliest opportunity I shall ask for consideration of the bill, H. R. 6035, to provide that there shall be no liability for acts done or omitted in accordance with regulations of the Director of Selective Service, and for other purposes.

WITHDRAWALS OF PUBLIC LANDS FROM SETTLEMENT, ETC.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, on June 29, for myself and the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. MURDOCK], I introduced in the Senate a bill, S. 2394, which is of the highest importance to all of the western public-land States. The enactment of this bill is vital to the further discovery and the orderly development of the resources of these vast areas of our country, and to the maintenance and expansion of employment in the Western States during this postwar period and the years to follow.

This bill deals with the power to make withdrawals of the public lands from settlement, entry, location, and sale. It it is a bill for the recapture by the Congress of these powers which the executive branch of the Government has acquired, over a long period of years, through acquiescence or silence on the part of the Congress. It would do this by amending the General Withdrawal Act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. 847), as amended in 1912.

I am sure that few of my colleagues who are not from the public-lands States fully realize how extensive and important are these public lands of the Nation, and how vital their proper use and administration are to the whole economy of these Western States, and to their State and local governments.

The area of the lands owned by the Federal Government within the limits of the 48 States reaches a total of 455,000,000 acres, which is 24 percent of the total area of all of the States. Ninety percent of these Federal lands lie within the boundaries of the 11 Western States; and these States comprise 40 percent of the area of all of them. More than half of the total land area of the 11 Western States is federally owned. In three of these States, more than 70 percent of the land is owned by the Federal Government; and in my own State of Nevada the proportion reaches 87 percent. If Alaska be added to the 48 States for the purpose of this consideration, we find that 36 percent of the total land area is owned and administered by the Government here in Washington.

There can be no doubt that the final authority for the making of public-land withdrawals resides in the Congress. The language in the Constitution and in the decisions of the Supreme Court is amply clear on this point. Article IV, section 3, of the Constitution states that—

> The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the Territory or other property belonging to the United States.

The decision of the Supreme Court upon which the executive branch of the Government relies for the justification of its wide exercise of the power to make public-land withdrawals is found in United States v. Midwest Oil Company (236 U. S. 450). In this decision, written in 1914, the Court pointed out that—

> The Executive, as agent, was in charge of the public domain; by a multitude of orders, extending over a long period of time and affecting vast bodies of land in many States and Territories, he withdrew large areas in the public interest. These orders were known to the Congress, as principal, and in not a single instance was the act of the agent disapproved.

The Court added:

> The power of Congress over the public domain is not only that of a legislative domain but also that of a proprietor, and it may deal with it as an individual owner may deal with his property and may grant powers to the Executive as an owner might grant powers to an agent, either expressly or by implication.
> Silence of Congress after consideration of a practice by the Executive may be equivalent to acquiescence and consent that the practice be continued until the power exercised is revoked.

Mr. President, the time has come, and has long been overdue, when the Congress should revoke these public-land withdrawal powers, thus acquired by the Executive through silence on the part of Congress. To do this is the purpose of my bill, S. 2394.

The power to make Executive withdrawals of public lands has been and is being used and abused with utter abandon. Withdrawal orders are issued in great numbers, on the flimsiest of excuses, and with little or no regard for their effect upon the interests and the means of livelihood of the citizens of the Western States, or upon the development of the resources therein. Most of the withdrawals are made at the behest of administrative agencies which are striving to expand their prestige and bureaucratic control. The numbers of these withdrawals run into many thousands. They are so numerous and so confused and conflicting, that the General Land Office, the recording agency, cannot give even an approximate estimate of the number now outstanding. Many of the withdrawals involve hundreds of thousands, or even millions of acres. They became so numerous and so burdensome for the President to sign that 4 years ago the President delegated to the Secretary of the Interior his full authority to issue and revoke all withdrawal orders, with the approval of the Bureau of the Budget and the Attorney General.

Not only are the numbers of withdrawals very great, Mr. President, but it is a general practice of certain Government agencies, and may I say more particularly the Indian Service and the National Park Service, to withdraw, at a given time and place, many times the acreage needed or many times the acreage that could possibly be justified by any reasonable standard of measurement to be withdrawn.

A considerable proportion of the public land withdrawals are designated in the withdrawal orders as "temporary." This is necessarily true because the authorization contained in the General Withdrawal Act extends only to lands withdrawn temporarily. To make "permanent" withdrawal, the Executive must resort to those powers acquired from the Congress through default. However, these so-called temporary withdrawals are allowed to stand indefinitely. It is comparatively seldom that a temporary withdrawal, once made, is even reduced in area. They are rarely vacated. I am informed that so-called temporary withdrawals issued as early as 1862 are still in full force and effect.

I have learned that in 1902 a tract of some 30,000 acres located in the State of California, was temporarily withdrawn in aid of legislation. The withdrawal was effected merely by sending a telegram which, in my opinion, cannot be construed as a valid withdrawal order. Four or 5 years later the proposed legislation, in the interest of which the withdrawal order was issued, was definitely defeated in the Congress. Today, applications are on file in the Department of the Interior for the issuance of permits to drill for oil and gas upon this land. But the General Land Office is unable to issue the permits, for the reason that the agency involved, National Park Service, refuses to release the withdrawal. These lands have not been incorporated into a national park or monument. Yet today, at this very moment, after this temporary and inadequate if not invalid withdrawal has stood for nearly half a century, and the proposed legislation has been definitely defeated for 40 years, it continues to block the exploration for and development of a resource greatly needed by the entire Nation.

This is not an isolated case. There are today on the records of the Department of the Interior many public land withdrawals just as flagrant, just as inexcusable, just as stultifying to the interests and development of the western States as is this one.

For several years I have been chairman of a subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Public Lands and Surveys to investigate the administration and use of the public lands. Extensive hearings have been held in the western public land States and here in Washington, and several reports have been issued by the subcommittee. The record in these hearings and reports will substantiate the statements that I am making today. The subcommittee has had occasion to investigate many public land withdrawals, and to examine some of them in great detail. If time permitted, I could cite many more and illuminating examples of the abuses and the effects of the Executive withdrawals.

The findings of my subcommittee show that many withdrawal orders are prepared and issued in a very irregular manner, in violation of the law and the regulations promulgated thereunder. They are usually issued merely upon the recommendation of the Government agency that will profit thereby, without any investigation of the needs or the justification for the order. In all cases that have come to my knowledge, the orders have been prepared and issued in entire secrecy, without consultation with, or the knowledge of the Members of the Congress or the officials or citizens of the States concerned.

A large proportion of the withdrawal orders contain no references to any statutory authority for their issuance. These are issued pursuant to what the Department of the Interior likes to call the broad powers of the President, meaning those powers which the Supreme Court says have been acquired through the silence or acquiescence on the part of the Congress. Spokesmen for the Interior Department refer constantly to those powers as the inherent powers of the President, despite the fact that the constitution clearly placed in the Congress all powers with respect to the public lands, and the Supreme Court has so interpreted it.

This device of resorting to the so-called broad or inherent powers of the President is used by the Interior Department when they wish to free the withdrawn lands from the application of the mining laws. This is necessary because the General Withdrawal Act of 1910, as amended, specifically provides that on all lands withdrawn under its authority the mining laws with respect to metalliferous minerals shall apply.

To illustrate the lengths to which the Department of the Interior will and does go in circumvention and in violation of the laws of Congress, I need but cite a long series of withdrawals made for the Indian Service under alleged authority contained in a proviso in an act of March 3, 1927. The language of that proviso is wholly negative, and it is unrelated to anything else in the act. But the Department in the most flagrantly distorted interpretation of a statute that has ever come to my attention, has for many years construed the proviso to be an affirmative grant of power to the Secretary to make withdrawals of public lands for the use and occupation of Indians and for administration by the Indian Service. The effect of this interpretation, which, by the way, was apposed by the General Land Office, is to nullify three separate statutes in which the Congress specifically reserved to itself all authority to create Indian reservations or additions to reservations, and to alter the boundaries of existing reservations. Yet, under this alleged but nonexistent authority the Department has effected and continues to effect, many withdrawals in many States, totaling many millions of acres. The largest ones of these withdrawals were made 13 and 15 years ago in the States of Utah and New Mexico, all under the guise of "in aid of legislation." For some of these areas no legislation has ever been proposed, and for the others the legislation proposed was long ago defeated in the Congress. To all intents and purposes, these withdrawals constitute Indian reservations or additions to reservations, and they all still stand in full force and effect. None has ever been revoked. They remain as festering sores of controversy to plague the communities and the States in which they are located.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK. Is it not a fact that after a withdrawal has been made, especially in connection with the Bureau of Indian Affairs, the withdrawal is used as a club over the heads of Senators and Representatives in order to force legislation through Congress which otherwise, in my opinion, might not be considered at all? That has been my experience in both the Senate and in the House. The very withdrawal to which the Senator from Nevada has referred was made when I first became a Member of the House in either 1932 or 1934. It is still in full effect. Under that withdrawal the Bureau of Indian Affairs took over jurisdiction of, as I recall, approximately a million acres of land, and since then has constantly used that circumstance in an attempt to force through the Congress legislation which should never be enacted and will not be enacted.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, no statement could be more accurate than that which the able Senator from Utah has made. He has sat with me in many hearings on the subcommittee where not only the subject which he discussed today, but also kindred subjects were developed in such a way that one would believe the Department of the Interior would, to use the common vernacular of the street, "get on to itself" and at least comply with the law.

Mr. President, the multiplicity and complications of the many thousands of outstanding public land withdrawals is almost beyond comprehension. There remains very little public land in the Western States not now covered by at least one withdrawal; and much of the land is encumbered by additional overlying and overlapping withdrawals, all imposing varying kinds and decrees of restrictions upon their use by others than the administering agency or agencies in charge. Many of the most valuable and most highly mineralized areas in the Nation are thus tightly locked up indefinitely from all productive development. They include some of the richest known deposits of minerals in short supply and badly needed in the interest of the national economy. Some of these deposits have been discovered through the long efforts and heavy expenditures on the part of private citizens who stand ready to proceed with their orderly development if permitted to do so under the mineral-leasing laws. But these citizens now find the areas sealed off and held indefinitely for some future exploration and development by such Government agencies as the Department of the Interior, if and when the Congress shall provide the authorizations and appropriations.

A high proportion of the withdrawals have long since served every legitimate purpose. Many of them never were defensible or needed in the first instance. Their continued existence, even, seriously hampers the administration and records of such agencies as the General Land Office. For years thay have virtually ended all homesteading. To a very serious extent they hamper or prevent the further exploration and development of those mineral resources upon which much of the continued progress and prosperity of the Western States depend. The whole record shows that it is futile to expect or hope that the clearing away of this debris, the setting of the house in order, will be undertaken by the Department of the Interior. It is clear that this will have to be done by the Congress. To do this is the purpose of my bill.

I have already said that in S. 2394 I propose to correct this deplorable situation by amendments to the Withdrawal Act of 1910, as amended. That act authorizes the President to "temporarily withdraw from settlement, location, sale, or entry any of the public lands of the United States, and reserve the same for public purposes to be specified in the orders of withdrawal."

The act provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall report all such withdrawals to Congress annually. Under my bill, these temporary withdrawals then would terminate after 2 years unless the Congress shall have authorized their continuance.

Thereafter Executive withdrawals would be limited to, first, those authorized by the act of 1910, as amended; and, second, those ordered by the President, in a time of emergency, for the use of the armed forces.

A further requirement provided in the bill is that before a withdrawal order is promulgated public hearings shall be held within the boundaries of the State or States concerned.

The bill also would require the Secretary of the Interior to submit to the Congress, at its next regular session, a full report on all outstanding public-land withdrawals except those included in national forests, national parks, and other projects and reservations authorized by statute. Then those reported withdrawals, or portions thereof, whose continuance the Congress does not authorize within 2 years would terminate. This is the most practicable and effective means that I know of to eliminate the great accumulated mass of unneeded, outmoded, and useless but highly restrictive withdrawals.

Mr. President, it is high time that the Congress put an effective curb on these long-continued, far-flung, and irresponsible practices of the executive branch of the Government with respect to the public lands. The patience and forbearance of the citizens of the Western States in this matter has been sorely tried. They are strongly demanding that the Congress regain and exercise its control of the withdrawal powers. They want an end to this needless and misguided withholding of these great areas within their borders from their normal and orderly development in the interest of the West and the Nation. They are earnestly asking for the type of legislation contained in S. 2394. I hope that the incoming Congress will give this bill its careful consideration and early action.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 2394, introduced by the Senator from Utah [Mr. MURDOCK] and myself, be inserted in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 2394) to amend the act entitled "An act to authorize the President of the United States to make withdrawals of public lands in certain cases," approved June 25, 1910, as amended, and for other purposes, was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) the first section of the act entitled "An act to authorize the President of the United States to make withdrawals of public lands in certain cases," approved June 25, 1910, as amended (36 Stat. 847), is amended by striking out the following: "and such withdrawals or reservations shall remain in force until revoked by him or by an act of Congress."

(b) Section 3 of such act, as amended, is amended by inserting at the end thereof a new sentence, as follows: "Each withdrawal made under the provisions of this act shall terminate on the last day of the calendar year following the calendar year in which such withdrawal is reported to the Congress, unless, prior to such last day, the Congress by law shall have authorized the continuation of such withdrawal."

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to submit to the Congress, on the first day of the first regular session of the Congress which begins after the date of enactment of this act, a full and complete report of all outstanding withdrawals from settlement, entry, location, or sale of any public lands, or portions of any such withdrawals, which have not lawfully been made a part of a national forest, national park, wildlife sanctuary or refuge, reclamation project, Indian reservation, or permanent military or naval reservation, and which has not been otherwise disposed of by act of Congress. Each such withdrawal, or portion thereof, shall terminate on the last day of the calendar year following the calendar year in which such report is submitted, unless, prior to such last day, the Congress by law shall have authorized the continuation of such withdrawal.

SEC. 3. After the date of enactment of this act, no public lands shall be withdrawn from settlement, entry, location, or sale (other than temporary withdrawals authorized by the act of June 25, 1910 (37 Stat. 847), as amended, and withdrawals specifically ordered by the President in time of emergency for the use of the armed forces) except by act of Congress. Any such withdrawal ordered by the President in time of emergency for use of the armed forces shall terminate when such emergency shall have ended.

SEC. 4. No lands shall be withdrawn under the provisions of the act of June 25, 1910 (37 Stat. 847), as amended, except after full public hearings, held within the State or States in which the lands proposed to be withdrawn are situated, upon adequate notice and opportunity for hearing to all interested parties: Provided, That the publication of notice of such hearings shall have the effect of prohibiting, for a period of 180 days, all further settlement, entry, location, or sale of lands proposed to be withdrawn.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. President, I merely wish to say that the bill just presented was not introduced until very extensive and thorough hearings on the subject matter of the bill were held by a subcommittee of the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, of which the distinguished Senator from Nevada is chairman, and I am a member.

My own experience in Congress has taught me that the withdrawal privileges which have been exercised by some of the agencies of Government are absolutely contrary to the best interests of the public, and I join with the distinguished Senator from Nevada in the hope that the next Congress will join us in the passage of the bill.

It is high time that such legislation were enacted, and certainly the Congress should pass any and all bills which relieve the Congress of any pressure entailed by such activities as have been referred to by the Senator from Nevada.

I hope the bill will pass at the next session of Congress and I highly commend the able Senator from Nevada for his untiring efforts in behalf of the people who live in the public land States.

THE MEDITERRANEAN FRUITFLY

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 494, Senate bill 1250.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 1250) for the relief of certain claimants who suffered losses and sustained damages as the result of the campaign carried out by the Federal Government for the eradication of the Mediterranean fruitfly in the State of Florida.

Mr. HILL. I understand the Senator asks that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside to take up this bill. Is that correct?

Mr. ANDREWS. Yes. I want to have it fixed so that we can vote on it at the earliest possible time.

Mr. HILL. I hope the Senator may get a vote on it. I share his desire to get a vote on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Florida?

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, what is the bill?

Mr. ANDREWS. It is Senate bill 1250. It is a claims bill, the so-called Mediterranean fruitfly bill. In this case a joint committee of the Senate and House went to Florida, held hearings, took the testimony of witnesses, and brought back a unanimous report authorizing the payment of the damages sought.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to designate an officer or employee of the Treasury Department as Commissioner, whose duty it shall be to investigate and take proof of all claims for damages growing out of the Mediterranean fruitfly eradication campaign. The Secretary of the Treasury shall fix the duties and compensation of the Commissioner. The Secretary of the Treasury shall also employ and fix the compensation and duties of such number of employees as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act, but such compensation of such employees shall correspond as far as may be practicable to the rates established by the Classification Act of 1923, as amended. The Commissioner may accept and utilize such voluntary and uncompensated services as he may deem necessary; and may make such expenditures, including expenditures for necessary offices, for travel and subsistence expenses, and for printing and binding as are necessary for the efficient execution of his duties under this act. All expenses incurred by the Commissioner in carrying out the provisions of this act shall be allowed and paid by the Secretary of the Treasury upon the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor duly approved by the Commissioner.

SEC. 2. The Commissioner is authorized and directed to determine and certify to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment, and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay in accordance with the certifications of the Commissioner, the amount of indemnity determined as due each person for losses and damages sustained as the result of the Mediterranean fruitfly eradication campaign conducted in the State of Florida during the years 1929 and 1930. The formula to be used by the Commissioner for the determination of the losses and damages of claimants for fruit, vegetable, and field crops shall be substantially as follows: For oranges, $1.10 per box; grapefruit, limes, lemons, and kumquats, $1 per box; peaches, $1.45 per bushel; avocados, $2.12 per bushel; persimmons, $5 per bushel; grapes, $2.10 per bushel; guavas and other noncitrus fruits, $1 per bushel; cowpeas, $5.50 per acre, or where gathered, $1.25 per bushel; beans, $1.44 per bushel; peppers, 92 cents per bushel; tomatoes, $3.18 per bushel; miscellaneous vegetables, fruits, field crops, and plants not mentioned above shall be at the average net price in Florida for the period as shown by the reports of the United States Department of Agriculture for the years in question. In determining the quantity of vegetables destroyed, the Commissioner shall take into consideration whether same were produced on irrigated or nonirrigated land, the average production per acre of each, and the percentage of the crop that had been marketed prior to the destruction of the plants and vines in the gardens and fields. Where any fruit or vegetable had been gathered and was in the process of being marketed, the actual cost of gathering and hauling, where paid by the grower, shall also be included. When such costs were paid by a purchaser or packing-house operator, a separate claim shall be filed by such purchaser or packing-house operator for the actual cost of gathering or hauling. Each grower of citrus fruit shall also be entitled to recover the actual cost to him of picking and burying citrus drops and splits, not to exceed $5 per acre in zone 1, $7.50 per acre in zone 2, and $6.50 per acre in zone 3 of the area of infestation.

Damages to fruit trees resulting from the use of poisonous bait spray shall be determined in conformity with table 8, page 17, House Document No. 290, Seventy-sixth Congress, being a report prepared by the Mediterranean Fruitfly Board appointed by the Secretary of Agriculture under the act of Congress of May 23, 1938 (52 Stat. 436). Damages for the destruction of commercial plants and shrubs ordered destroyed during the eradication campaign shall be determined and fixed by the Commissioner after taking into account the true market value to the seller of the property destroyed. It is hereby declared to be the express intention of Congress that persons who suffered losses and sustained damages of the kind and character described in this act shall receive full compensation, as provided for herein, for the losses sustained and damages suffered, but that losses of no other kind or character shall be considered by the Commissioner.

SEC. 3. All books, papers, documents, reports, and other records of the Department of Agriculture which relate to the campaign conducted during the years 1929 and 1930 in the State of Florida for the extermination and eradication of the Mediterranean fruitfly in such State (including the books, papers, documents, reports, and other records of the Mediterranean Fruitfly Board created by the act entitled "An act to provide for an investigation of the Mediterranean fruitfly by the Department of Agriculture," approved May 23, 1938) shall be available for examination and inspection by the Commissioner or his duly authorized agents and representatives.

SEC. 4. No payment under the provisions of this act shall be made unless an application therefor is filed with the Commissioner, by or on behalf of the person entitled to payment, within 6 months after the date the Secretary of the Treasury designates a person as Commissioner under the provisions of the first section of this act. Any such application shall set forth the amount and kind of losses or damages claimed and shall be supported by such documents or other information as the Commissioner shall require. All claims filed with the Mediterranean Fruitfly Board created under the act of May 23, 1938 (52 Stat. 436), shall be delivered to the Commissioner by the Secretary of Agriculture, and claims filed by growers with Florida Growers Reimbursement Committee may also be filed with the Commissioner, and each such claim shall constitute an application for reimbursement where no other application is filed: Provided, That the Commissioner may require claimants to furnish such additional information as the Commissioner may deem necessary. All claims filed by growers with Florida Growers Reimbursement Committee shall be made available to the Commissioner upon request in considering any claim filed by any claimant under this act. If any claimant has died, become incompetent, or is otherwise unable to file a claim, such claim may be filed by the heirs, representatives, administrators, executors, successors, or assigns of any such person, and payments of indemnity may be made to such heirs, representatives, administrators, executors, successors, or assigns of any such person, and further administration upon the estate of any person who has died shall be avoided where that is possible: Provided, That no person who makes a claim under this act by virtue of having acquired and succeeded to the rights of the original claimant through purchase and assignment from said claimant of any claim shall receive more than the amount actually paid for such claim and assignment.

SEC. 5. When the Commissioner has determined the amount due on any claim filed with him, and the person or persons entitled thereto, the same shall be certified by him to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment, and the payment of such amount shall constitute full and final release and discharge of such claim against the United States. The determination of the Commissioner as to the amount due and payable and the person or persons entitled thereto shall be final.

SEC. 6. The sum of $10,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of paying claims approved hereunder and expenses incurred in carrying out the provisions of this act: Provided, That of the sum hereby appropriated, $350,000 shall be available only for the payment of claims designated and described in the paragraph entitled "Other Losses" on page 32 of House Document No. 290, Seventy-sixth Congress, first session, 1939. Indemnity paid to any claimant under the provisions of this act shall not be subject to attachment, levy, or seizure under any legal or equitable process.

SEC. 7. The Commissioner shall establish his principal office at some central place convenient to claimants within the affected Florida citrus area where claims may be filed and may conduct hearings and investigations at any point within the Florida citrus area as he may deem necessary to establish the validity of any claim, and no person shall be denied an opportunity to be heard prior to the determination and certification of the amount due such claimant.

SEC. 8. The Commissioner shall provide for proof of claims under oath, prescribed blanks and forms to be used by claimants, and prescribe such rules and regulations not inconsistent herewith as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 9. The word "person" and "claimant" as used in this act shall include any individual, two or more persons having a joint common interest, company, partnership, county, or municipal or private corporation.

SEC. 10. Any person or group of persons, individually or collectively, who charge or collect or attempt to charge or collect, either directly or indirectly, any fee or other compensation, in excess of 5 percent of the amount of the claim actually paid under this act, for assisting in any manner any person in obtaining the benefits of this act, shall, upon conviction thereof, be subject to a fine of not more than $500, or imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both.

SEC. 11. It shall be unlawful for any person or claimant to swear falsely as to any claim, or to attempt by fraud to collect any claim under the provisions of this act, and any person or claimant violating any provision of this section, shall, upon conviction thereof, be subject to a fine of not more than $1,000, or imprisonment of not more than 1 year, or both.

SEC. 12. The Commissioner shall submit a report to the Congress covering his activities under this act within 1 year from the date of his designation, together with such information, data, and recommendations for any further legislation in connection with payments of indemnity for losses and damages resulting from the Mediterranean-fruitfly-eradication campaign in the State of Florida as he may deem advisable.

SEC. 13. All power and authority of the Commissioner under the provisions of this act shall cease upon the expiration of 1 year after the date the Secretary of the Treasury designates a person as Commissioner under the provisions of the first section of this act.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I wish to have printed in the RECORD, following the passage of the bill, a statement which shows exactly what it is for, and containing the report of the special committee authorizing the payment of the damages.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate bill 2020 was introduced in the Seventy-seventh Congress for the relief of certain claimants who suffered loss and sustained damages as a result of the campaign carried out by the Government for the eradication of the Mediterranean fruitfly in the State of Florida.

Before the Senate Claims Committee would pass on the matter, a joint resolution was adopted by the House and Senate in March and April, of 1940, authorizing and directing a special committee of the Senate and House to make a full and complete investigation with respect to the losses sustained by the campaign and quarantine conducted by the United States in 1929 and 1930 with a view to determining, among other things, the circumstances under which such losses occurred, the nature, character, and amount of such losses and the persons by whom such losses were sustained; and that the committee should report to the Congress the result of its investigation, together with its recommendations if any, for necessary legislation. The special committee was composed of Senators Schwartz, Ellender, and Wiley on part of the Senate, and Congressmen Ramspeck, Thomas, and Kennedy on part of the House.

The committee held hearings in Florida in several locations from December 4 to December 7, 1940, taking the testimony of approximately 114 witnesses. After consideration of the facts and the extent of the methods pursued with consequent unnecessary damages to those engaged in the citrus and vegetable industries, the joint committee in its report No. 491, Seventy-ninth Congress, found that obligation rested upon the Congress to compensate those who suffered losses under certain circumstances and among others for reasons set forth, as follows:

(a) That the Mediterranean fruitfly eradication campaign, carried out in Florida during 1929 and 1930, was a Federal Government undertaking, and that the Federal Government has accepted full and complete responsibility for everything that was done at its direction in carrying out the eradication program;

(b) That the Mediterranean fruitfly is not and never was indigenous to Florida, and that under the Constitution the Federal Government has exclusive jurisdiction of foreign commerce and inspections at all receiving ports and therefore the responsibility for the original infestation is theoretically Federal;

(c) That the unnecessary damage suffered by fruit and vegetable growers was due mainly to failure of the Federal Government to formulate a safe and effective plan of eradication and prevention, as in the case of other insect pests which have heretofore threatened crops in other parts of the United States;

(d) That some of the damage suffered was due to direct infestation but the greater portion of the damage was due to the drastic method and manner of eradication;

(e) That the records show that official statements were made to growers at the time the eradication program was being carried out that they would be entitled to compensation for the losses suffered.

The committee further finds:

1. That the agricultural program of the Federal Government and particularly the policies of the present administration furnish ample precedent for reimbursing the losses sustained as a result of the fruitfly eradication program;

2. That the citizens of Florida suffered other losses much larger than the damage claimed which they have from the beginning expressed a willingness to absorb, but it is the opinion of the committee that morally, if not strictly legally, they are entitled to be compensated by the Federal Government for losses they sustained for the protection of the fruit and vegetable industry of the other States of the Union.

In addition the price measure of damages for fruits, vegetables, and field crops were made through the Department of Agriculture (H. Doc. No. 290) transmitted May 10, 1939, to the Senate and House by the Secretary of Agriculture containing carefully tabulated report made by Dr. Ben Galloway, then connected with the United States Plant and Quarantine Commission. His report was made from the records of the Department of Agriculture, together with a personal examination of all other pertinent records available which would aid in securing definite data and figures on the price measure of damages for fruits, vegetables, and field crops destroyed.

Dr. Galloway's report shows the number of commercial crates and boxes of oranges and bushels of vegetables and other fruits destroyed, together with prevailing prices; also other losses caused by poison spray and other damages set out in Report No. 491, Calendar 494, which accompanies Senate bill 1250, reintroduced by Senator ELLENDER early in this session.

This matter has been postponed from 1940 to the present date because of war conditions. We were advised and so agreed that every dollar we could afford should be devoted to the winning of the war. The war is now over and although many of the original claimants, being elderly people, have passed on and many are living in other States of the Union. I feel that the matter should now be acted upon.

REEMPLOYMENT RIGHTS FOR MEMBERS OF THE MERCHANT MARINE

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Mr. President, it was necessary for me to leave the floor yesterday afternoon to attend a funeral and act as a pallbearer. At my request, two bills were passed over which are not in any sense controversial. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1887, H. R. 3973.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 3973) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide reemployment rights for persons who leave their positions to serve in the merchant marine, and for other purposes, approved June 23, 1943, and for other purposes."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MEDAL FOR SERVICE IN THE MERCHANT MARINE

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Mr. President, the second bill for which I ask consideration is Calendar No. 1888, Senate bill 2236, providing for a medal for service in the merchant marine during the present war.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the following:

That the United States Maritime Commission is authorized and directed to procure a medal and suitable appurtenances of appropriate design, including an honorable discharge lapel button, to be awarded to (1) each person who served honorably in a war zone as an officer or member of the crew of vessels owned by or operated by or for the account of the Maritime Commission or the War Shipping Administration for 30 days during the period beginning December 7, 1941, and ending with September 3, 1945; and (2) each person who is entitled to receive a certificate of substantially continuous service pursuant to the provisions of Public Law 87, Seventy-eighth Congress, approved June 23, 1943 (57 Stat. 162). The medal may be awarded posthumously and, when so awarded, shall be presented to such representative of the deceased as shall be prescribed in the applicable regulations. Awards under this act shall be made pursuant to regulations prescribed by the Maritime Commission.

SEC. 2. The Maritime Commission is authorized to expend out of any funds available for expenditure by the Maritime Commission such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 3. The manufacture, sale, possession, or display of any insignia, decoration, medal, award, or device, or the ribbon, button, or rosette thereof, or any colorable imitation of any insignia, decoration, medal, award, or device, provided for in this act, is prohibited, except as authorized under such act or any rule or regulation issued pursuant thereto. Whoever violates any provisions of this section shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $250 or by imprisonment not exceeding 6 months, or both.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSIDERATION OF BILLS REPORTED BY COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS AND SURVEYS

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I desire to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of five bills which were unanimously reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys yesterday.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, my attention has been directed elsewhere. I should like to know what the situation is, and particularly what is the request of the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am very happy to answer any inquiries made of me by the Senator from Maine.

Mr. WHITE. That is, I presume, because I usually yield to the Senator's persuasion.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am sure the Senator from Maine will yield to my request at this time, because, as I always endeavor, I shall not make an unreasonable request.

The Senate Committee on Public Lands and Surveys yesterday reported unanimously five House bills. They are all bills of a noncontroversial nature, the passage of which is desired by Senators whose districts are affected. I believe they can be passed unanimously.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. GURNEY. I hope the Senator from Maine will not object to consideration of these bills. They were reported unanimously from the committee. There was attendance by minority members. I am sure every Senator in attendance at the committee agreed that the bills were not controversial and of interest only to the Senators from the States whose land is affected.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, even a timid inquiry about the bill seems to bring disapproval of me.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am sure there is no disapproval. Every Member of the Senate on both sides is always happy to attempt to enlighten the Senator from Maine.

Mr. WHITE. The Senator from Maine needs enlightenment on many of these matters.

Mr. President, in view of the persuasiveness of the Senator from Wyoming, and since the request has the approval of the Senator from South Dakota, I have no purpose of objection.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT NATIONAL PARK

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of five bills. They are Calendar Nos. 1940 to 1944, inclusive. I first ask for the present consideration of House bill 4435.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4435) to establish the Theodore Roosevelt National Park; to erect a monument in memory of Theodore Roosevelt in the village of Medora, N. Dak.; and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, with an amendment, on page 5, line 3, after the word "Park", to strike out the colon and the following: "And provided further, That title and evidence of title to land and interests therein acquired for said park shall be satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

MUSKEGON TRUST CO., MUSKEGON, MICH.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I now ask for the present consideration of House bill 1860.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

R. 1860) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue a duplicate of Porterfield scrip certificate No. 53 to the Muskegon Trust Co., Muskegon, Mich., as trustee of the John Torrent trust, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CASTLE CLINTON NATIONAL MONUMENT, NEW YORK CITY

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I ask for the present consideration of House bill 5125.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

GRANT OF CERTAIN LAND TO MILES CITY, MONT.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I ask for the present consideration of House bill 6896.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 6896) to grant to the city of Miles City, State of Montana, certain land in Custer County, Mont., for industrial and recreational purposes and as a museum site was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXCHANGE OF NONFEDERAL PROPERTY WITHIN GLACIER NATIONAL PARK

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I now ask for the present consideration of House bill 7020.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 7020) to provide for the acquisition by exchange of non-Federal property within the Glacier National Park was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, from the Committee To Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I ask unanimous consent to report favorably, without amendment, Senate Resolution 316, and I request consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 316) submitted by Mr. McCARRAN on July 27, 1946; referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys; subsequently reported from that committee on July 29, without amendment, and referred to the Committee To Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, was considered and agreed to as follows:

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The amendment was, on page 1, line 5, to strike out "$40,000" and to insert "$20,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the special committee authorized by Senate Resolution 224, Seventy-ninth Congress, to investigate senatorial campaign contributions and expenditures in the 1946 elections is authorized to expend from the contingent fund of the Senate $20,000 in addition to the amount heretofore authorized for the same purpose.

The expenses of the committee under this resolution, which shall not exceed $5,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman, and the authority of such committee to make expenditures under Senate Resolution 281, Seventy-ninth Congress, agreed to June 25, 1946, is hereby revoked.

INVESTIGATION OF EXISTING AND PENDING LABOR LEGISLATION, AND INVESTIGATION OF LABOR RELATIONS

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report favorably, without further amendment, House Concurrent Resolution 148, creating a joint select committee to study and recommend legislation concerning labor relations. The concurrent resolution was adopted originally by the House of Representatives, establishing a joint committee, to be composed of seven Members of the Senate and seven Members of the House of Representatives, for the purpose of studying and investigating existing and pending labor legislation and of the whole field of labor relations, and to report to their respective Houses of Congress. The Senate Committee on Education and Labor changed the language of the House concurrent resolution, and in talking to the able majority leader he advised me that he was unalterably opposed to the language now found in this concurrent resolution as reported from the Committee on Education and Labor. The language which has been inserted in lieu of the language of the House of Representatives is as follows:

Hereby establish a joint committee to be composed of seven Members of the Senate, of whom at least five are Members of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and seven Members of the House of Representatives, of whom at least five are Members of the House Committee on Labor.

Whether that language is acceptable to the House Committee on Labor I do not know.

Mr. RUSSELL. What are the provisions in the House concurrent resolution?

Mr. LUCAS. The House resolution merely establishes the joint committee, composed of seven members to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and seven Members of the House of Representatives to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

While I am reporting this measure as chairman of the Committee To Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, as a Member of the Senate I am in accord with the statement made by the distinguished majority leader that the concurrent resolution ought to be amended to leave the language exactly as it was when the measure was adopted by the House of Representatives some time ago.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator does not propose to have action taken on the concurrent resolution at this time, does he?

Mr. LUCAS. I merely wish to bring it up and let it go to the calendar, or let it lie on the table, until some action can be taken on it before the Congress adjourns.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I suggest that the concurrent resolution go to the calendar. Otherwise I should feel constrained to demand the regular order.

Mr. LUCAS. Under those circumstances, I shall ask that the concurrent resolution go to the calendar. It is an important measure, and the Senate probably should debate it somewhat. Especially is it important in view of the language that was written into the concurrent resolution by the Senate Committee. I certainly believe that the President pro tempore of the Senate ought to have the power to appoint a committee of this kind. Furthermore, Mr. President, the parliamentary question arose in the committee as to whether we have any right or authority to appropriate money for such a purpose from the contingent fund, in view of the fact that the language has been completely changed; and whether the House would agree to pay one-half of the expenses of an investigation of this kind, because of a change in the language. So it does present a situation that perhaps should be given consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the concurrent resolution will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, as I understand the situation, the concurrent resolution is not so important from the standpoint of the amount of money involved, if there is any involved, but it does seem to change existing law. I think it would be a mistake at this time to consider the concurrent resolution.

Mr. LUCAS. It does not seek to change existing law, but what the Committee on Education and Labor did was to change the language of the concurrent resolution as adopted by the House of Representatives.

Mr. WHITE. I think it ought to go to the calendar rather than to be acted upon now.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I was wondering when the committee would act. Is it the purpose of the resolution to have the committee conduct an investigation between now and January 1 during the congressional adjournment period, or would it continue as a permanent committee? We passed the reorganization bill, which would abolish this sort of thing beginning on January 1, so the only time the committee could work would be from now until January.

Mr. LUCAS. I should like to make an inquiry of some Senator who is familiar with the reorganization bill as to whether or not the House struck out the provision with respect to the appointment of special committees.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The reorganization bill does not affect joint committees. This is a proposal for a joint committee.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Would the proposed committee be a permanent joint committee?

Mr. HILL. It would not be a permanent joint committee, would it?

Mr. LUCAS. Oh, no.

Mr. HILL. It would simply be a committee along the lines requested by the President of the United States, to make a study and investigation of management and labor conditions, with a view to ascertaining what legislation, if any, should be enacted by the Congress dealing with the question of labor-management relations. It would not be a permanent committee at all.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I appreciate that. Then the committee could continue after the beginning of the next session in the study of this particular problem, as I understand.

Mr. LUCAS. That is correct.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Would the committee receive any money with which to do anything between now and January?

Mr. LUCAS. The concurrent resolution provides a fund of $30,000, provided we can agree upon the language of the resolution. The Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate has tried to discourage the appointment of special committees at this particular time, because, as I understand, the reorganization bill dispenses with all special committees. So any special committee which is appointed at this late hour could do little or no effective work between now and January 3 of next year. Probably the committee would have to go out of existence at that time, and then whatever work had been done up to that time would have to be turned over to some other committee.

Mr. MAGNUSON. As I understand, this plan follows the President's recommendation for such a committee.

Mr. LUCAS. Yes.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. HILL. As I understand, the Senator is reporting the concurrent resolution for the calendar?

Mr. LUCAS. Yes.

APPLICABILITY OF BENEFITS OF THE CIVIL SERVICE ACT TO OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES OF THE COLUMBIA INSTITUTION FOR THE DEAF

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Calendar No. 1907, Senate bill 2000, to amend the Civil Service Retirement Act approved May 29, 1930. This is merely an amendment to the Civil Service Act, making it possible for the faculty and employees of the Columbia Institution for the Deaf, which is an institution for which the Federal Government has been made trustee, to become parties to the civil-service benefits.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 2000) to amend the Civil Service Retirement Act approved May 29, 1930, as amended, so as to make such act applicable to officers and employees of the Columbia Institution for the Deaf.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Civil Service with an amendment on page 1, line 3, after the numeral "3", to strike out "(d)" and insert in lieu thereof "(a)", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That, effective July 1, 1946, section 3 (a) of the Civil Service Retirement Act, approved May 29, 1930, as amended, is amended by inserting before the colon preceding the first proviso thereof a comma and the following: "and shall apply to officers and employees of the Columbia Institution for the Deaf."

SEC. 2. Any service rendered, prior to July 1, 1946, as an officer or employee of the Columbia Institution for the Deaf, shall be considered creditable service for the purposes of section 9 of the Civil Service Retirement Act, approved May 29, 1930, as amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FAREWELL ADDRESS BY SENATOR WILLIS

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, when I was impelled to make this speech I thought of the story of the revenue officer who went down into Kentucky in the discharge of his duties. He went back into the hills and found an old shack where a boy was waiting in the yard. He said to the boy, "Is your pappy at home?" "Yes, sir," said the boy. The agent asked, "Where is he?" The boy replied, "He is back in the woods." The man asked him, "Will you take me back there?" "Sure," replied the boy.

The two of them started back into the woods. When they got about halfway to their destination the boy said, "Mister, what are you going to give me for taking you back here?" The man replied, "I thought I would give you 50 cents." The boy said, "I wish you would give it to me now." The man replied, "I will give it to you when we get back." The boy said, "Yes, mister, but you ain't coming back." [Laughter.]

That is what prompted me to make these remarks before this session adjourns.

Mr. President, I have treasured my position as a Senator of the United States. There has never been a time when I have walked onto this floor when I have not received a new thrill at being able to serve in this august body, whose walls have echoed the words of great public servants for decades long gone. This spot is hallowed by memories which we all treasure and which will be treasured in turn by our successors.

I shall trespass upon the patience of the Senate to speak of the conditions which I have observed during my service here and to list some possible solutions of our national problems which have occurred to me as I have studied and worked and voted in the name of the people of my native State of Indiana.

Perhaps what I have to say will not prove particularly appealing to many; perhaps it will not have the "oomph" that gives it a big headline; but it will be from my heart, and it will be given not in hope of reward or in search of votes or to gratify vanity, but because I love the United States of America, and because my desire for the welfare of my people always has been—and I trust always will be—greater than any vain personal ambitions.

As the editor of a modest weekly newspaper all of my adult life until I came to the Senate, I felt deeply the honor that the people of Indiana bestowed on me when they sent me to this body as one of their Senators. For that opportunity and the loyalty since shown me, I am truly grateful. Since coming here I have made many rich friendships. My years here have strengthened my confidence in our National Legislature.

My position before my election was a far cry from my position here, with all its grave responsibilities and all its pleasing privileges. I had heard that the Senate was a rich man's club, a circle of aristocrats. Yet I learned that for every one of great wealth in this body there were many whose beginnings had been as humble as my own. I learned that the United States Senate is an aristocracy, but not the aristocracy of rich birth, of power, or of conceit. It is an aristocracy of men of tolerance, patience, kindliness, forbearance—all extended freely and magnanimously to everyone who comes here at the will of the people. It is indeed a body of men possessing in full measure the qualities of gentility, of consideration, of friendliness, which are attributes of the truly great. Of such men Americans should be proud.

I have heard speeches in my tenure of office here which would compare favorably with great orations of the days of long ago—with the masterpieces of Webster, Clay, Sumner, and McKinley, from which we have profited so much. Some day men will look back to this period and quote from VANDENBERG, BARKLEY, TAFT, AUSTIN, O'MAHONEY, and MCCARRAN as we now quote our spiritual forbears.

So far as I can recall, my person-to-person relationship with all my fellow-Senators has been on that high and noble plane for which this body has been noted, with but few interruptions, throughout its existence. We disagree here, sometimes violently so, but the mental contests never turn into physical clashes. I have observed many bitter debates, long filibusters, and moments of tension, but I have seen the men who took part in those controversies walk into the Senate dining room arm-in-arm to break bread together.

It is a dream, I know, and it is as old a dream as the mind of man, and yet, Mr. President, often I have said to myself, "Why could not this tolerance, this breadth of viewpoint, this true liberalism, be carried over into our management-labor relationships? Why could not the leaders of the various nations get together and thrash out their varied points of view and even disagree violently, yet remain friends? Why cannot we, the people, not only in the United States, but in every nation, catch the living spirit of Christianity and cooperate to save the world instead of fighting always to destroy the world?" It is truer today than ever that they who take to the sword shall perish by the sword.

During all the centuries of recorded history 28 civilizations have risen and fallen. Some of them have developed high standards of education, of philosophy, of culture, and science, but all of them in the days of their fear of insecurity have resorted to force. They have placed their faith in huge armies, in the development of munitions, in brilliant military strategy, in scientific achievements, in compulsory military service; and yet not one of them has survived the ravages of a false philosophy or pagan religion.

In this day we, too, are looking too much to military might and productive genius as the salvation of our civilization. We proudly boast that America leads among the nations of the world. Yes, we have led in producing the most destructive, the most horrendous force the evil genius of man has yet been able to devise. If we are to continue our dependence on that force for the salvation of our Nation, if we are to enter into a race with other nations to keep ahead of them in stupendous might, we must realistically face the fact that our civilization will have to accept the most stultifying and soul-destroying limitations that have ever encompassed man. We are facing the alternative of a conflict that may destroy half the people of the world, or the compulsion of living together in toleration, in good will, and in soul-expanding qualities.

Since the formation of the United Nations, I have followed anxiously the proceedings of that body, and I have had high hope that within it would be developed the same spirit of compromise and of good will which has characterized the United States Senate except during the period preceding the Civil War. Perhaps that day will not come in our lives, Mr. President; perhaps it will never come. But some day, somehow, in some way, the people of the world are going to recognize that there is no logic, no sanity, no reason, no possibility of bringing joy and happiness to any group, much less to whole nations, so long as there is war in the world.

I have noticed growing up in this Nation, particularly since before the outbreak of World War II, a tendency on the part of millions of Americans to fall for smear words and shrewd propaganda devices, for many persons accept unquestioned the deductions of favorite radio broadcasters and news columnists, who sometimes are more cunning than honest. Some of us were pilloried in many segments of the public press as "isolationists" because we opposed our entry into World War II, until, of course, our Nation was attacked at Pearl Harbor.

Mr. President, many of the same people who were swallowing the false logic and condoning the ill-considered actions of those days are now wishing they had stopped and thought for a few moments. Now the same type of mentality is urging us on to World War III.

There are some Americans who have been so foolish as to say that we will have to fight Russia some day, anyway, so why not do it immediately; that we shall be able to win more easily, and can defeat the Russians before they find the secret of the atomic bomb. Although I am only a former weekly newspaper editor, I must reject such reasoning today, and I shall be rejecting it, Mr. President, the next time you see me. It is sheer folly and complete insanity for us to say seriously that we must fight Russia today, next year, or in 1956. Not only is it folly; it is downright wickedness, for those who talk in such a fashion are driving the first nails into the coffin of the United Nations, the only practical instrument now in existence to work for peace.

That is to say, Mr. President, through the months since the war ended, I have tried to stress the international aspect of the problems confronting us. Today, and every day, events are taking place, conferences are being held, and decisions are being made which mean either war or peace for tomorrow, or a decade from now, or 25 years from now. It is easy to get a people excited about a war just before it breaks out, or after they are involved. But the time for the people really to become excited about war is right after a war has ended. Day after day, our leaders are building either for war or for peace. If they make agreements, or cause agreements to be made, that bring good will and lessen the economic strains between neighbor nations and blocs of nations, it is likely that the result will be peace. If they make decisions that bring more economic tensions or greater numbers of quarrels among neighbor nations, it is likely the result will be war again—sooner or later. If these decisions are bad, year after year, then what this or that leader does just before a war will likely have little effect upon the final outcome.

So, Mr. President, I would urge my colleagues, as we enter what we hope is going to be an era of long and lasting peace, not to forget the problems which could cause war.

Yes; contemplating our international problems, we see and know that all Americans ought to devote time to reading and studying and pondering these problems. If they do not, then we are going to wind up facing World War III; and I am sure that no Member of this body, whether labeled "isolationist" or "internationalist," "radical" or "reactionary," "liberal" or "conservative," desires that.

Mr. President, before leaving this subject, I must divest any of my colleagues of the suspicion that I may be expounding the doctrine of pacifism. I would not want any one to think for a moment that I condone injustices inflicted upon the smaller and weaker nations by the great powers with which we have associated ourselves during the recent war, and whose might we have helped develop.

America must remain militarily strong, stronger than any other nation. But our military force should be used for our defense, and never in an expedition of aggression or to aid any other nation in nefarious programs. We should have every reasonable confidence that other nations will join with us in a program to rid all of us of the strength-sapping race for military supremacy. But America must never let down her guard.

Can anyone doubt that America has come into world leadership for times like these? Can anyone doubt that America, too, will join the crumbling ruins of history if we have not learned from history that military might alone is a vain thing for safety? Therefore, we must arouse ourselves to the dangers which threaten us by our neglect of the problems which are ever present with us here at home, and which we are prone to tolerate because we do not realize how insidiously they are sapping the strength which America must have if she is to meet squarely her rendezvous with destiny.

If I am any judge, Mr. President, the most important single lesson which we Americans are going to learn—and it appears that we are going to learn it the hard way—is that it is impossible for us to get something for nothing. I do not blame the Democrats entirely for the huge public debt now hanging like a millstone about our necks. I certainly do not blame this debt on the Republicans, who have fought many of the outlandish appropriations and, down through the past 14 years, have tried to trim the sails of those who wanted us to embark upon the sea of limitless Government spending. I blame a fallacy that has fastened itself like a leech on our people, through long decades. It is the belief, as erroneous as it is dangerous to our representative Government, that the Federal Government can live beyond its means year after year without calamitous results, although virtually every American is willing to concede that few individuals could do this for long. It is the belief that if a community needs a new bridge, a new dam, or a new road, the Federal Government can pay for the improvement, at no cost to the local taxpayer. It is the belief that local people cannot afford to maintain their poor, help the indigent, and care for the cripples, but that Washington bureaucrats can do all these things without a corresponding increase in taxes or a decrease in the purchasing power of the dollar.

Every sane man who sits down and thinks about these things, knows that it is impossible to put on the Federal Government all the responsibilities the people have put on it, without giving the Central Government the power and the money to carry out the ends desired. Yet, millions of our citizens thoughtlessly have believed that they could do this. The result is that, either through their desire or their acquiescence, we are faced with the greatest fiscal confusion which this or any other nation has ever had to face.

I want to make this a practical and soul-searching indictment. I do not presume to judge my fellow Senators, but I venture the assertion—and I think I can do it safely, and without challenge—that not a single Senator or a single Representative on this Hill has an overall idea of all the vast projects and all the vast powers and all the vast expenditures which this Government is undertaking in this country and overseas. We have no really accurate idea of how much money we are spending overseas, or what we are committed to spend. I am sure that it is all in some records somewhere, but what man among us has ever had a chance to see all the records and to make all the computations? It is generally known that the General Accounting Office, which until lately had little or no control over the more than 100 Government corporations, is years behind in its auditing work. It will be years behind, probably, for a good many years to come. It has been narrated that the financial accounting of that gargantuan fiscal monster, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, is in a hopeless state of confusion.

Let us not, as Members of the Congress, "pass the buck" and smugly attempt to divest ourselves of our responsibility for the creation of this intoxicated spending. As a member of the Committee on Appropriations, I have been impressed with the inefficiency of our system of handling our Government's fiscal program. The routine, as I have observed it, is as follows:

The several branches of our Government submit their proposed needs to the Bureau of the Budget, an executive agency which passes upon them and attempts to coordinate them with the total needs of the Government and the probable revenues. The requests are then divided into about a score of appropriation bills, and are submitted first to the House of Representatives. There they are passed on by separate appropriation subcommittees. The over-all total demand is immediately lost sight of. The House subcommittee hear the arguments of the representatives of the departments in support of their requests, makes such changes as they deem wise, and sometimes they make changes which they judge politically expedient. The several bills are reported to the House separately, and they are usually passed according to the committee recommendations.

The bills then come to the Senate, where they go through a similar procedure, except the Senate subcommittees pay little attention to the items which the House passed without change from the estimates. They hear the arguments of the representatives of the departments as to why amounts reduced by the House should be restored to the amounts approved by the Bureau of the Budget, and the Senate subcommittees usually accede, either in considerable amount or entirely, to the departments' requests. The subcommittee reports are then approved almost perfunctorily by the full committee, and the bills are passed by the Senate with little change from the committee report, except for additional appropriations requested by members of the Senate. The bills that are passed by the two bodies are reconciled by a conference committee, in old-fashioned horse-trading style, with the net result that about 95 percent of the items are enacted as originally asked for by the departments, with little consideration as to where the Public Treasury is to get the money.

This outmoded and loose system can be improved by the establishment of a congressional bureau of the budget which will be composed of a staff of experts who can investigate the requests of the Departments of the Government, independently of any executive agency. Joint House and Senate hearings can be held in which there will be mutual agreement on the basis of what is wise for the Congress to allow, rather than on the basis of what the several Departments want in order to carry out their numberless schemes.

Another reform that must be brought about, if the people are aware of what is good for them, is embodied in the amendment to the Constitution which I have proposed, which would restrict Federal expenditures in any fiscal year to Federal income in the same fiscal year. We have not had an administration in power in this country for 14 years whose leader believed that it was bad—and it is bad—to spend more money than the Government takes in.

Already, as every observant man knows, in the process of creating our huge national debt we have caused real inflation, we have seen the purchasing power of the dollar drop regularly for 14 long years—and the worst is yet to come. Lately, we spent many, many days discussing and disputing about methods of fixing prices to control inflation. During all the time we were debating about the symptoms of inflation, and gave no consideration to the cause of the malady. Price control is a hopeless effort so long as we do not make any serious progress toward reducing our deficit spending.

All the inflation we are having and the inflation we will experience is due to the unsound fiscal policies—policies made by men who believed, or pretended to believe, that the amount of deficit spending made little difference in the purchasing power of the dollar. Now, of course, those men are all denying, or forgetting to recall, their wild statements of other years. The economic chickens are coming home to roost.

When the people learn that it is impossible to get something for nothing, and to spend their way out of an unsound economic situation, we will overcome our present economic difficulties. If we do overcome them, it will be by work and more work on the part of all our people. We cannot have more goods for everybody without producing more goods. It is not possible by any law of God or nature that we could solve our problems any other way. All the records of history teach us this elemental economic fact; but there are still those who believe that they can enrich the people by impoverishing the Government.

All these statements, of course, merely point up to the growth of the government into big government, the growth of huge business combines into gigantic billion-dollar monopolies, the growth of labor unions into vertically integrated organizations that can stop every train, plug every oil well, or close down every meat-packing plant.

So far as I am concerned, I would advise the young men and women of this Nation to be vigilant against threats to their liberty from these three sources—big government, big business, and big labor. None of these is bad, per se. There are many men who work for big government and believe in big government who are righteous, honorable men and whose motives are of the highest. There are many men who work for big business and believe in big business who are unselfish by temperament and broadminded of outlook. There are many men who are connected with big labor and believe in big labor, who have the welfare of the whole people at heart. There are all kinds of men in all kinds of businesses, unions, and government agencies. I could not truthfully indict a whole government, a whole economic system, or a whole union movement and retain my intellectual integrity.

Yet, in each of these big things, Mr. President, there is inherently a threat against the liberties of all the people. If government becomes big enough and powerful enough, and if the kind of men who want to pervert that government can get in control, the people as a whole suffer, as they have suffered. If business becomes dominant and a few men want to let "the public be damned," then the people suffer, as they have suffered in days gone by. If labor becomes big and powerful enough, and men choose to misuse that power, the people suffer, as they have suffered.

That is why I say, Mr. President, the people of the United States ought to be vigilant eternally—not just today and tomorrow, but next week and next year and in 1956 as in 1946.

My observations of government have caused me to marvel again at the ingenious theory on which our representative republic was formed—a system which has given more protection to minorities, more freedom to the greatest number of people, and promoted the highest plane of living and the broadest dissemination of education that history has ever known. The very keystone of this representative republic—and I repeat for emphasis the words, "representative republic"—has been the preservation of the three great separate and coordinate branches of the Government, namely, the legislative, the judicial, and the executive. Mere artificial separation of these three bodies is as pernicious as it is deadly to a republican government such as ours. If one of these branches presumes to exercise control of another, or if one of the bodies is obligated to the other, the whole governmental structure becomes unbalanced. And if two branches of the Government become subordinate, or obligated to the third, we are in danger of losing liberty itself.

This has happened in a great measure, I am loath to admit, in the past decade and a half. As we know, the majority of the personnel of one great branch of our Government, the Supreme Court, has been under definite obligation to another great branch, the executive, a particular executive of a particular party. That is bad and the people ought to know that it is bad and to understand why it is bad. At the same time, to a far greater degree than the safety of representative government allows, huge legislative powers have been delegated to the executive under the excuse of an emergency, and the personnel of the Congress itself at times has been obligated to the executive. The huge sums of money and the huge grants of power voted to the executive made this almost inevitable.

Such a condition ought not to exist in any degree at any time. It is an unhealthy condition for our form of government, and our early endeavor should be to redefine the limits of the three separate branches of our Government and insist that they operate within those limits.

We should not condone any watering-down of our concepts of representative government, for by so doing we but multiply the miseries of our children and plant the seeds of destruction for our Government itself.

I cannot help but devote a word or two to the Communist menace in America, Mr. President. When, more than a decade ago, Dr. William Wirt, an Indiana educator, made his revelations that there were men in Washington who wanted to make over America, he was ridiculed by many New Dealers, held up to public scorn by the Democratic majority in a congressional committee, and made to appear to be stupid and naive. Yet, as we know, time has shown that there is a Communist menace in America, just as there is a Communist fifth column in every nation. They have flourished in Washington in the war years, to my personal knowledge, and only men who were either traitors to America or blind to the menace of communism would have allowed to develop the powerful fifth column which may be found among us. It is to be regretted that the situation had become so bad that recently we had to vote to the Secretary of State the power to remove a man from office without hearing, but the need for such action so outweighed other considerations that it had to be done.

In Chicago a short time ago, Attorney General Clark declared:

> None but a complete crackpot could be deluded by what is going on.

He then added:

> We know there is a national and international conspiracy to divide our people, to discredit our institutions, and to bring about disrespect for our Government. Why should we blind ourselves to obvious facts?

Let us hope and pray that some constitutional American method can be devised in the future to keep Communists out of positions of power in government, business, labor, or in any other vital field of endeavor in this Nation. But, more than that, let every true American turn a deaf ear to those who would adulterate our great system with Fascist or Communist ideas borrowed from discredited nations. If these ideas are allowed to multiply without fear, we will be allowing a cancer to eat away our most precious heritage.

And now the final fundamental problem which should give concern to all our American people after the economical and idealogical problems have been solved is the spiritual and moral caliber of America. There is something wrong terribly wrong, with a Nation that annually spends a total or six or seven billion dollars for intoxicating liquors. That is more than the assessed value of all the church property, including church buildings, hospitals, schools, and camps in the United States. Think of it, Mr. President, our people are spending as much each year for intoxicating liquors as all the church-going people of America have been able to preserve in church property and improvements in the last 170 years. Such an amazing fact should give every man pause. This is not only the concern of the moralist and the preacher and the educator; it must be the concern of the Government itself.

FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover said recently:

> The Nation is facing a potential army of 6,000,000 criminals and an ever-increasing wave of lawlessness which is feeding the criminal ranks with a never-ending supply of recruits. The crime increase so far this year is even greater than 12.4 percent increase recorded for 1945. And every 20.1 seconds last year a serious crime was committed; every 6.4 minutes someone was raped, feloniously assaulted, or slain.

Hoover stressed that the—

> Vast army—

Of criminals—

> is 10 times greater in number than the number of students in our colleges and universities. And for every school teacher in America there are more than seven criminals.

Continuing, Mr. Hoover said:

> Small crimes generally precede great crimes and too often these small crimes are perpetrated by youngsters still presumably under home influence. Every home in America must become a sanctuary for good citizenship and not, as in many instances today, a breeding place for criminals * * *.
> Rather than indulge in criticism of our youth today, our first job should be to set for them an example to follow in model homes where the tenets of good citizenship, the precepts of right, and the fundamentals of democracy are not only taught but daily practiced.

Statistics show that one out of five marriages in America ends in divorce; that the age of 17 is charged with the greatest number of crimes. These facts support Mr. Hoover's indictments.

Mr. President, disturbing as are these evidences of moral delinquency in our country, there is a situation confronting us today which is far more appalling. America, in her proud position of leadership, asserting that this position is a fruitage of our form of free government, stands humiliated before the nations of the world in the present-day revelations of criminal turpitude in the heart of our Government itself. The miserable machinations of men who have sought to profit by war have been eclipsed by the exposure of evidence that huge business corporations have supplied to our military forces defective shells because of which scores of American boys, fighting for our Republic have been cruelly murdered. These criminals must be run to earth and when their guilt has been established they ought to be brought before a firing squad and executed as traitors. No figurative slap on the wrist will justify the authorities in letting such men prey upon the blood of our finest youth.

These sad indictments, Mr. President, reveal the terrible devastations which war, releasing the basest human passions and hatreds, has wrought in the moral resources of our country. If our Nation is to justify its position of leadership in the world, indeed, if it is to survive at home as a free nation, there will have to be a moral and spiritual reconversion in America. This is not only the concern of the moralist and the preacher and the educator; it must be the concern of the Government itself.

Mr. President, I have tried to sketch the problems confronting our Government as they have been impressed upon me in the nearly 6 years I have sat in this body. I trust they will not be construed as the cynical observations of a pessimist, for pessimism is far from my nature. I want them to be considered as a calm analysis of a realist. Our citizens ought to be happier today than ever in history, considering one fact and one fact alone—the war is over, and we are still a free people. Yet there never has been a time when plain, free Americans who are not under suspicion of any crime and have no cause to feel alarmed, have been more alarmed and suspicious and mentally regimented than right now.

Why are our people afraid? What are they afraid of? Some of them are afraid for their savings. Millions of Americans who have saved $1,000 or $2,000 are wondering how much longer the present inflation will continue and how much worse it will grow. They have long since lost interest in, or respect for, men who talk about holding a fictitious price line while doing the very thing that is causing more inflation—spending huge sums of Federal money without regard to Federal income. Some of our people are afraid for our system of government. They know that there is a small, but powerful, group of Communists operating in this country and they know that for years these Communists were petted and feted and welcomed by the highest officer of this land. They know that many Communist sympathizers were able to worm their way into powerful positions in the Government and that many of them are still there, waiting to grab power if ever the propitious moment arrives.

As I have observed Washington, and the movements of our various leaders, Mr. President, I have come to understand why others of my colleagues have become disillusioned or have been willing to throw in the towel in the fight for good government. We have reached a point in this country in which there is widespread confusion about not only who is to blame for what has been done, but about what proper steps we ought to take to solve the many problems which face us. Those on the left wing continue to preach more and more government control. Those on the right wing continue to agitate for more and more freedom for big business. Those in the labor unions who hold more power continue to consolidate their hold on millions of laboring men. As I see it, the only hope for the United States lies in our free press, and in our free radio, in our school system, and in our churches. If these four great avenues of expression and means of education could be used to enlighten our people instead of being used, as they so frequently are, to confuse our people, then representative government could be saved. Unless the millions of our citizens who stand to lose everything from the capture of our Government by either big business, big government, or big labor forces are awakened to the peril, then we cannot save representative government.

For whenever we give over to Government the power to do the things the people should do for themselves, then through the course of years the Government becomes all powerful and people lose both the desire and the capacity to govern themselves. Through such an erosion eventually freedom is destroyed. When freedom is lost it becomes the pearl of greatest price for which men are again willing to lay down their lives.

We, the people, must study liberty and be vigilant for the liberty of others as much as we are for ourselves lest some day we awaken to find that by the processes of encroachment the forces which would negate our liberties have gained complete control. I am reminded, in this connection, of a little poem which aptly illustrates the attitude of the so-called average man:

Thus freedom now so seldom wakes
The only throb she gives
Is when some heart indignant breaks,
To show that still she lives.

Mr. President, the state of this Nation is good, the heart of this Nation is sound, the spirit of this Nation is strong, the faith of this Nation is eternal; therefore pessimism cannot long thrive in this atmosphere of freedom.

One evening recently I mingled with the great crowds gathered on the plaza of the Capitol to listen to the inspiring concert given by the United States Marine Band under the leadership of Captain Santelman. Hundreds of people sat on the lawn, on the benches, in parked automobiles, and more than a thousand were massed on the broad steps leading to the Capitol. At the close of the concert the audience, which had been entranced at the sweetness of the music, rose as one person at the opening chord of the music of the National Anthem, The Star-Spangled Banner. They stood at solemn attention and joined with the band in singing the words, which seemed to come from the heart of that great group. On top of the Capitol steps, on the right, at the base of the statue of Christopher Columbus, stood two sailors, straight, stalwart, with their arms raised in salute. At the left, on the base of the statue depicting the brave pioneer American protecting his family, stood two soldiers, likewise posed in military attention.

The grouping was so perfect that it seemed as if planned, but it was the spontaneous response of loyal American citizens. Above all of them, surmounting the templed entrance to the Capitol, the American flag unfolded itself proudly on the evening breezes, and above all rose the majestic white dome of the Capitol, surmounted by its staute of freedom, like a cameo chiseled by the flood of light out of the midnight blue of the sky. It was a scene which would have allayed the fears of the most confirmed pessimist, for this Capitol Building with its great dome seemed to be more than a structure of marble and stone. It seemed to be a living temple of freedom—of human emotions and human aspirations and true Americanism.

I knew, then, that all of you who are toiling here have faith that we can carry on the great work which our fathers began a century and a half ago. Yes; the faith of America is eternal, and we recite it again in the words of Henry Wadsworth Longfellow:

Thou, too, sail on, O Ship of State!
Sail on, O Union, strong and great!
Humanity with all its fears,
With all the hopes of future years,
Is hanging breathless on thy fate!

We know what Master laid thy keel,
What workmen wrought thy ribs of steel,
Who made each mast, and sail, and rope,
What anvils rang, what hammers beat,
In what a forge and what a heat
Were shaped the anchors of thy hope!

Fear not each sudden sound and shock;
'Tis of the wave, and not the rock,
'Tis but the flapping of the sail,
And not a rent made by the gale!

In spite of rock and tempest's roar,
In spite of false lights on the shore,
Sail on, nor fear to breast the sea!
Our hearts, our hopes, are all with thee,
Our hearts, our hopes, our prayers, our tears,
Our faith triumphant o'er our fears,
Are all with thee—are all with thee.

ENTRY OF 100,000 JEWISH REFUGEES INTO PALESTINE

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, once again I raise my voice on an issue foremost on the list of humanity's unfinished business.

It was a great moment when President Truman a year ago recommended that 100,000 Jewish victims of Nazi terror, a surviving remnant of the Jews of Europe, should immediately be admitted to Palestine. It has since been fully confirmed that the bulk of them want to go to Palestine where they can, at long last, find among their own people that rest and that kindness which has so long been denied them.

What has become of that recommendation of the President? Instead of acting upon it as we all hoped they would, the British Government insisted that before these survivors could be admitted to Palestine, there would have to be an official inquiry into their condition and the conditions of Palestine. Many valuable months were lost. When the report of the Committee of Inquiry was published, it turned out that the British and the American members had unanimously proposed what President Truman had suggested last year, namely, that 100,000 of these Jewish refugees should be admitted to Palestine within the year 1946. But again, no action followed. All kinds of delaying tactics were adopted by the British to frustrate the fulfillment of this unanimous recommendation of the Anglo-American Committee. The Government of the United States sent a delegation of experts to London to work out the technical details for the reception and absorption of these newcomers in Palestine. We understand that they were instructed to regard this as their primary task. Now we learn that contrary to all the earlier statements and understandings, the issue of the 100,000 has been tied up with the solution of the Palestine political problem in general—a very complex issue as we all know. The fate of the 100,000 has been jeopardized afresh.

Under this scheme, they will be admitted to Palestine only if the British and American Governments first agree on this federation scheme for Palestine and if, after that, both the Jews and Arabs accept it.

Now it is perfectly clear that this means that the admission of the 100,000 is shelved indefinitely, for there is not the remotest chance of this scheme being accepted by all concerned. The Arabs alone, by refusing to agree to it, can prevent the granting of these 100,000 certificates. As the New York Times correspondent in Paris put it, "This represents a radical departure from the previous American policy enunciated most emphatically by the President himself, under which the United States was pressing for a start on immigration regardless of whether a long-term policy for Palestine could be formulated at this time."

I find it inconceivable that our Government should consent to such a procedure. I find it inconceivable that they should agree to these unfortunate people being held for a further length of time in those impossible camps in Germany where their mental and physical conditions are deteriorating from week to week, and where the growing tension is producing most unpleasant incidents.

I will not take the time of the Senate at this point to go into details on this federation's scheme. Of all schemes yet proposed, this is by all means the worst. It is a farce to speak of self-governing provinces, when finance and security are withdrawn from the competence of the provincial authorities and vested in the hands of the British central power. There is no self-government when the British Viceroy appoints the ministers, has a veto on all legislation, and can abolish the provincial self-government as a whole or in part whenever he wants to. As far as the Jews are concerned, it is clear that this scheme is designed to stop all further Jewish development, to keep the Jews restricted to a small pale or ghetto area one-thirtieth the size of Palestine. In fact, this plan means the continuation of the infamous white-paper regime, which was set up in Palestine in 1939 and which prevented Palestine from offering refuge to the Jews of Europe when they needed that refuge most urgently.

To tie up the admission of 100,000 Jewish refugees to this kind of a scheme would be an unspeakable mockery.

For almost 20 years I have had the honor of being a Member of this body, where all of us are striving to serve our country faithfully and to uphold its principles at home and abroad.

This British plan, Mr. President, is a deceitful device to stifle the hopes of a long-suffering people, even though it pretends to be a reasonable compromise on the surface. It is a plan which is contrary to the platform pledges of my party and the opposition party. It is contrary to what a majority of the Members of both Houses asked for in letters to the President and, quite recently, in a formal congressional resolution. It is contrary to international law, justice, and good faith.

I find it difficult to understand how any official representatives of the American Government abroad have agreed even to consider seriously such a plan.

It is probably due to their lack of knowledge of the subject and to vague instructions. But there is only one course left to our Government, and that is clearly and emphatically to reject the plan and decline to give American sanction to the plan. The admission of the 100,000 should proceed immediately, without conditions and delays, in line with President Truman's earlier recommendation. And when the time comes to decide the future of Palestine—perhaps soon, before the United Nations—the only plan to which our country can consent is a plan that would fulfill sacred promises, not deprive a homeless people of their national home.

I am second to none in my love for my country, be it right or wrong, but with all my power I appeal to the President, to all those with authority in this vital matter, to put my country in the right.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I wish to associate myself with the remarks of the senior Senator from New York in regard to the Palestine situation. I think he is to be commended for the contribution which he has made in the speech which he has delivered this afternoon on that very important subject.

PROHIBITION OF POLL TAX IN FEDERAL ELECTIONS

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 7) making unlawful the requirement for the payment of a poll tax as a prerequisite to voting in a primary or other election for national officers.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I wanted to take the floor this afternoon, but was detained throughout the greater part of the day in connection with the work of the Senate Committee Investigating the Nation's Defense Efforts. I desired to say something in connection with the cloture petition which will come to a vote shortly after the Senate convenes tomorrow. I have heard an intimation about inability to muster a quorum. I know that is not so. I hope my colleagues will remain in the city, that a quorum will be present, and that we will have an opportunity to vote on the bill. I trust that cloture will be adopted and that we will then have the opportunity of proceeding to a full discussion of the bill, to the adoption of amendments to the bill, and to the passage of the bill itself.

Mr. President, similar bills have been before Congress for 7 years, and have been acted upon on numerous occasions by the committees of the House and of the Senate. The pending bill was passed by the House of Representatives by a very pronounced majority. The situation in the Senate should be no different. However, because of the rules of the Senate it has received consideration by the committee only. On several occasions the proper committee has considered such a bill. The committee has reported the bill to the Senate, but on one or two occasions we have been stymied in bringing the bill up for a full and free discussion because of the rules of the Senate.

Mr. President, I hope that on tomorrow we will be able to bring the bill before the Senate. I am going to urge those who voted against cloture before to give consideration to the timeliness of this proposed legislation and to give consideration to its appropriateness and to the necessity for it as a result of our situation here at home and because of our leadership in the world.

Mr. President, it is time for us to act on this legislation, because we are endeavoring to interest the nations of the world in our democratic principle of government. We are attempting—and rightfully so—to assume a high degree of world leadership. If we are for the spread of democracy abroad, the finest and most effective way to bring that about is to encourage the spread of democracy at home. There are a great many democratic nations in the world, some in which suffrage is restricted to large groups, others in which suffrage is universal, where the privilege of voting is widespread and unlimited. Australia is an example of the true type of representative democracy which we should encourage here in the United States. In Australia there is a poll tax, but it is a poll tax in reverse. The man who pays the tax is the man who fails to discharge his patriotic duty of voting. There are other nations wherein no poll tax exists, either to prevent voting or to encourage it, but where all the people, including men and women of more youthful age than is the case in this country, are encouraged to vote. There are other countries where suffrage is even more restricted than it is in this country.

In this critical period in the world's history, with America endeavoring to influence the nations of the world toward the adoption of its principles of government, it seems to me that it is our duty to eliminate, so far as we are able, unfair, unfortunate, and unpatriotic restrictions and to give the people of our country to the very fullest degree the right to exercise their suffrage.

Mr. President, the passage of the pending legislation will grant to 10,000,000 of our people the right to vote without paying a poll tax. It will free from this handicap and limitation 7,000,000 white and 3,000,000 colored people. Moreover, it will stimulate interest in government. It will make for better citizenship. It will bring about more intense representation on the part of elected officials. That will result in better housing for those who deserve it by reason of the fact that their housing conditions are among the worst in the country. It will bring about better health conditions for those whose death and disease rates are the highest in the country. It will bring about better educational opportunities by reason of the fact that people who have been denied the right of an education will have representation, which will result from their enjoying the suffrage which they so rightfully deserve.

Mr. President, millions of our people cannot vote for these things, and by reason of that fact they are not receiving the representation to which they are justly entitled. It is a strange situation that of the 10,000,000 people denied the right to vote, hundreds of thousands of them were given the privilege of serving in the recent emergency. It occurs to me that if a man has the right and privilege of baring his breast for his country in battle, he merits the right to cast his ballot for the men and women who will represent him in his National Government.

Mr. President, I wished to take the floor briefly today to urge my colleagues to be here tomorrow. I appeal to them to join with us in the adoption of the cloture rule so that we may proceed with the consideration of the bill and set a forthright example for the world to follow.

In giving to the Philippine people their independence America increased and intensified its leadership among the nations of the world. But to give its own citizens, the men and women who serve it well, the right to full, free, and complete citizenship within the confines of our own country would be in my judgment a more effective message to the world. It would mean that we not only stand for democracy abroad, but grant it as a right to our own people at home.

So, Mr. President, I hope that the cloture rule will be adopted tomorrow, and that we can proceed with the consideration of this measure.

EMPLOYMENT FOR VETERANS

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks a press release by the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States relating to Senate bill 2323, which is a veterans' bill introduced by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TUNNELL] for himself, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. BRIGGS], and myself. Although the bill is pending before the Senate, time will not permit sufficient consideration of it for a vote before final adjournment. I hope that the committee to which the bill has been referred will proceed at an early date to hold hearings on it, because I know of no legislation on veterans' welfare now pending before the Senate of the United States which is more deserving of early consideration after the Congress reconvenes than Senate bill 2323.

There being no objection, the release was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Declaring there has been too much conversation about jobs for veterans and too little action, Commander in Chief Joseph M. Stack, Pittsburgh, Pa., of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, today directed Omar B. Ketchum, director of the VFW national legislative service, to urge the Congress take early and favorable action on the Veterans' Employment and National Economic Development Corporation Act of 1946, which has been introduced by several Senators and House Members.

The act is designed to provide new jobs and new opportunities for veterans rather than the displacement of workers already engaged in American production, Commander Stack said.

Commander Stack conferred with Representative BERNARD W. KEARNEY, Republican, New York, past commander in chief of the VFW and chairman of its welfare and service committee and one of the sponsors of the act in the House of Representatives, and Robert K. Christenberry, New York City, chairman of the VFW national legislative committee, in New York, July 5. Following the conference Stack urged the VFW 2,000,000 membership and 8,000 local organizations to swing in behind the legislation.

The two VFW committees have had the proposed "veterans' RFC" under close and thorough study for several months.

"It was pointed out by General Bradley, Veterans' Administrator, on June 10, that 4,000,000 veterans will be unemployed next fall unless new jobs continue to be created," Commander Stack said. "General Bradley also pointed out that 'it is time we stopped indulging in the sacrifices of veterans and worked harder instead to fulfill their wants. It is time we took stock of the promises we made while they were overseas. The Veterans' Administration with its GI provisions can offer only a narrow foothold to veterans. Although jobs are the No. 1 issue, our Administration is limited to helping veterans with only training for jobs.'"

The bill, S. 2323, was introduced into the United States Senate by Senators TUNNELL, Democrat, Delaware; GUFFEY, Democrat, Pennsylvania; BRIGGS, Democrat, Missouri; WALSH, Democrat, Massachusetts; and MORSE, Republican, Oregon. Three identical bills are before the House of Representatives. They were introduced by Representative KEARNEY, Republican, New York; Representative SPENCE, Democrat, Kentucky, chairman of the House Banking and Currency Committee; and Representative KEFAUVER, Democrat, Tennessee.

Senator TUNNELL in introducing the bill said:

"The emergency (veterans employment outlook) is alarming. Believe it or not, but at this hour there are nearly 2,500,000 veterans claiming unemployment compensation. The number drawing unemployment compensation is expected to increase, as there are 1,500,000 more men who will be discharged shortly from the armed forces. On account of the time that they have lost in war service, veterans will have greater difficulty getting into and staying in business than the average businessman and professional person. More than 7,000,000 veterans have no reemployment rights under the law. Of these, 4,000,000 had no occupation of any consequence before they entered military service and have no particular job to return to now. There are more than 350,000 disabled veterans of World War II who have registered for employment but can't find it. However, experience shows that the majority of disabled veterans can be trained in gainful competitive occupations if the economic opportunity is opened for them."

Provisions of the bills include:

1. Creation of a corporate entity charged with direct responsibility of promoting the interests of veterans who are unemployed, veterans who had no employment prior to war service, veterans who have no particular occupation, disabled veterans, the dependents of disabled veterans and the dependents of those who gave their lives to preserve our country.

2. To utilize wartime and unused facilities and surpluses throughout the Nation and abroad that are suitable and can be employed profitably to afford opportunities for unemployed veterans.

3. To create profitable businesses, professional and occupational self-sufficient opportunities for veterans toward reducing to a minimum the need for unemployment compensations and bonuses.

4. To foster an ever-expanding economy and prosperity toward preserving our system of government, our freedoms, and our national security by utilizing fully our veterans who were selected from the cream of the crop of American manhood and womanhood.

5. To assist qualified veterans engaged in useful and profitable enterprises, services, professions, or trades in other countries, thereby cultivating those countries to become increasingly our customers and friends.

6. To stimulate profitable activity and to attract investment of private risk capital in enterprises within marginal areas in industry, agriculture, service trades, transportation, education, foreign trade and in scientific fields toward increasing employment of veterans.

7. To assist State community, and private agencies in financing self-liquidating projects which will utilize profitably the services of unemployed veterans.

8. To stimulate enterprises and projects where gainful work opportunities, occupational therapy, and self-reliant careers will be opened to disabled veterans.

9. To invite public subscription to the funds of the Corporation in order that the people of the Nation will be partners in this enterprise.

10. To stimulate the maximum utilization and development of abundant natural resources in all geographical areas within the United States, its Territories and possessions, so as to afford opportunities for veterans and to enrich the Nation.

11. To facilitate the establishment of necessary, useful, and profitable new enterprises in the various communities of the Nation that will insure the veterans against unemployment in recessions or depressions and to assure the fullest possible development of all our Nation's peacetime resources to stimulate an ever-expanding base of our national economy for the increasing benefit of all our people.

The bill includes the further provision that:

"Nothing contained in this act shall be construed to authorize the Corporation created under section 5 of the act to itself engage in the operation of any plant, facility, or other business undertaking."

This legislation, VFW spokesmen pointed out, is emergency legislation to the same extent that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation or the Smaller War Plants Corporation were emergency measures. It is sound as they were sound. It is the first concrete legislation offered as a solution for an increasingly alarming condition within the Nation.

The veteran is always at the end of the employment line—we want to avoid his being in the bread line—because the expansion of war plants and production within the Nation during war years has resulted in a vast pool of manpower with rights to jobs ahead of the veterans' rights, the VFW continued.

Added to that, we are faced with technological advancement which is capable of eliminating much manpower from our great industries. This advancement alone is capable of throwing out of employment millions of men. The majority will be veterans because of the seniority afforded those who have been employed before and during the war years.

At the same time the Nation's economy is unbalanced. There is a ready market for all of the products of our industries. The big job is to get the products into stores, shops, and consumer markets. The Nation has hundreds of war surplus plants and facilities which could be geared into the overall production. Veterans need business opportunities, jobs, and financing. This Nation holds some 40,000 captured enemy patents and secret processes which could provide a vast pool of opportunity in large and small ways for the veterans in business.

"We agree with the President of the United States when he said recently that he would rather see a thousand small plants than one mammoth industrial steel or automobile company," a VFW spokesman said. "We believe that the veterans of all wars are better off living in a free economy with freedom of access to the means to make them free. We do not believe that a class system exists within this Nation and we are striving to prevent human displacements and lack of opportunity from breeding class strife. Veterans are not theorists or dreamers. They have traveled the world, fought for ideals and the human instinct of self-preservation. They are not radicals. They have been sobered. Nor are they reactionaries. They are realists—made so by the hard way of life, experience, travel, and sacrifice.

"This legislation could uncover the vast amount of leadership now dormant within millions of veterans. It could instill this needed leadership into the life-lines of America, which, because we are a commercial Nation, will mean our continued leadership in a chaotic world.

"New frontiers are the stimulant which this Nation above all else requires. Our frontiers must be in business and expansion from now on. Veterans need that hope which should spring eternal in the human breast. We must do away with good wishes and half-hearted promises and face the economic facts of the situation. Why should this Nation not undertake the creation of new frontiers within and without? After each war, which the members of the Veterans of Foreign Wars are well acquainted with, we have had new frontiers. After other American wars, the veterans have opened up these frontiers. The veterans who returned from the War of 1812 opened up the plains beyond St. Louis. Veterans of the Civil War built Western railroads and developed the mountain valleys along the Pacific seaboard. The veterans of World War II have no remaining frontier in the old sense. But they have a far greater frontier in the new sense—a business frontier, a technological frontier, an industrial frontier, and a vast new frontier in overseas trade.

"On the Fourth of July a new nation was born out in the Pacific. The Philippines are a new unified, independent nation today because of American aid, understanding, and sacrifice. What has happened in the Philippines could be accomplished with other Pacific nations," the VFW said. "China offers a great opportunity for the people of America for at least two decades. Veterans could help build and modernize a new China and in so doing would create an American market beyond the wildest dreams of even our ardent dreamers. Ambassador Wei of China, who has returned to China, recently said that the Government of China would be willing to put in railroads and the necessary public-utility systems. The American technical and business missionary could help them develop all lines of endeavor in between.

"The veterans of all our wars should be encouraged and helped to join in the expansion of American markets throughout the world. They did a great job in preserving world markets for American products during the war years. If another world war is to be averted, surely every housewife and teen-age youngster knows it will be averted by free exchange of goods, knowledge, and good will. The member nations of the United Nations all need leadership and assistance from this Nation. They need other things than a cash loan. They must learn how we accomplish, build, transport, and market. They must learn how to organize and finance those industries which will go toward making them independent and at the same time provide a ready and willing market for the products of American industry.

"We need constructive thinking and action at this point. The Veterans of Foreign Wars would rather lead the veterans of the Nation into self-sufficiency than to lead them into the public trough of the United States Treasury. The Veterans Corporation will not cost the taxpayers 1 cent. It will, on the contrary, save the taxpayers many billions of dollars.

"That the veterans of America are capable of carrying their own weight, if given the opportunity, was well demonstrated during the last war and our previous wars. Their talents, energies, brain power, leadership, and character need new outlets. Whatever investment the Nation makes in these men will return manyfold.

"The taxpayers of the Nation should want self-liquidating outlets for veterans, of whom there will soon be 20,000,000. Unemployment compensation for veterans has already cost a billion dollars and this will increase. Bonuses are expensive. Relief rolls are expensive.

"Organized labor in the Nation should welcome a Veterans Corporation which would hold the promise of removing from the unemployed labor force the millions of veterans who are and will be seeking employment.

"American industry and finance should welcome a new outlet for capital, new markets, and expanding prosperity rather than fear a 'boom and bust' economic future.

"Veterans and their families comprise 60 percent of the population in our local communities now. This percentage will grow as young men and women find the economic security permitting marriage and families. The future of the Nation is wrapped up in the veterans of this Nation for the first time in the history of America. These millions of young men, culled by the Army and Navy from the cream of the crop of every community, must be allowed to continue their careers as proud Americans, proud of their own independence and ability to stand on their own feet, proud to follow the ideals of their Nation and its leaders in all branches and strata of American life. This is our best insurance against foreign 'isms.' Ideologies foreign to the thinking and history of the United States will not flourish among constructive, independent, hard-working citizens."

TREATY OF GENERAL RELATIONS AND PROTOCOL BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND THE PHILIPPINES—REMOVAL OF INJUNCTION OF SECRECY FROM TREATY

Mr. CONNALLY. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the injunction of secrecy will be removed from the treaty and it will be published in the RECORD.

The treaty, with accompanying papers, is as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 30, 1946.

(Enclosures: 1. Report of the Secretary of State; 2. Treaty of general relations with Republic of Philippines and protocol.)

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, D. C., July 26, 1946.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House:

The undersigned, the Secretary of State, has the honor to lay before the President, with a view to its transmission to the Senate to receive the advice and consent of that body to ratification, if his judgment approve thereof, the treaty of general relations and protocol between the United States of America and the Republic of the Philippines signed at Manila on July 4, 1946.

History records few instances of the voluntary relinquishment of sovereignty by one nation over another. The present treaty is an example of faith—mutual faith of one government and people in another—faith preserved and strengthened in dark days of struggle against foes of freedom.

For nearly a half century the United States of America exercised sovereign control over the Philippines. During that time it was the constant purpose of the American Government to promote the welfare of the Philippine people to the end that they, at the earliest practicable time, might become free and independent.

An important step toward the granting of Philippine independence took place on August 29, 1916, with the enactment of Public, No. 240, Sixty-fourth Congress (39 Stat. 545), which placed in the hands of the Philippine people rights with respect to the control of their domestic affairs and stated the policy of the people of the United States to be the withdrawal of their sovereignty over the Philippine Islands and the recognition of Philippine independence upon the establishment of a stable Philippine government.

On March 24, 1934, there was enacted the Tydings-McDuffie act (Public, No. 127, Seventy-third Congress, 48 Stat. 456) providing for the complete independence of the Philippines and for the adoption of a Philippine constitution and form of government. Pursuant to this law a new constitution was framed and duly ratified by the Philippine people. Under this Constitution the Republic of the Philippines was established on July 4, 1946.

The enclosed treaty and protocol signed at Manila on that day do not presage a withdrawal of American interest in the Philippine Government or a severance of the ties binding the American and Philippine peoples. The relationships between the two peoples have shown steady improvement ever since the assumption by the United States of sovereignty over the Philippines. The unity of American and Philippine ideals was demonstrated in the recent war in which the two peoples fought side by side in the cause of liberty. The enclosed treaty represents the end of one era of American-Philippine relations and the commencement of a new era. In that new era the two Governments and peoples will be bound as closely as ever by ties of friendship and mutual trust.

Article I of the treaty provides for the withdrawal and surrender of all right of possession, supervision, jurisdiction, control, or sovereignty existing and exercised by the United States of America in and over the territory and the people of the Philippine Islands, except for the use of such bases as the United States of America, by agreement with the Republic of the Philippines, may deem necessary for mutual protection of the two countries. The United States of America, in Article I of the treaty, recognizes the independence of the Republic of the Philippines as a self-governing nation.

Article II provides for the rights to be accorded by each country to the diplomatic and consular officers of the other country.

Article III relates to the representation by the Foreign Service of the United States, pending the final establishment of Philippine Foreign Service establishments abroad, of the interests of the Republic of the Philippines in countries where there is no Philippine representation.

Article IV pertains to the assumption by the Republic of the Philippines of all debts and liabilities of the Philippine Islands, its provinces, cities, municipalities, and instrumentalities.

Article V provides that all cases at law concerning the Government and people of the Philippines which, in accordance with section 7 (6) of the Independence Act of 1934, are pending before the Supreme Court of the United States of America at the date of the granting of the independence of the Republic of the Philippines shall continue to be subject to the review of the Supreme Court of the United States of America for such period of time after independence as may be necessary to effectuate the disposition of the cases at hand.

Article VI relates to the adjustment and settlement of claims of either Government or its nationals against the other Government. This article provides also for the safeguarding of property rights of each contracting state and its citizens and corporations in the territory of the other contracting state.

Article VII provides for the assumption by the Republic of the Philippines of all continuing obligations assumed by the United States of America under the treaties between the United States of America and Spain concluded on December 10, 1898 and November 7, 1900.

Article VIII provides for the ratification of the present treaty by the United States of America and the Republic of the Philippines and for its entry into force upon the exchange of instruments of ratification at Manila.

The protocol which accompanies the treaty sets forth understandings of the two Governments with respect to the purpose and scope of the treaty. The protocol provides also for the provisional observance of Articles II and III of the treaty.

Respectfully submitted.

EXECUTIVE J, SEVENTY-NINTH CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION—TREATY OF GENERAL RELATIONS BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA AND THE REPUBLIC OF THE PHILIPPINES

The United States of America and the Republic of the Philippines, being animated by the desire to cement the relations of close and long friendship existing between the two countries, and to provide for the recognition of the independence of the Republic of the Philippines as of July 4, 1946 and the relinquishment of American sovereignty over the Philippine Islands, have agreed upon the following articles:

ARTICLE I

The United States of America agrees to withdraw and surrender, and does hereby withdraw and surrender, all right of possession, supervision, jurisdiction, control or sovereignty existing and exercised by the United States of America in and over the territory and the people of the Philippine Islands, except the use of such bases, necessary appurtenances to such bases, and the rights incident thereto, as the United States of America, by agreement with the Republic of the Philippines, may deem necessary to retain for the mutual protection of the United States of America and of the Republic of the Philippines. The United States of America further agrees to recognize, and does hereby recognize, the independence of the Republic of the Philippines as a separate self-governing nation and to acknowledge, and does hereby acknowledge, the authority and control over the same of the Government instituted by the people thereof, under the Constitution of the Republic of the Philippines.

ARTICLE II

The diplomatic representatives of each country shall enjoy in the territories of the other the privileges and immunities derived from generally recognized international law and usage. The consular representatives of each country, duly provided with exequatur, will be permitted to reside in the territories of the other in the places wherein consular representatives are by local laws permitted to reside; they shall enjoy the honorary privileges and the immunities accorded to such officers by general international usage; and they shall not be treated in a manner less favorable than similar officers of any other foreign country.

ARTICLE III

Pending the final establishment of the requisite Philippine Foreign Service establishments abroad, the United States of America and the Republic of the Philippines agree that at the request of the Republic of the Philippines the United States of America will endeavor, in so far as it may be practicable, to represent through its Foreign Service the interests of the Republic of the Philippines in countries where there is no Philippine representation. The two countries further agree that any such arrangements are to be subject to termination when in the judgment of either country such arrangements are no longer necessary.

ARTICLE IV

The Republic of the Philippines agrees to assume, and does hereby assume, all the debts and liabilities of the Philippine Islands, its provinces, cities, municipalities and instrumentalities, which shall be valid and subsisting on the date hereof. The Republic of the Philippines will make adequate provision for the necessary funds for the payment of interest on and principal of bonds issued prior to May 1, 1934 under authority of an Act of Congress of the United States of America by the Philippine Islands, or any province, city or municipality therein, and such obligations shall be a first lien on the taxes collected in the Philippines.

ARTICLE V

The United States of America and the Republic of the Philippines agree that all cases at law concerning the Government and people of the Philippines which, in accordance with Section 7 (6) of the Independence Act of 1934, are pending before the Supreme Court of the United States of America at the date of the granting of the independence of the Republic of the Philippines shall continue to be subject to the review of the Supreme Court of the United States of America for such period of time after independence as may be necessary to effectuate the disposition of the cases at hand. The contracting parties also agree that following the disposition of such cases the Supreme Court of the United States of America will cease to have the right of review of cases originating in the Philippine Islands.

ARTICLE VI

In so far as they are not covered by existing legislation, all claims of the Government of the United States of America or its nationals against the Government of the Republic of the Philippines and all claims of the Government of the Republic of the Philippines and its nationals against the Government of the United States of America shall be promptly adjusted and settled. The property rights of the United States of America and the Republic of the Philippines shall be promptly adjusted and settled by mutual agreement, and all existing property rights of citizens and corporations of the United States of America in the Republic of the Philippines and of citizens and corporations of the Republic of the Philippines in the United States of America shall be acknowledged, respected and safeguarded to the same extent as property rights of citizens and corporations of the Republic of the Philippines and of the United States of America respectively. Both Governments shall designate representatives who may in concert agree on measures best calculated to effect a satisfactory and expeditious disposal of such claims as may not be covered by existing legislation.

ARTICLE VII

The Republic of the Philippines agrees to assume all continuing obligations assumed by the United States of America under the Treaty of Peace between the United States of America and Spain concluded at Paris on the 10th day of December, 1898, by which the Philippine Islands were ceded to the United States of America, and under the Treaty between the United States of America and Spain concluded at Washington on the 7th day of November, 1900.

ARTICLE VIII

This Treaty shall enter into force on the exchange of instruments of ratification.

This Treaty shall be submitted for ratification in accordance with the constitutional procedures of the United States of America and of the Republic of the Philippines; and instruments of ratification shall be exchanged and deposited at Manila.

Miss Zelda Wolf.

Mr. A. T. A. Dobson (United Kingdom) was invited to preside over the Conference, and Mr. A. M. Lowe and Miss U. Borenius (United Kingdom), assisted by a member of the United States of America Delegation, acted as Secretaries.

The object of the Conference was to consider what special measures should be put in force by agreement in respect of the whaling season 1946/47. All the Governments represented at the Conference were parties or signatories to the International Agreement for the Regulation of Whaling signed at London on the 8th June 1937.

The Conference having heard a statement on behalf of the Minister of Food of the United Kingdom on the present position of world stocks of oils and fats, and the prospects in the near future, came to the conclusion that, so far as whaling is concerned, some special relaxation of the Agreement of 1937 and the Protocol of 1938 was desirable for the season 1946–47.

On the other hand the Conference was impressed with two main considerations. In the first place it was of vital importance to further the conservation of existing whale stocks, which prior to the war were already showing signs of depletion. Secondly, it was of equal importance that any temporary relaxation of the existing regulations should not serve to encourage countries that had not taken part in whaling operations before to enter the industry only to find that ultimately their expeditions might not prove financially profitable.

The Conference had the advantage of perusing a number of papers submitted by the various delegates, and in particular was grateful to the Norwegian Delegation for the very full statistical material relating to the whaling industry as a whole which was of inestimable value.

The Conference adopted at its final meeting the following resolutions:—

(i) "That it is desirable that a Protocol, in the terms of the Annex to this resolution, should be signed and brought into force as soon as possible; that the Government of the United Kingdom is requested to make early arrangements for the signature of this Protocol by duly accredited representatives; that as this Protocol makes certain temporary amendments to the Agreement of 1937, as amended by the Protocol of 1938, all Governments which are parties to those instruments should be invited either to sign the present Protocol or to accede thereto; that Governments which are signatories to the Agreement of 1937 and Protocol of 1938 but have not become parties thereto by ratification should be invited to ratify those instruments and to sign the annexed Protocol or to accede thereto; and that copies of this Final Act and the Annex thereto should be communicated to all such Governments which are not represented at the present Conference and to any other interested Governments."

(ii) "That the Governments parties or signatories to the 1937 Agreement take such measures as may be appropriate to facilitate the exchange of scientific and other data on whales and whaling. The Conference likewise recommends the interchange of exports on whale biology and collaboration among those Governments on research and scientific studies pertaining to whales."

(iii) "That the regulations of the several Governments should provide that (1) the official measurements as required in Article 16 of the 1937 Agreement shall be taken by the inspector when the whale is at rest on deck or platform in accordance with the definition of 'length' in Article 18 of that Agreement, and (2) the other data required by Article 16 shall be verified by the inspector at the time of tally."

The Conference considered a proposal by the Delegation of the United States of America that the contracting Governments should prohibit the sale, loan or delivery of vessels, equipment or supplies designed especially for whaling operations, or known to be intended for such operations, to any Government or the national of any Government not a party or a signatory to the Whaling Agreement of 1937. The Conference, however, was unable, owing to uncertainty as to the necessary legislative powers in the various countries, to include these provisions in the Protocol, but recognizing the vital necessity for this prohibition adopted the following resolution:

(iv) "That the various Governments should take all practicable steps to prohibit the sale, loan or delivery of vessels, equipment or supplies designed especially for whaling operations, or known to be intended for such operations, to any Government or the nationals of any Government not a party or signatory to the Whaling Agreement of 1937."

The Conference also gave consideration to urgent representations by the Norwegian and United Kingdom representatives that as, owing to unforeseen circumstances, certain factory ships would be unable to reach the whaling grounds by the 24th November, 1945, they should be permitted to operate with a full complement of catchers for a continuous period of four months from the date in which they were able to commence operations.

The Conference recognised the vital importance of acquiring all the oil possible during the 1945/46 season, and considered that it would be highly detrimental to world oil supplies if the limited number of expeditions were unable to fish for the full four months owing to circumstances not only beyond their control, but due primarily to the aftermath of the war.

While unable to include any provision on this subject in the Protocol on account of the difficulty of obtaining the necessary ratifications in time for this provision to be effective, the Conference adopted the following resolutions:

(v) "That every effort should be made to overcome the legal difficulties and obtain special authority for the required extension of the 1945/46 season in the case of the particular factory ships which cannot reach the grounds by the opening date."

Done in London the twenty-sixth day of November, 1945, in a single copy which shall be deposited in the archives of the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, and of which certified copies shall be transmitted to all the signatory Governments.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, JULY 30, 1946

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D. D., pastor of the Gunton Temple Memorial Presbyterian Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Most merciful and gracious God, who art our companion and counselor, grant that daily we may walk the highway of life with a firm step which nothing can impede and a splendor of faith which nothing can obscure or extinguish.

Thou knowest how often we stumble and break faith with Thee and our better self. When we bring our lives under the searchlight and scrutiny of Thy divine law, we are filled with a haunting sense of our disobedience to the heavenly vision. Purge us from everything that is contrary to Thy holy will, lest the vision fade and we lose our way in the darkness.

Hear us in our prayer of intercession for all Thy needy children. God forbid that we should sin against the Lord by our failure to minister unto them. May we never be too callous to care, too blind to see, too stupid to understand, and too indifferent to heed their needs. Show us how we may mitigate the miseries and heal the hurt and heartache of mankind. May we never harbor hatred and ill will and any of the negative and poisonous emotions but may we be the heralds of peace and friendship.

Inspire us with the Master's spirit in whose name we pray. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

R. 5991) entitled "An act to simplify and improve credit services to farmers and promote farm ownership by abolishing certain agricultural lending agencies and functions, by transferring assets to the Farmers' Home Corporation, by enlarging the powers of the Farmers' Home Corporation, by authorizing Government insurance of loans to farmers, by creating preferences for loans and insured mortgages to enable veterans to acquire farms, by providing additional specific authority and directions with respect to the liquidation of resettlement projects and rural rehabilitation projects for resettlement purposes, and for other purposes."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CLASON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

[Mr. ELLIS addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. TALBOT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances, in one to include a memorial address and in the other an editorial from the Hartford Courant.

Mr. ROBERTSON of North Dakota asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article by David Lawrence.

Mr. HAGEN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. DONDERO (at the request of Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a letter.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. LUCE] may address the House for 15 minutes tomorrow following the legislative business of the day and the special orders heretofore entered for that day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

VETERAN PRIORITY FOR PURCHASE OF NEW AUTOMOBILES

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, the newspaper accounts of what happened yesterday in the House said there was a filibuster on the floor of the House. As far as I know, everything that was done was done legally but nothing was accomplished.

I am prompted to make these remarks because we could well have put in the time yesterday considering a bill I introduced a few days ago which provides for a preference in the purchase of new automobiles to World War veterans who need those machines either in the conduct of their business or in going to and from work. I have had letters from all over the country, some of them in some detail, pointing out the great hardship that has resulted to the returned veteran because he could not get a machine.

The bill, Mr. Speaker, that I introduced is H. R. 7127, and it has been referred to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

I realize that legislative procedure is complicated and I know the regular rule is to obtain a report from the Department that would administer the law. Such a report would take a lot of time. Congress is about to adjourn but I hope that the administration leaders will find some way in which to pass either this bill, or a bill of similar type which will make it possible to give a preference to veterans of World War II in the purchase of new automobiles. I have a letter from one veteran who tells me that he has been trying to buy a new car for the past 10 months. He put in 5 years in the Army, 3 years of that period was spent overseas. Now that he has been discharged and wants an automobile so he can travel back and forth from his place of work, he finds it impossible to get one. It should not require much argument to demonstrate the fact that as between our civilians who want a new automobile for pleasure purposes on the one hand and veterans of World War II on the other hand who want an automobile for business purposes, there should be a preference in favor of the veterans. I could cite many other cases of veterans who have written me on this subject for the purpose of indicating how beneficial this legislation would be. I hope that some way will be found to give consideration to this problem before Congress adjourns.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

WAGNER-ELLENDER-TAFT HOUSING BILL

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

There was no objection.

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, Governor Edge, of New Jersey, asks for enactment of the Wagner-Ellender-Taft housing bill. I read the following wire just received from the Governor:

STATE HOUSE, Trenton, July 30.

Hon. GORDON CANFIELD,
Member of Congress,
Washington, D. C.:

Emergency housing for veterans on any appreciable scale absolutely impossible without cooperation provided by Wagner-Ellender-Taft bill. Congress must assume major responsibility for continued housing shortage if this assistance is denied.

WALTER E. EDGE,
Governor.

Mayors William P. Furrey, of Paterson, N. J., and Nicholas Martini, of Passaic, N. J., plead for passage and the New York Times calls for action.

We can do the job this week. Let us pass this measure already approved by the Senate.

As one who has signed the discharge petition I urge the House to stay in session until we act on this necessary legislation.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SUNDSTROM asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article by Clarke Daniel entitled "Housing the Needy."

Mr. RICH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article by Henry J. Taylor, entitled "Courage Our National Heritage."

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts asked and was given permission to extend her remarks in the RECORD in two instances, in one to include a radio address made over WWDC last night, in another to include two telegrams from two large tanners in reference to disposition by England of certain skins.

LINDSAY C. WARREN

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I have always had a great admiration for Lindsay Warren, a Jeffersonian Democrat, who is now Comptroller General of the United States. He is the one who is supposed to look after the purse strings of this Nation as our representative. Yesterday he said before the Senate committee:

It looks as if everybody and his brother were out to get the United States Government during the last four war years.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot help but believe there has been much crookedness in the operations of the Government in spending, spending, and spending when you appropriated these great sums of money. I know we were squandering the taxpayers' money. It never should have happened that way. When you squander money like the New Deal has squandered it, crookedness is sure to be prevalent. You will see it cropping out. Just keep up the investigation and you will be shocked, surprised, and chagrined. Teapot Dome will be small in comparison. Let us go get the crooks and traitors of our country.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that today after disposition of matters on the Speaker's table and at the conclusion of any special orders heretofore granted, I may address the House for 1 hour.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentlewoman will state it.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, if the so-called dilatory tactics that went on all day yesterday are continued today, is there any way that the so-called amputees and paraplegic bill can be brought up for action? If we adjourn without action on that measure a great deal of suffering will be caused because these boys need cars at once and they are our combat veterans.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand just what the gentlewoman wants to know.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I want to know if there is any way of getting action on the so-called car bill for the amputees and paraplegics. The so-called dilatory tactics of yesterday interfered with bringing it up and I want to know if that is the proper procedure.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is going to count if a Member makes the point that there is not a quorum present. The Chair assumes that is an answer to the inquiry of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KNUTSON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and to include an article.

THE PARLIAMENTARY SITUATION ON THE BILL FOR CARS FOR SERVICEMEN AMPUTEES

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Speaker, in line with the inquiry propounded by the gentlewoman from Massachusetts in respect to the bill giving cars to amputees, may I ask both the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO] and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN], whether each one will voluntarily today say that he will yield time to bring up this bill or stand aside in the current parliamentary situation and permit this bill for amputees to be called up? Will they stand aside for that single purpose?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULTON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. As far as I am concerned, I certainly will not stand in the way of the amputee bill. They can bring it up now, and I will not press a point of no quorum, and further the RECORD will show that the petition to force consideration of that bill is my petition.

Mr. FULTON. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Mr. RANKIN. Let me say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FULTON] that he needs to familiarize himself with the rules of the House to know how legislation is brought up.

There are three ways in which this bill could be brought up: By unanimous consent, by suspension of the rules, or under a rule from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I have complaints from the American Legion saying that any number of veterans are being refused job training because the unions do not allow an employer to have more than one apprentice for every five journeymen. This House made provision that the honorably discharged soldiers should have this privilege, and we certainly did not anticipate that labor unions would stand in the way. It is high time that some remedial labor legislation is passed by this House. While I know it is too late to do anything in this session, if I am here when the next Congress convenes—and I expect to be—I will do everything I can to help see that the labor unions do not refuse the right to education and the right to learn trades to the ex-servicemen.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SPENCE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a statement regarding a bill he introduced today.

Mr. HOOK asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a radio address he delivered at Marquette, Mich.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

[Mr. HOOK addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.

TERMINAL LEAVE PAY BILL

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House conferees on the bill H. R. 4051 may have until midnight tonight to file a report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, due to the illness of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] and the enforced absence of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BROOKS] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT], I ask unanimous consent that they be excused from service as conferees on the bill H. R. 5626, and that other conferees be appointed in their stead.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Members named by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON] will be excused from service as conferees, and the Chair appoints the following conferees in their place: Messrs. DURHAM, SIKES, and CLASON.

The Clerk will notify the Senate accordingly.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KLEIN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the cancer bill.

Mr. ROONEY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a letter.

Mr. HUBER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. GIBSON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article by Joseph H. Deckman.

Mrs. WOODHOUSE asked and was given permission to extend her remarks in the RECORD and include a release from the American University.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD in two instances. I am informed by the Public Printer that the cost of one extension will be $180, but I ask that it be printed notwithstanding that fact.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, notwithstanding the cost, the extensions may be made.

There was no objection.

DISCHARGE PETITION NO. 3

Mr. KLEIN. Mr. Speaker, my predecessor, the Honorable Samuel Dickstein, signed discharge petition No. 3. I desire to have my name entered on this petition. I ask unanimous consent that his name may be taken off the petition so that I may sign it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

PRINTING OF REPORT OF SUBCOMMITTEE NO. 2 OF THE COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution (H. Res. 745) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Committee on Foreign Affairs 5,000 additional copies of a report of Subcommittee No. 2 of the Committee on Foreign Affairs in connection with the European study trip, August 12 to October 13, 1945.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

[Mr. ROONEY addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday next, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day and following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

There was no objection.

WAGNER-ELLENDER-TAFT HOUSING BILL

Mr. KLEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. KLEIN. Mr. Speaker, yesterday morning the mayor of the city of New York asked the Members of the New York City Democratic delegation to meet with him in connection with the Wagner-Ellender-Taft housing bill. When we got back to Washington, we found that the bill had been killed in committee. This has been due to the opponents of this legislation, mainly those on the Republican side. I hope the President calls a special session so that we may get this vitally needed legislation. We in New York City and veterans all over the country are clamoring for the benefits to be derived from the passage of this bill.

In my district an essential housing project, vitally needed in our slum-clearance program and for much-needed housing, has had to be abandoned due to the fact that the city of New York does not have sufficient funds to carry the plans to conclusion. In the event of a special session, I hope we will get some immediate action on this legislation.

WEST SHORE RAILROAD CO.

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Military Affairs, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2020) granting a right-of-way at a revised location to the West Shore Railroad Co., the New York Central Railroad Co., lessee, across a portion of the military reservation at West Point.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the bill?

Mr. SIKES. I will be glad to comply with the request of my distinguished friend.

The bill, S. 2020, grants a right-of-way to a railroad for a new location across a portion of the West Point military reservation. The trackage has already been moved to the new location under an interim permit. Some question as to the legality of the change has come up. The War Department requests the legislation because the old location is needed for a target range.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SIKES]?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of the United States is hereby given to the relocation requested by the Secretary of War, of the railroad of the West Shore Railroad Co., the New York Central Railroad Co. being the lessee, across the property belonging to the Government at West Point, in the State of New York, and to the maintenance and operation of said railroad upon such relocated line, subject to such conditions and regulations as may be approved by the Secretary of War.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CHURCH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an article appearing in the New York Journal of Commerce of July 29, 1946, headed "The Shipping Outlook" by Stanley Ferguson.

EXPENDITURE OF PUBLIC FUNDS BY EXECUTIVE AGENCIES

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I would respectfully suggest to the membership that at their convenience they examine section 207 of the legislative reorganization bill which passed the House last Thursday. It contains this language:

The Comptroller General is authorized and directed to make an expenditure analysis of each agency in the executive branch of the Government which, in the opinion of the Comptroller General, will enable Congress to determine whether public funds have been economically and efficiently administered and expended.

Mr. Speaker, if that provision had been in the law a few years ago, what is now happening before a certain committee of a certain body in connection with the testimony of the Comptroller General would not be taking place today. The Comptroller would have been armed with the requisite authority to pursue the renegotiation of contracts with vigor and report from time to time to various committees of the Congress with suggestions for remedial action.

TRANSPORTATION FOR AMPUTEES

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, of course, I do not know what the procedure will be regarding the amputee car bill. But I would be willing to wager almost my life, Mr. Speaker, that if a point of no quorum is made the Members who will have left the Chamber and even those who have left Washington would gladly come back and vote for our combat-injured amputees and paraplegics. It would be incredible that they would not do so. How could they go home after what they have done for other groups in the United States and thousands in foreign countries. The Congress has voted billions and billions of dollars for those countries as well as for this country and nothing has been done for our combat-injured in this work of rehabilitation yet. The Veterans' Administration already has given small motorized chairs to certain groups. This is just a step beyond.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts has expired.

FARM MACHINERY

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, this morning I received a call from the Master Planters Corp., which manufactures farm equipment and garden tools. They say that an order of the Civilian Production Administration has cut off the 75 tons of steel which they have been getting each month and which is only 40 percent of the usual amount they receive, because the White House tells them that steel has to be shipped abroad to aid in our foreign policy. Now, what puzzles me is how our farmers are going to produce food without farm implements and how that company is going to keep jobs open for the CIO boys if the administration ships all the raw materials abroad and thus forces the closing of the factory. I suggest Phil Murray see the President and have the CPA get steel for Master Planters Corp. Then the farmers and gardeners will get tools, the employees will have jobs and pay checks, the merchants will have customers, and we will all be able to do something for other peoples and other nations.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mrs. SMITH of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

[Mrs. SMITH of Maine addressed the House. Her remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD in two instances and include some editorials.

Mr. HOLMES of Massachusetts asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article entitled "Square Deal for the Balkan States."

Mr. SCHWABE of Oklahoma asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD in three instances and to include resolutions and excerpts from resolutions of veterans' organizations.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday I received permission to extend in the RECORD a speech by Frank Gannett. I am advised by the Public Printer that the cost will be $160. Notwithstanding the cost, I ask unanimous consent that the extension may be made.

The SPEAKER. Notwithstanding the cost and without objection, the extension may be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. CANFIELD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a letter from William T. Vanderlip, acting commissioner of the department of economic development for the State of New Jersey.

Mr. DOYLE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a chronological list of international conferences.

Mr. LYLE asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

FEDERAL EMPLOYMENT CEILINGS MUST NOT BE VIOLATED

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, my attention has just been called to violations by some of our Government agencies with respect to the ceiling provision under the 1946 Pay Act. Under the act, employment ceilings are provided for Government agencies with the exception of the Veterans' Administration, which is necessarily under expansion. The act definitely provides that if an agency can make a showing to Congress that it needs to increase its employment, then Congress may act accordingly. The required reductions in personnel amount to about 10 percent. Such reduction absorbs about three-fourths of the 14 percent pay raise.

I am informed some of our agencies are bent on increasing their personnel, notwithstanding the passage of the act I just mentioned. Not only that, some of our Cabinet members are supporting the move. One agency head has stated that he is not sure with regard to the intent of Congress.

Mr. Speaker, this particular amendment originated in the House. I think the intent is pretty well stated. As a member of the Committee on Civil Service and as a member of the conference committee, who had part in preparing the amendment, the act is clear and definite. I am surprised that any agency would attempt to violate its intent. As a matter of fact, every agency of our Government ought to cooperate with the Congress in seeing to it that our swollen personnel is reduced within reasonable limits as soon as can be done.

On January 1, 1940, the employment of Government personnel in the United States, was 943,000 and on June 30, 1946, it was, 2,322,000. This does not include several hundred thousand employed outside of the United States. So we have two and one-half times more employees in this country than we had just prior to the beginning of the war.

Mr. Speaker, it is well known that in the event an agency has good cause for not reducing its personnel as required by this act, it will have a right to come to Congress and make a showing to that effect. Mr. Speaker, the Civil Service Commission, and every other agency of government, instead of considering ways and means of getting around the act so recently passed, ought to bend every effort to cooperate and see to it that the intent and spirit of this act, as well as any other law passed by Congress, is strictly adhered to. To take any other position is all wrong.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

ONE HUNDRED AND SIXTY-ONE INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCES IN SHORT PERIOD—LET'S RADIATE PEACE AND PRAYER DURING ADJOURNMENT

Mr. DOYLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOYLE. Mr. Speaker, it was my privilege some months ago to ask the reference department of the Library of Congress to get together, for the benefit of Members of Congress and the Nation, a list of all the international conferences down to January 1, 1945. I have had the very splendid assistance of the Library of Congress in again bringing this important and significant data down to date. It is a chronological list of all international conferences in which our great Nation has participated between January 1, 1945, and June 30, 1946. I intend to ask unanimous consent that it be inserted in the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

We will apparently be on our way home in a few days. May I just say that as we go home to our respective districts, let us not go home and distribute fear, distrust, lack of confidence, and lack of hope in the power and plan of our democratic processes; but let us go back and distribute our maximum of hope, faith, trust, and prayer, if you please, to the end that there shall be an enduring world peace. Make this so in fact as we go home, because you and I as Congressmen, have helped the people in our respective congressional districts to have an abiding faith that right will and must triumph over wrong and that the spiritual forces of the world must be paramount over greed, selfishness, injustice, unrighteousness, hate, or intolerance.

The Paris Peace Conference started yesterday and as a result of it can come enduring comity between nations. The chronological list furnished me by the Congressional Library reveals that there have been 161 such between the dates quoted. Mr. Speaker, this means that never before have so many such conferences been held in nearly so short a time. Look at the list in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD tomorrow and then let us go home and radiate hope—and pray and work, too—that this Paris Peace Conference now on in Paris shall lay lasting foundations for an enduring world peace.

AID FOR VETERANS

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am sure I must have misunderstood the concluding remark of my good friend, the distinguished gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS] but in the event I did not misunderstand it I simply cannot sit idly by and permit the RECORD containing the statement, as I understood it, to go unchallenged.

I understood the gentlewoman from Massachusetts to say that we are giving billions to other countries but nothing to our own combat wounded. I am sure that as the ranking minority member of the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation the gentlewoman did not intend to make that statement. I am sure the lady does not wish the RECORD to contain that statement because I think my impression is correct that, under the leadership of her great committee, our battle wounded, as well as other veterans, have been well cared for, so far better than those of any other country that there is no comparison.

As one who was privileged to have been slightly wounded in the other war I yield to no one in my interest in the disabled veterans. However, I am also a great believer in this Congress and this country. My pride in their reputations prevents me from permitting such an impression, unintentional though I am confident it was, to go to the world.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. VOORHIS of California asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD in two separate instances, in one to include a statement by the Reverend C. E. B. Ward, and in the other an editorial.

CARS FOR AMPUTEES

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, any intimation that has been made here to the effect that the points of order of no quorum which were made yesterday in any way held up the consideration of the bill providing cars for amputees is a sham and demagogic. I rise to put the record straight and to strip that issue of any of the demagogic smoke screen that has been raised around it. That bill may be considered in one of three ways: First, unanimous consent may be requested by the chairman of the committee the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] after consulting with the Speaker; second, the chairman of the committee may apply to the Committee on Rules for a rule; and, third, if and when suspensions are in order in the House, the chairman of the committee, after conferring with the Speaker, may move to suspend the rules and pass the bill. So that anybody who is playing politics with this thing had better stop and stop fooling those boys. What we did yesterday, and I challenge any Member of the House to contradict it, has no relation whatsoever to the amputees' bill. I have a strong interest in their bill. I filed the petition to force consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

COMMUNISTS AND COMMUNIST-FRONT ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO] I desire to say that the civilized world today is confronted with the most serious challenge that has faced civilization in 1,900 years—the question of atheistic communism or a free government under Christian leadership.

The resolution from the Committee on Un-American Activities that is now pending before the House is citing for contempt a group of Communists, or members of a Communist-front organization, who are conspiring to overthrow this Government and to destroy American institutions.

These attempts to block the House from voting to cite those subversive individuals for contempt are just as dangerous to the welfare of this country as are those Communists in Europe who are attacking American soldiers or those Communists in China who are attacking American marines.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

A FRAUD ON THE VETERANS

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, since VJ-day, much has been said about the urgent need for millions of homes for discharged veterans. And Congress has made almost $600,000,000 available to supply that claimed need—first, $190,000,000 for the demolition or removal and reconstruction of barracks and other structures as homes for returned servicemen, and $400,000,000 for subsidy and incentive payments to stimulate the production of short-supply building materials for the construction of new homes for veterans.

Things are now coming to light, however, which cast doubt upon the success of the veterans' emergency housing program authorized by Public Law No. 388, Seventy-ninth Congress, second session, known as the Veterans' Emergency Housing Act, approved May 22, 1946, under which $400,000,000 was made available to increase production of short-supply building materials for the construction of new homes for veterans.

On Saturday last, Senator WHERRY spoke in the Senate and plainly indicated that the Federal housing authorities probably had misled Congress concerning the basis of their claimed need for veterans' housing, and had suppressed a report of the Bureau of the Census tending to show that the millions of existing residential properties in the United States were in a better state of repair and equipment in November 1945, than they were in 1944, or even in 1940.

That Census Bureau report, which Senator WHERRY inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for Saturday, July 27, 1946, at page 10246, certainly causes one to wonder whether the administration wants homes for veterans or whether it just wants more power to spend in its own way. Just what are the aims and purposes of the Federal housing authorities, and how true are their representations that 2,700,000 homes are urgently and immediately needed for veterans? What should be done to meet that need? We all want the veterans to have homes.

As everyone knows, the Veterans Housing Act of May 22, 1946, provides primarily for the construction of new homes for veterans through subsidy and incentive payments to stimulate the production of short-supply building materials, with the home sales prices so fixed for the new construction that veterans could buy the new homes.

If anyone is interested in learning what is being done to carry out the provisions of the Veterans Emergency Housing Act, at least during the next 12 months, he will find the answer at page 809 of the House hearings on the Third Deficiency Appropriations bill, 1946, in the form of a quotation from the justification of the Office of Price Administration, as follows:

This emphasis on the need for materials for remodeling homes was caused directly by a change in the plans of the Wyatt housing program which originally placed almost complete emphasis on new construction of residential dwellings. Since that time it has become apparent that the goals set for the necessary number of additional dwelling units could not be met solely on a new construction basis. Therefore Mr. Wyatt is now calling for major repairs and remodeling of existing dwellings to furnish from 250,000 to 500,000 of the necessary additional units in the coming year. The cost to the consumer of such remodeling is estimated to run upward of $1,000,000,000 for the next 12 months.

When questioned about that language before the House Subcommittee on Appropriations, OPA Administrator Paul A. Porter said:

I would say, Mr. WIGGLESWORTH, that the phrasing of that statement is a little unfortunate—

And then added his own thought that Housing Expediter Wyatt was using every device at his command—to get the largest number of dwelling units from every source.

Mr. Porter's lame explanation of that clear statement from OPA's justification notwithstanding, the fact remains that OPA did represent to the House Appropriations Committee that Housing Expediter Wyatt could not attain the goal he has promised Congress he would attain in the construction of new homes for veterans, and is now calling for major repairs and remodeling of existing dwellings.

So it seems clear that, instead of the construction of new dwellings for veterans during the next 12 months, as was promised to get the Veterans' Emergency Housing Act passed, the veterans are to reap the benefit only of a remodeling and repair program which is to cost the consumer about $1,000,000,000; and the needy veterans will still be without new homes which they might want to buy at prices fixed by the Veterans' Emergency Housing Act.

Well, perhaps some bureaucrat will say that the remodeling program has been launched under the National Housing Act, with improvement loans made by private lenders guaranteed by the National Housing Administration, and without cost to the taxpayers. But if that claim is advanced, whence will come the increased production of short-supply building materials necessary even to the remodeling and repair program? Most certainly the National Housing Act which authorizes the NHA to insure private loans for improvements and remodeling of homes does not authorize subsidies and incentive payments to increase the production of short-supply building materials—only the Veterans' Emergency Housing Act of May 22, 1946, does that—and then for new residential construction only, as the Office of Price Administration has asserted. It seems to follow that the subsidy and incentive payments to stimulate production of short-supply building materials cannot properly be made for the remodeling and repair program.

The situation seems, then, to warrant the conclusion that the veterans' emergency housing program for the new construction of residences for veterans is not to be begun for about a year hence; and that there is immediate danger that funds appropriated for that program may, and doubtless will, be diverted to a program neither contemplated nor authorized by Congress. Well, that is the old, old story of the bureaucrats. When they find they cannot make good their extravagant promises under acts passed by Congress at their insistent demand, or when they find it expedient to change their programs, they merely construe acts of Congress to meet their own ideas and desires, and go merrily about their business of ignoring the wishes and will of Congress. And while they are planning and spending the veterans and others are without homes. But the bureaucrats continue in office.

FIRST SUPPLEMENTARY APPROPRIATION ACT, 1947

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 390) making additional appropriations for the fiscal year 1947, and for other purposes.

Pending that motion, Mr. Speaker, may I inquire of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH] what his suggestion might be as to a limitation of time for debate on the bill?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I believe one-half hour on each side would be sufficient.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that debate upon the bill be limited to one hour, half to be controlled by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH] and half by myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 390, with Mr. BONNER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the resolution was dispensed with.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, less than 2 weeks ago, to be exact, on July 19, 1946, I reported to the House the third deficiency appropriation bill. It was understood that it was the final deficiency appropriation bill. We have had seven deficiency appropriation bills in this Congress. On July 19 we could foresee only one possibility of additional charges upon the Treasury, and that was money which might be necessary to take care of terminal leave pay for members and former members of the armed services, but in the 10 days or so that have elapsed since that time we have received from the Bureau of the Budget 16 new estimates, and there are indications that there will be additional estimates submitted before the bill comes back from the Senate. All of the estimates thus far, however, are in direct response to legislation or to needs created by legislation enacted by the House. They fairly may be said to comprise emergency items.

In this instance, Mr. Chairman, it is interesting to note what the situation would have been had we had in effect during this year the provisions for legislative budgetary management which are contained in the streamline bill which recently passed the House and the Senate.

Under that bill, had it been a law at the commencement of this session, it would have been necessary not later than last February 15 to have established an over-all ceiling beyond which we might not go. Since that time, even if it had been possible to have made a reasonably accurate estimate as to what the over-all ceiling should be on February 15, which of course would hardly have been possible, but granting it had been possible to have made a close estimate of the over-all ceiling at that time, we have exceeded the ceiling which probably would have been established in the intervening months by unforeseen and unpredictable needs of appropriations to the extent of $6,283,401,877. At that time the Budget made a reserve, such as is provided for in the streamlining bill, for future supplementary requests and the amount was $875,000,000. In other words, the over-all ceiling would have missed the mark by roundly $6,280,000,000. I think that actual and immediate experience should enable us to foresee the impracticability of this streamlining proposition under which, without the benefit of hearings, without the benefit of full and complete data necessary to arrive at a reasonably accurate estimate, any predetermined over-all ceiling would be practically worthless. If the budgetary system provided by the streamlining bill had been in effect at the beginning of this session it would not have saved a single dollar of this $6,000,000,000-plus supplementary appropriation which we have made since February 15, 1946.

Following our usual custom of parsimonious action on all estimates submitted by the Bureau of the Budget, we recommend to the House in the pending bill a reduction in the estimates of practically a half billion dollars. The estimates which we have had since July 19, 1946, and on which this bill is based, aggregate $2,978,363,210.45. We recommend in this appropriation bill the provision of $2,479,663,210.45, a reduction in the Budget estimates of $498,700,000—in round figures, a half billion dollars. Of course, the principal item in the bill is the item for equalization of laws and regulations governing leave privileges of officers and enlisted men, which is recommended in response to the Armed Forces Leave Act of 1946. We provide here out of an estimate of $2,679,493,000 for unused furlough credit to all enlisted men, to place them upon an equal basis with all commissioned men, so that they will have the same rights and privileges in drawing terminal pay for unused leave, $2,479,663,210.45. The reduction of $247,785,000 will not be required for expenditure until 1948.

There will be an opportunity in the next Congress to take care of that amount. So we have provided in this bill the necessary amount and only the necessary amount to take care of all terminal leave which will become payable in the fiscal year 1947.

We were requested by the Bureau of the Budget to provide three-quarters of a million dollars for salaries and expenses of the Atomic Energy Commission. Later the Bureau of the Budget withdrew the estimate and said it could get along if we would make available this amount out of funds already provided for the Manhattan project. So in this bill we have provided no specific appropriation for that purpose but provide therefor in the manner recommended by the Budget Bureau in its supplemental proposal.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself five additional minutes.

Mr. Chairman, the only other item of particular interest is the provision of $26,000,000 for the Office of Price Administration. At the time we made an appropriation of $75,000,000 for OPA, the OPA bill had not yet been enacted, but following its enactment, under the terms of its provisions, which stated that the Bureau of the Budget should make a study within 30 days after the enactment of the law and publish its findings in the Federal Register which would thereupon become binding—in order to take care of the next 7½ months, because we must carry this over into the next Congress or carry it over into a period when the next Congress can take up the matter and make proper provision for it—we have given them merely enough money to carry them through the recess of the Congress. We are informed it will require $26,000,000 in addition to the $75,000,000, or a total of $101,000,000 to operate over the intervening period, and we recommend that amount.

Mr. Chairman, there is one other item to which attention should be called, the request from the Department of Commerce to provide a half-million dollars for effectively performing export control functions. The principal reason for the appropriation is the need of controlling more closely the exportation of materials which will be required, or which can be used for carrying out the veterans' housing program. If we are to provide housing for veterans and for other acute metropolitan needs, we must see that sufficient material is retained in this country to carry out the program. In order to do that, we must provide funds to take care of the added burden placed upon the Department and its export-control organization by the program. We have, therefore, recommended the full amount of the Budget estimate for that purpose.

Mr. Chairman, in closing may I call attention to the fact that although the Budget estimates for the fiscal year have been in excess of $37,000,000,000 the committee has recommended and the Congress has appropriated in round numbers only $35,000,000,000. In other words, the Committee on Appropriations has cut down the estimates for the year $1,705,922,606. In addition to the amount stated, we have reclaimed from the war appropriations a total of $64,328,230,565.

That amount of money could very well have been spent and doubtless much of it would have been spent had it not been for the prompt action of the Committee on Appropriations, both before the close of the war, in requiring the Budget Bureau to report periodically the status of appropriations and, promptly upon the close of the war, in reclaiming, as fast as reports come in, this huge amount of money which to that extent, prevents record additions to the national debt.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. THOMASON. I wish the gentleman from Missouri would make a little further comment on that item in the bill providing appropriations of some two and one-half billion dollars for the armed forces leave payment. The reason I make the inquiry is that I happen to be one of the conferees of the House on the bill authorizing the payment of terminal leave pay. The conferees have been in long sessions for some 2 or 3 days, and all of the House Members have stood by the House bill as long as possible; in other words, the situation is that the Senate conferees will not yield because they insist upon these payments being made in bonds.

I might also add that a representative of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget was there to say that the Treasury, and the Budget, and also the President were opposed at this time to the payment of this leave in cash. So, if that point of view should prevail, then will the gentleman tell the House just what this appropriation of $2,500,000,000 means?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. If the gentleman will note section 8 of the legislative bill which the gentleman's committee has reported out it will be observed that it does not provide for the handling of these funds as a public-debt transaction? It authorizes appropriations for effectuating the provisions of the law. We had no authority to handle it as a public-debt transaction.

Under the technical provisions of the law, these bonds cannot be issued until the money is available. In the first place, some of them mature immediately; in the second place, many of them are maturable for commercial life-insurance premiums and it is impossible to determine how much will become payable and how much will not. The only alternative was to provide the full amount due in 1947. We did defer the appropriation of a quarter of a billion dollars, which will not be required until 1948. But under the provisions of the law, which the gentleman had a very large part in enacting, and I congratulate the gentleman upon the splendid record he made in that respect, this is the only provision which can be made under the legislative authorization.

Mr. THOMASON. In the event the conference report providing for this payment in bonds is adopted by both Houses, is an appropriation bill necessary?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Certainly. Some of the bonds are payable immediately. Some mature as soon as they are issued, and others may become payable under the provisions of the legislative bill at any time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, as has been pointed out, this bill carries an overall total of about $2,479,000,000. This total represents a reduction as compared with the Budget estimates of about $498,700,000.

Ninety-six percent of the total is accounted for by an item for terminal leave, which has just been referred to. You will note that there is carried in the bill about $2,431,000,000 for this purpose. In the hearings you will find that sum broken down as between the War Department, the Navy Department, and the Treasury Department.

It is anticipated there will be between 15,000,000 and 16,000,000 recipients of these payments. The appropriation recommended by the committee is 90 percent of the total estimated to be required in this connection, that being the figure which it is believed will cover all payments required during the fiscal year 1947.

There is a second substantial item in the bill for overtime, leave, and holiday compensation which, as you will note, amounts to $20,000,000 estimated as required to pay about 1,000,000 small claims, averaging $20 per claim, in several of the departments of the Government.

These claims grow out of a ruling made by the Comptroller General in 1944 which required revision of the computation of overtime, leave, and holiday compensation in a good many cases.

The bill (H. R. 6532) now pending before the President for signature, I believe, sets up a system for the payment of these claims which it is estimated will save about $4,000,000 in administration expenditure, so that this appropriation calling for the payment of $20,000,000 worth of claims represents a saving in the long run to that extent.

The third substantial item is the item providing an additional $26,000,000 for the revamped Office of Price Administration. This $26,000,000 added to the $75,000,000 already provided makes available about $101,000,000 to carry the agency until next February 15.

Some Members will recall that the original request by OPA amounted to $142,200,000 on a 12 months' basis, as compared with $151,171,000 in the current fiscal year.

You will recall that the House took 25 percent off that request to carry the agency until February next, so that when the House reconvenes in January it can reconsider the amount required for the balance of the year.

That brought the request down to $106,000,000 and with the $26,000,000 carried in this bill, the request is further reduced to about $101,000,000 or roughly $5,000,000 less than what the House provided in the previous bill.

The OPA estimates certain increases which will have to be met as the result of the pay increase act. It estimates other increases growing out of a number of amendments adopted in the other body when the legislation was revamped. It estimates certain savings, first, because there has been no recruiting during the month of July, and, second, because of the limitation which the House placed upon the funds for informational purposes a limit being fixed, as you will recall of $1,750,000.

The result is an over-all reduction in personnel of 1,026 and an over-all reduction in funds of $4,188,000.

Personally, I think the agency could get along with less funds. But it is more or less a shot in the dark at this time and difficult to tell just what will be required with the changes that have just been put into effect.

We have already provided that the Bureau of the Budget shall go over the matter within 30 days after the enactment of the new law and if possible provide a ceiling within the over-all appropriation made available. By limiting the appropriation to February 15, the Congress will have a chance to review the whole subject again when it reconvenes in January.

I am therefore not too critical of the action of the committee in recommending this amount at this time.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the amount of money carried in this bill be required whether we pay the terminal leave in cash or in bonds?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I have been advised by the Treasury Department this morning through the general counsel's office that the identical number of dollars will be required to be appropriated whether the terminal-leave payments are made in bonds or in cash.

Mr. CLASON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield.

Mr. CLASON. If that is true, and the same amount of money must be appropriated, the only reason why we should pay in bonds rather than in cash is that it might be inflationary if it is paid in cash. Is that correct?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. The gentleman is more familiar with that aspect of the question than I am, he being a conferee on the legislative bill. But I understand the Treasury always requires a bond to be covered by a deposit of dollars before the bonds are issued. Normally, a bond issue is sold to the public In this instance the funds will be provided by appropriation through the Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself five additional minutes.

Mr. CLASON. The Treasury Department raises no objection to its being paid in cash. There was no question so far as the Treasury was concerned as to whether they would prefer it to be paid in one way or another?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I do not think that matter was gone into to any great extent in our committee. That is a question for the legislative committee rather than for the committee making appropriations to implement that legislation.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. The purpose of that question was this: I recall some 10 or 12 years ago we made payable to the veterans of World War I in regard to their adjusted service compensation certificates 2 years before they became due, in order to provide funds to those men for their immediate use. It seems to me that perhaps for the World War II veterans funds should be made available for their immediate use. I think it might be a wise move for the Government to make payment either in cash or bonds, making it optional on the part of the veterans.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I understand that matter is being thrashed out in conference by the conferees appointed by the Senate and House in respect to the legislative bill.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield.

Mr. RABAUT. During the course of the hearings I had occasion to inquire about the matter and it is recorded in the hearings on page 38. It is very brief.

Mr. RABAUT. Is there any election in the law for the boys to take bonds or money?

General CARSON. At the moment it is in conference.

Mr. RABAUT. Is it still in conference?

General CARSON. Yes.

Mr. RABAUT. I thought perhaps you had been furnished some additional information.

General CARSON. As it is now, anything under $50 is to be paid by cash or check and the rest is to be a bond payment.

That is what the hearings developed; but it is still in conference.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I might refer very briefly to two or three other items in the bill before concluding.

You will note that provision is made for the Atomic Energy Commission. Instead of appropriating an additional $750,000 for the expenses of this Commission as was originally suggested, the committee has simply made available amounts already appropriated in respect to the Manhattan project, thereby saving the $750,000 originally suggested.

Then, you will find an item of $275,000 for starting the work of the Council of Economic Advisers, which is $100,000 below the Budget recommendation.

You will find also an item of $250,000 for starting the work of the Price Decontrol Board, which has just been set up.

There is also an item in the bill of $600,000, an additional appropriation in respect to export control, under the Department of Commerce. The additional appropriation seems to be justified on the basis of experience during the last 6 months. There has been an increase of work that was not anticipated.

There is another item of $19,750,000 under the War Department, for military assistance to the Philippine Republic. This appropriation is made under the recent law which authorizes the President, on request of the Philippine Republic, to turn over stores, supplies, technical information, equipment, and other similar things, whenever he thinks it is advisable in the public interest, and provided it is consistent with the military and naval requirements of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has again expired.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself five additional minutes.

This in effect provides for the maintenance of the Army of the Philippine Republic for 1 year, except as to pay. It seems to be essential under the conditions which prevail in the islands at this time.

There are some other items in here, as you will note, including judgments and authorized claims, which make up the total of the bill.

Mr. CLASON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield.

Mr. CLASON. In regard to the atomic energy provisions on page 3, as I understand it, under existing appropriations $375,000,000 have been made available either to meet present contracts or for contract authorization in the fiscal year. Am I correct?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I think the figure is approximately correct.

Mr. CLASON. This section of the bill dealing with the Atomic Energy Commission would permit the President to take away from any part of this authorization for research and development under the War Department and allow it to be used for any other purpose that the newly established Atomic Energy Commission might care to use it for. Is that true?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I take it that under the new bill the whole thing is to be coordinated under the new Commission we have set up.

Mr. CLASON. Can the gentleman tell the committee whether or not there was anything in the hearings to indicate that there is going to be any cutting down of the amount of research by the armed services?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I do not believe that matter was gone into.

Mr. CLASON. The gentleman does not know how much money is likely to be transferred under this section, then?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. The money that has already been made available is simply placed under the discretion of the President for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the Atomic Energy Act.

Mr. CLASON. But it is a blank check; there is no particular amount expressed in the hearings to indicate the limit.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. No. It is the amount we have already appropriated. We are not appropriating further funds.

Mr. CLASON. They can take it away from the armed services and use it for other purposes?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. To the extent that they are authorized to do so under the enabling legislation which was just passed.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield.

Mr. RABAUT. There is nothing added; they only take it away from a different account.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. We are not appropriating a cent more than already has been appropriated.

Mr. RABAUT. The gentleman is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has again expired.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. DWORSHAK].

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. Chairman, we have heard a great deal during the debate in recent weeks about the OPA holding the price line, stabilizing prices. Likewise, we have heard a great deal about veterans' housing and the building of hospitals in which to accommodate the war veterans.

On July 17, 1946, the Veterans' Administration released a report with complete details as to the progress being made in the construction of the veterans' hospitals, appropriations for which have been made available by the Congress, I should like to direct your attention to some of the details of this report. For instance, the new hospitals proposed and under construction provide for 40,640 beds. Additions proposed or under construction will make another 10,961 beds, or a total of 51,601 beds.

During the three-year period from June 26, 1943, to March 28, 1946, the Congress, in eight separate appropriation measures, appropriated $454,771,000. The third urgent deficiency bill, approved on June 21, 1946, included contractual authorizations for the Veterans' Administration in the amount of $441,250,000 for the construction of hospital facilities.

This means that, while the original estimate covering these 51,601 beds totaled $454,771,000, during that three-year period—when the OPA is alleged to have been holding the construction price line—the Veterans' Administration has been retarded in this building program, and found it necessary last month to secure this additional appropriation of $441,250,000.

Mr. Chairman, in order to provide 51,601 additional beds, it will not require, as originally estimated, $454,771,000, but a total of $896,000,000. In other words, the cost of building these 51,601 hospital beds has exactly doubled in the 3-year period from June 1943 to June 1946. Throughout that entire 3-year period, the OPA claimed it was holding the price line on construction costs, yet we find that the Veterans' Administration, having received full authority for appropriations and having contractual authority from the Congress, has been stymied in pursuing diligently this building program because of the fact that costs have doubled.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DWORSHAK. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Of course, as the gentleman knows, even the Army hospitals are crowded. They closed the Lovett General Hospital in my district and have turned it over to be used as a barracks for students, not that I would deny the students a place to sleep; however, other places could be found for them. In the meantime, go out to the Walter Reed Hospital and you will see the crowded conditions there and you can see the crowded conditions at other places.

Mr. DWORSHAK. I realize that the Veterans' Administration also has taken over 15 Army hospitals and at the present time is considering the advisability of taking over additional Army and Navy hospital facilities to accommodate the waiting list of veterans who desire hospitalization.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I only want to bring out the fact that the barracks have been created for the able-bodied and the disabled are being put out of the hospital facilities.

Mr. DWORSHAK. I thank the gentlewoman for her contribution.

I want to stress the fact that, throughout this 3-year period, the cost of building these hospital beds doubled, which prompts me to inquire whether or not the delay in providing housing facilities for veterans—and we hear so much about that these days—can be placed in the same category as the Veterans' Administration hospitals? Has the cost of building housing facilities for veterans and other Americans doubled in the 3-year period when OPA was supposedly holding the price line on construction costs? I mention these facts because Congress is frequently criticized for not providing housing facilities while our critics entirely overlook the fact that very adequate appropriations have been made available; not only since VJ-day, but throughout the past 3 years.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Idaho has expired.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman three additional minutes.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. Chairman, if there are delays in providing essential housing facilities and in building these 51,000 hospital beds, the appropriations for which have been provided by the Congress, then, certainly, the responsibility does not rest upon the legislative branch of Government but, rather, upon the executive department, primarily upon the OPA, although the people of this country, and particularly the veterans, have been led to believe the delay is directly chargeable to negligence on the part of the Congress. The American people, and especially the veterans, should be fully advised as to the details so that they may realize that the Congress has provided every dollar—as a matter of fact, twice as much money as was originally estimated to be required—for the building of 51,601 hospital beds.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DWORSHAK. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. JENSEN. The gentleman has worked for the veterans housing program very diligently, as have many Members of Congress, and we know that the reason we have not had the necessary production of materials is because for months the OPA refused to promptly adjust prices at the mills and factories. The black market boys have gone in and taken the materials, the veterans have very little folding money so they get little material. They cannot compete with the black marketeer, who has a pocketful of folding money and that is the main reason they have as yet hardly gotten started on the veterans' housing program.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Veterans' hospital construction and veterans' housing facilities do have certain priorities, but what good are priorities when no building materials are available and when scarcities and shortages have been artificially created because of the operatons of OPA?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DWORSHAK. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. As the gentleman knows, prior to the time the Veterans' Administration were given priorities they were next to the last on the list of priorities, and absolutely no plans were made for the future building of hospitals for veterans.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Idaho has expired.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GORE].

Mr. GORE. Mr. Chairman, I think it is imperative that this bill be passed before the Congress adjourns. This bill, if passed, will provide the funds for terminal-leave payments to enlisted men of World War II. It is unusual to pass a bill appropriating money for a program or function which has not been finally approved by legislative enactment, but we of the Appropriation Committee feel confident that the Congress will finally pass the terminal-leave pay bill within a few hours. Therefore, this appropriation bill, which must go to the Senate and be passed there, is offered now. Although other items are included in the bill, by far the largest amount of money contained therein is for the purpose of making terminal-leave payments, in cash I hope, to enlisted men for the purpose of equalizing leave privileges of officers and enlisted men of the armed forces. I urge passage of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, on page 2, lines 13 to 17, there is a provision in italics which is not a part of the bill. I therefore ask that the Clerk in reading omit those lines as they were not reported by the committee. They are not part of the bill and appear in this print of the bill through error.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

PRICE DECONTROL BOARD

Salaries and expenses: For all necessary expenses, fiscal year 1947, of the Price Decontrol Board in carrying out its functions under the Price Control Extension Act of 1946, and all other powers and duties and functions which may be lawfully vested in the Price Decontrol Board, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; temporary employment of persons or organizations by contract or otherwise without regard to civil-service and classification laws; acceptance and utilization of voluntary and uncompensated services; lawbooks, books of reference, newspapers and periodicals; printing and binding; purchase of one, and hire, maintenance, operation, and repair of passenger automobiles; travel expenses, including expenses of attendance at meetings or organizations concerned with the work of the Board; and not to exceed $5,000 for deposit in the general fund of the Treasury for cost of penalty mail as required by section 2 of the act of June 28, 1944 (Public Law 364); $250,000."

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VOORHIS of California: On page 6, after line 11, insert the following:

"Department of Agriculture school-lunch program: The amount named in the Department of Agriculture Appropriation Act, 1947, to carry on the purposes and provisions of the National School-Lunch Act, is hereby increased by $5,000,000."

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I can explain the purpose of this amendment very briefly. It will be recalled that a short time ago the House passed basic legislation, which came out of the Committee on Agriculture, to set up a national school-lunch program. The way that program operates under the bill is that the Federal Government makes grants to the appropriate State agencies, generally the State Departments of Education, to match moneys spent by the States and the local school districts in providing for school lunches for the children in the schools of the Nation. It so happens that Congress appropriated $75,000,000 for this purpose in the coming year. When we did so the plans were made, particularly for the milk program. In many, many instances the school lunch in some of the poorer sections especially consists only of a pint of milk. That is all the child gets. It means the difference between decent nourishment and practically no nourishment at all in many of those instances. All the plans have been made on the basis of the price of milk as it was a couple of months ago. The price of milk has increased, as I see it, necessarily so. I know in my section the dairymen without an adequate subsidy would lose money. I am not criticizing the price increase, but I am pointing out that for every one cent increase per quart of milk it costs $2,500,000 more than was the case before, in order to enable children to get this milk for 2 cents a pint, which is where they try to keep the cost to the children and what the whole program has been based upon. My amendment, in other words, would mean that there could still be as much milk in the school lunches as before, allowing for a 2-cent increase in the price of milk.

That is the situation in a nutshell. It recommends itself to me from this point of view, that if we believe, as the Congress has certainly declared it believes many times in acting on OPA legislation, that an increased price for some of these farm commodities is justifiable, and if the Congress also believes, as it has declared it does, in the soundness of this school-lunch program as a means of enabling children to be well-enough nourished to take advantage of the educational program our Nation provides, this amendment is a logical one, simply to keep the program where it is now in view of the increased price.

Mr. Chairman, that is all there is to it. I was earnestly in hopes that it might be possible for the committee to accept this amendment. It is true the situation has arisen all of a sudden and there has not been time to consider it in committee. I realize that fact fully, but I hope that the House will see the justice of the thing and vote with me on the proposition.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Is the money payable under the school-lunch program payable on a matching basis or under the so-called variable grants system?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. It is payable on the straight matching basis. There is a formula in the bill which does provide for a certain ratio for each State and that ratio does reflect to some degree the per capita wealth of that State as compared to the national per capita wealth; but the matching is the same for all States, and once that ratio has been determined the money is not paid under the new bill at all unless the State does match.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman mean, then, that dollar for dollar is matched, or does he mean that in one State a Federal dollar may be paid if a lesser amount is contributed?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. No, it is matched dollar for dollar. In future years it will be required for the localities to pay more than a dollar for each Federal dollar appropriated. That is on a sliding scale.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts insist on his point of order?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, the amendment that is offered seems to me to be not germane to the section of the bill where it is offered. I feel constrained, therefore, to make the point of order that the amendment is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BONNER). The Chair is ready to rule. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH] makes the point of order that the amendment is not germane. If the amendment is germane to any part of the bill, it is germane at the point at which it has been offered. Therefore, the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the grounds upon which the amendment is offered are conjectural and contingent. It is possible as the fiscal year progresses that the provision previously made will be ample. Also, there will be an opportunity later on, in case it should prove to be inadequate, to make a deficiency or supplemental appropriation in specific terms based upon the actual facts as they have developed. But the aim and the purpose of the amendment are so meritorious that I shall not object and so far as I am personally concerned I am willing to accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. VOORHIS of California) there were—ayes 26, noes 47.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed as tellers Mr. VOORHIS of California and Mr. WIGGLESWORTH.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported there were—ayes 57, noes 66.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I have requested this time in order to inform my colleagues of the status of House Resolution 711—a privileged resolution calling on the Treasury Department for certain data on pending applications and refunds granted under the carry-back clause relating to excess profit taxes.

A serious situation exists when a civilian board made up largely of tax experts and tax lobbyists begin consideration of refunds from the United States Treasury estimated to be in excess of $8,000,000,000. This board was not created by an act of Congress and is not directly responsible to the Congress. Here, Mr. Speaker, is a set-up that has all the earmarks of a raid on the Treasury that will make Comptroller General Warren's expose, on yesterday, of the wartime contract frauds look like a pink tea party in comparison.

The time having elapsed under the resolution in which the Treasury could have supplied the House with this information, I called Treasurer John W. Snyder who insisted he had no knowledge of the resolution, which I introduced on July 17. He asked for a conference and the representatives of the Treasury Department and the Bureau of Internal Revenue who attended claimed the information requested was not available at this time.

They submitted a letter of explanation which I desire at this time to read into the RECORD:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, July 26, 1946.

Hon. CLEVELAND M. BAILEY,
House Office Building,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. BAILEY: As requested by you, am writing to explain in some detail the effect of House Resolution 711, introduced by you on July 17, 1946.

The resolution calls for information to be furnished to the House by the Secretary of the Treasury with respect to the operation of section 122 (b) and (c) of the Revenue Act of 1945. The Treasury would be requested to supply a list of taxpayers who have filed claims for refund of excess profits taxes, and of those who have had such claims allowed, together with the amounts, as a result of carry-backs to the years 1944 and 1945 of unused excess profits credits arising in 1946. Under section 122 of the Revenue Act of 1945, the carry-back of unused credits is retained for taxable years beginning in 1946, although the excess-profits tax itself was repealed as of December 31, 1945.

Adoption of the resolution at the present time would appear to this Department to be premature. Practically no claims for refund with respect to carry-backs from taxable years beginning in 1946 can be filed during the calendar year 1946. The amount of such carry-backs and the resulting excess-profits-tax refunds cannot be ascertained until the expiration of the taxable year. In the case of taxpayers reporting on a calendar year basis, no claim could properly be filed until the beginning of 1947, at the earliest. As a practical matter, it is unlikely that many claims will be filed prior to March 15, 1947, when the tax returns for 1946 are due. In the cases of the many fiscal year taxpayers, taxable years beginning in 1946 will not be closed until sometime in 1947, and returns will not be due for 2½ months after the close of the fiscal year. Only in the relative handful of cases of short taxable years, due to changes in accounting periods or winding up of a business, could claims be filed during 1946. Even if a few such claims do arise during the year, they would be wholly unrepresentative of the extent of the application of the carry-back provisions, and would not, I believe, be of the slightest value to the House in appraising their operation, and might prove misleading. Accordingly, adoption of the resolution would appear to be premature since there would be no information for the Department to make available under the resolution.

The carry-back provisions of the excess-profits-tax law have been receiving continued joint study by the Treasury Department and the staff of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation since their status was last under consideration by the Ways and Means Committee and the Finance Committee of the Senate in connection with the Revenue Act of 1945. For the reasons I have outlined, no significant data as to the area or extent of the benefits arising from these provisions has yet been adduced as to the year 1946. The study has necessarily been very largely confined to a preliminary analysis of the problems which may inhere in the sections of the law involved. These problems will continue to receive attention with a view to maintaining the best possible surveillance of the operation of the unused credit carry-back and to developing specific information as it becomes available.

This Department is glad to have had the opportunity to acquaint you with its views as to the problems involved in furnishing the information you desire.

Sincerely yours,

JOSEPH J. O'CONNELL, JR.,
Acting Secretary of the Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from West Virginia has expired.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from West Virginia may proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, the conferees agreed that certain tentative payments in the nature of advances have been paid to tax applicants for the first and second quarters of the taxable year 1946, but insisted they were involved in the entire year's settlement and would not be available to the Congress until 1947. It appears that a mere technicality in the form of a faulty resolution will prevent the House having this information prior to adjournment.

Mr. Chairman, I regret very much to see the Congress adjourn without having first-hand information as to who is asking refunds under the carry-back clause in the Revenue Act of 1945 and what, if any, payments have been made out of the Treasury under this refund clause. It appears to be too late now to get this information. Should the vicissitude of politics prevent my return as a member of the Eightieth Congress, I should like to know that this effort on my part to prevent a raid on the Treasury will fall into far more capable hands than mine and will receive prompt attention on the convening of the new Congress.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, for a very few moments I wish to discuss a bill which I introduced on July 22, H. R. 7102. It is a bill which I think every American citizen should be interested in.

When our forefathers set up the Government of the United States, and drafted the Constitution under which we live, they provided for three branches of government, the executive, legislative, and judicial. In their wisdom they saw fit to provide for the judges of our courts lifetime tenure and pay which could not be reduced during their term of office. In other words, they felt that the American people, if we were to have an incorruptible judiciary, should place the members of our judiciary beyond the question of worrying about their compensation.

As time has gone on the Congress has provided retirement pay for all of the hundreds of thousands of civil-service employees. Our judges have retirement pay, Army officers have retirement pay. It was thought many, many years ago that if an officer leading an army, whether it be a brigade, a regiment, or a company, the officer leading troops should not have to worry about his old age if he gets wounded. It was felt we would have better service by providing retirement for them. The same principle has been applied to all other departments of our government. The Congress in its wisdom has provided retirement pay for substantially everyone, including Members of the Congress. I think of only one exception in all the wide, broad scope of government. I picked up a newspaper the other night and I found that the President of the United States was referred to as the forgotten man. I may say that in filing this bill I had an eye to the Presidency of the United States as an institution rather than to the President as an individual. As a matter of fact, I have never discussed the matter with the present occupant of that high office, I have never discussed it with any member of the executive department of our government, and I am sure that the President of the United States does not even know I filed this bill or had any contemplation of filing it.

Never before in all the history of the world has any one man had such a tremendous responsibility upon his shoulders as the President of the United States has today. Never before has any one man conducted so big a business as the President of the United States is today conducting, and never before for so small a compensation.

The other day I talked to one of my friends about this bill, a Member of Congress, and he said, "Why, the President does not need a retirement bill. He can save enough out of the $75,000 a year to retire comfortably." Then I called his attention to the fact that by the time the President pays his Federal income tax, and State income tax, he has left only about $28,000.

The sum of $43,920 is the Federal tax upon a salary of $75,000; then on top of that a State income tax, which leaves $28,000. But unfortunately the American people expect the President of the United States to live not in some little cottage on a back street, but to live in the White House. That White House is a residence, plain as it may be, befitting the dignity of the high office that the American people expect that individual to fill. I do not know what the grocery bill for the White House is today, but I do know, and I have this from very reliable sources, that in recent years it has never been less than $24,000 a year. I know groceries are higher today than they were 5 years ago, and you know that too. The result is that the very best you can figure, the President of the United States today works for less than $4,000 a year compensation, out of which he has to buy clothes, make donations to charities, and so forth.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BELL. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am interested in what the gentleman is saying on this subject. He appeared before the Judiciary Committee just recently and spoke upon this matter. Did the gentleman provide anything for the Vice President who is also elected by the people?

Mr. BELL. I think the Congress provided for him the other day. At least, that is my understanding.

Mr. SPRINGER. Does the gentleman think a Vice President comes under that general provision?

Mr. BELL. That is my understanding. If that is not true, he should be given proper retirement pay.

Mr. SPRINGER. The thing I think the gentleman is referring to is the question of succession and not the question of retirement.

Mr. BELL. Retirement is what I am talking about.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is my understanding that the Vice President does not come under the general retirement plan.

Mr. BELL. If that be true, the matter should be taken care of. There is no use letting the Vice President be the only forgotten man either. The President of the United States today is working for less money than the average common laborer; that is a thing that the American people I am sure do not want. I think that the American people do want the President of the United States to be in a position where he can devote his time to the duties and responsibilities of that high office without having to worry about the grocery bills 5 or 10 years from now.

The other day I presented this matter to the Committee on the Judiciary. That great committee very graciously permitted me time to go before them and make a statement. I do hope that they will bring the bill to the floor of the House with a favorable report. I do not know what the committee in its wisdom will decide to do, but I do hope that the Members of this House will give serious thought to this problem. It is a problem which concerns not merely the President but it concerns every American citizen because of the tremendous responsibility that rests upon the shoulders of the President of the United States.

If the bill gets to the floor of the House I hope that the Members will vote for it. By doing so, I know you will be giving a vote in the best interest of your country.

When we go back into the House I shall ask unanimous consent to insert at the end of my remarks an article by Jay G. Hayden, entitled "Presidential Pay."

(The matter referred to follows:)

PRESIDENTIAL PAY

(By Jay G. Hayden)

In the present deluge of Government pay raises the forgotten man seems to be President Truman.

Last week Congress boosted all Federal judges $5,000 a year, and recently all American diplomats were granted increases ranging up to $7,500 (from $17,500 to $25,000) for ambassadors.

In pressing the pending La Follette-Monroney congressional reorganization bill before this week end, Congressmen will provide a 50 percent raise ($10,000 to $15,000) for themselves.

Raises for all civil service employees, averaging 14 percent, took effect July 1, as did the 50 percent jump in base pay for enlisted personnel of the Army and Navy, with lesser increases for higher ranks.

In contrast with all this there not only has been no increase in pay of the President since 1909, when the salary was fixed at $75,000, but his take-home pay, due to income taxes, has diminished well over half since that time.

And, while the plight of Mr. Truman, much the poorest financially among recent Presidents, is freely bemoaned by his friends, members of the Appropriations Committees of Congress say the subject never has been mentioned in their deliberations.

One reason for this is that the problem of raising the President's take-home pay is difficult. Suppose for example, his salary were boosted to $100,000. The top $5,000 of even a $75,000 net income is taxed $4,050 (81 percent) and the rate ranges up to 87 percent on the $90,000-to-$100,000 income bracket. Thus an ostensible $25,000 boost for the President would net him less than $4,000 actual increase.

Like everybody else's, the President's tax return is kept secret but it is well known that Mr. Truman has little or no income other than his salary. A congressional tax expert asked to compute the present tax on a net income of $75,000 for a man and wife with one dependent (the Truman status) placed it at $42,892. The Missouri State income tax takes about $1,000 more.

On this basis the President's spendable annual income is $31,108.

For any ordinary citizen this would be nothing to complain about, but the President, in matter of expenses, is not like other people. He is compelled to live in the White House and entertain extensively and while much of this is covered by expense allowances, his personal financial burden still is heavy.

Warning his successor, President Wilson, of what was in store for him, President Taft wrote, "you can calculate that your expenses are only those of furnishing food to a large boarding house of servants and to your family, and your personal expenses of clothing, etc."

Even so, Taft said, he had been able to save an average of only $25,000 a year, indicating that his annual personal expenses as President were $50,000. At that time there was no income tax whatever, and the salary, as now, was $75,000.

Mr. Truman, with his income after taxes reduced to $31,000, still has the same "large boarding house of servants"—24 of them by recent count—to feed, and cost of food has multiplied several times over, since Mr. Taft's Presidency.

The British way is to make certain official salaries tax free, as instance Lord Inverchapel, British Ambassador to the United States, who gets $50,000 salary, plus large allowances for official expense—all free from taxes. The Congressmen say, however, that it is out of the question to give the President a tax-free salary, without doing the same for all other Government officials—and that, they are sure, American voters never would stand for.

The best Mr. Truman can hope for, it appears, is that the "servant boarding house" will be taken off his hands by an increased expense allowance for that purpose, but there has been no visible inclination of Congress even to do that much.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, a few moments ago the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS], offered an amendment to this bill for the purpose of bringing into line the price of milk so that it could be given for the school-lunch program. Milk has been affected by the lifting of the subsidy, and I am ashamed to learn that we had almost a solid vote across the aisle against this worthy amendment. The amendment was most worthy in its objective. The defeat of the amendment denies milk to the school children. That is No. 1. In the second place, the opponents take a rap at the farmers by denying them the proper price for milk a part of which has just been taken from them by the lifting of the subsidy. Across the aisle the great champions that have sung the song of the farmers, that have talked about a few tractors going to plow up the fields of Europe so that the starving people might be fed, today in this House rose to a man and rapped the farmer on the very price of milk. The vote on this amendment was 66 to 57, and the 66 practically came from across the aisle.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RABAUT. Not now.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and sixteen Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, the very group that has been opposing the OPA, the very group that cried to high heaven to take off the subsidy, "Take it away, the farmer doesn't want it," and now the vote comes from the same side of the aisle. It decries the farmer an increase and at the same time let the little children go without milk.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RABAUT. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I appreciate that the gentleman is making a political speech and therefore it probably should not be taken too seriously, but may I ask the gentleman, why did not the great Committee on Appropriations do this job when it was in committee?

Mr. RABAUT. Because it was not brought to our attention. That is why the chairman of the committee rose in his seat and said he would be very glad to accept the amendment and we on our side voted for it.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The subsidies have been off for several weeks. Why did not the committee do its job?

Mr. RABAUT. Do not ask me. I am telling the gentleman what happened here this morning.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Why is it that the chairman of the committee when he stood up on the floor here said it was conjectural whether you would need it or not?

Mr. RABAUT. I am not yielding for debate, I am yielding for a question. I want to say this to the gentleman, that if corrections are to be made this is the place to make them. If I am accused of making a political talk, I certainly accuse everybody across the aisle of making a first-class blundering political vote, because you certainly took it out on the farmers whose cause has been long acclaimed here for years. It looks now as though it was lip service. Someone on your side of the aisle before this bill leaves the floor, if you want to take the suggestion of a humble Democrat, ought to rise on his feet and ask that the matter be reconsidered, and support it for the sake of the farmers of the Nation and the children of this country.

Mr. VURSELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

It is always interesting to listen to our good friend from Michigan, and he is ever ready to bring politics into the deliberations of the House. I cannot blame him much for that, because they are going to have to throw a lot of fast curves if they are to continue to deceive the people to the point where the New Deal is kept in charge of directing the course of the Government here in Washington.

He wants to know why we do not vote $5,000,000 more for milk. Then he refers to the tractors being sent across to Europe and other countries. That is just another waste of this administration. One of the reasons we on the left side of the aisle are economy-minded is because we feel it is our duty to vote for economy, hoping against hope to keep this country from being driven into bankruptcy by extravagant waste and spending. Now, I will tell the gentleman how he can get more money appropriated by the Congress for old-age pensions, for milk for the children, and for everything that is needed by the people of America. This country is rich enough to take care of every matter of social welfare and legislation that is needed for the old folks and the children of this country if the New Deal will stop wasting billions of dollars a year.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VURSELL. I would like to make this point, but I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The appropriation for school lunches was increased up to $75,000,000 from something between $50,000,000 and $60,000,000 last year.

Mr. VURSELL. Certainly. The gentleman is right. This is only a matter of a political opportunity being taken advantage of.

Now, I will tell you how we can get all the things the American people need. The way to do it is to vote the New Deal out of control of the Appropriations Committee and every other committee of this House and stop wasting the peoples' money on useless things so that we can spend it on things that are worth while. To prove my point, I point to the bill which is brought in here today to increase the administration of the OPA by $26,000,000—a pretty cute move because it is difficult to vote against it since something over $2,000,000,000 for terminal leave is tied up in this bill. What do we have today? We have preserved the political machine of the OPA. We will have saddled upon the backs of the taxpayers $100,000,000 when this bill is passed and we will be keeping 40,000 people on the OPA pay rolls to be diligently occupied in the coming elections to preserve the bureaucracy of the New Deal. And they will not keep down prices, but will bring back the unlawful black markets. That reminds me that just a few weeks ago after a 2-year delay the New Deal finally won its fight to retain Federal control of the United States Employment Agency. Until when? Until November 15—just after the elections so that they can retain 32,000 people on the pay roll and try to put the New Deal across so that they can continue to tax, spend, waste, and ultimately wreck the financial solvency of this Government.

The only hope to ever balance the budget, to deflate bureaucracy and maintain and return our Government again to the people is to turn the New Deal out and elect a Republican Congress.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment should be defeated. I am speaking against the Voorhis amendment.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield for a parliamentary inquiry;

Mr. GROSS. No; I do not yield.

The farmers do not need this. The gentleman from Michigan remarked that this is the kind of procedure that should be carried on to help the farmer. The farmers have had all of the New Deal help they want, and the result is that food is scarce everywhere. The farmers are helping everybody else to pay the bill. By this school-lunch program a small group of New Dealers pretend to be feeding the children and helping the farmers, some of these "do-gooders" have been grabbing, grabbing, and grabbing, and if they have not been grabbing money then they have been grabbing votes.

They are not interested in the children or the farmers. A Philadelphia businessman, a friend of mine, spent 3 months in Puerto Rico early this year. He put up at a hotel that charged $16.50 a day.

There were five people in that hotel that he observed during that time. He never knew who they were. He went on over to another island one day and they went on the same plane. There he was transacting business with some school authorities when they barged in, and then he found out who they were. They were five people from the Department of Agriculture here in Washington who were down in the Virgin Islands and Puerto Rico for 3 months studying how the school-lunch program was being handled.

Mr. McGLINCHEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN (after counting). One hundred and twenty Members are present; a quorum.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania will proceed.

Mr. GROSS. Now, Mr. Chairman, when these men get down here in the well of the House and beat their breasts about saving the children and saving the taxpayers' money, helping the farmers, and making appropriations to build houses, they talk and act as if they did not know that it takes material instead of money to build houses. An administration that carries on like that, when they send five people from Washington to Puerto Rico for 3 months, living at a hotel at $16.50 a day, flying around in airplanes, to check on how the school-lunch program works, it simply does not make sense. One individual could have gone down there and been back inside of 10 days' time and furnished all the information that was necessary. Or, they have representatives down there from the Federal Government who could have done that. There are many ways in which it could have been done and thousands of dollars could have been saved. But they are not interested in that. All they are interested in is a good time, spending, taxing, making political capital of necessity.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I was happy to hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROSS] say that the farmers got enough out of the New Deal. I am happy that they are now admitting it. When the New Deal came into existence the farmers were getting 10 cents for corn. Prices were down so low that they could not even exist. Four hundred and fifty thousand farm mortgages were about to be foreclosed. The courthouses were being raided by the farmers themselves. Yes. Then along came the New Deal. If I remember correctly, the farm income of this Nation under the New Deal, if you please, has risen from $11,000,000,000 to some $26,000,000,000, and now the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROSS] rises on the floor of the House and says the farmers have got enough out of the New Deal. Yes. The farmers got the AAA from the New Deal, the most democratic organization that could possibly be devised, where the farmers themselves, through their AAA committee, form their own program with the help of the Department of Agriculture. Yes. They were given Soil Conservation and Crop Insurance. The farm program of America today is on a good solid foundation.

Also today the farmers are satisfied with the program. I do not know how the farmers may vote in the election if they are misled by being told that the New Deal did not produce, but when you look at the record it proves that the farmer has received a great deal from the New Deal, and it is about time that the farmers appreciated it. I believe they do, notwithstanding the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

I defy the gentleman from Pennsylvania or any of his Republican colleagues who are criticizing the Democratic administration's farm program to tell the farmers of this Nation that they will take away the AAA program, the soil-conservation program, or change the credit structure. Tell them that they should go back to the good old days of 10-cent corn and turn agriculture back to the pre-New Deal days. You know you would not dare because if you did you would not be back here next session. So be honest with the farmers and tell them that you, too, are happy that they now are prosperous and that you will continue to carry on the good work that was commenced and put in operation under the Roosevelt administration.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto do now close.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 23:

"Philippine rehabilitation: The third proviso of the appropriation under this head contained in the Third Deficiency Appropriation Act, 1946, hereby is corrected to read as follows: 'Provided further, That the Secretary of State, or such official as he may designate, is authorized to transfer from any of the foregoing amounts to any department or independent establishment of the Government for participation in the foregoing programs, sums for expenditure by such department or establishment for the purposes hereof, and sums so transfered shall be available for expenditure in accordance with the provisions hereof and, to the extent determined by the Secretary of State, in accordance with the law governing expenditures of the department or establishment to which transferred: Provided further, That transfers of funds to participating agencies for the programs set forth in sections 302 to 305 of the act shall be approved by the President prior to such transfers.' "

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I was very much interested in listening to my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK], whose district is only a couple of counties away from mine.

His own estimate of the national farm income has gone up $3,000,000,000 since last week, as you can find by looking at his own statement in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and that is about the way the New Deal does things; they just go up by leaps and bounds; anytime they want to put the price up they just add a few billion dollars at will.

The facts are that in the spring of 1939, after 7 years of "the more abundant life," some of the farmers in his district were receiving less than 2 cents a quart for their milk. It has nothing to do with politics; it is an economic fact that in 1939, after this 7 years of the "more abundant life," they foreclosed more farms in the State of Wisconsin than ever before in the history of the Federal land bank.

Now, I realize it is not pleasant for you over here to have anyone showing you how you are spending and spending and spending. Let us keep this record straight and let us realize that in 1939 the whole New Deal agricultural program had bogged down. We had 54-cent-plus wheat and we had 5-cent-plus hogs. We had 8-cent-plus cotton and the producers were, in my judgment, in nearly as bad shape as they were in 1932, except that their agony was prolonged a little longer in 1939. If they had had 1932 prices, they would have been put out of their misery just a little quicker.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I yield.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman stated that in 1939 there were more foreclosures than ever before—foreclosures by whom?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I said that in the State of Wisconsin there were more farm foreclosures by the Federal land bank than ever before in the history of the Federal land bank.

Now, it is a fact that the sooner we realize that these people who live on the farms have really gone to school and can kind of figure some of these things out, the better off we are going to be.

I noticed in one of my district papers that some peanut politician in my district said I was a backwoodsman. Well, it does so happen that in my younger days I did roll some logs in that county but I never really saw "logrolling" until I came to Washington and saw the New Deal in action.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I yield.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Did I understand the gentleman to say that in 1938 or 1939 we had 8-cent cotton?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I say that in August of 1939 you had 8-cent plus cotton; yes. The farmers received it. If the gentleman does not believe it I will send it to him.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I wish the gentleman would.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Yes; I will surely be pleased to do so.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I yield.

Mr. ERVIN. If I interpret the gentleman's remarks correctly he is somewhat homesick for Hoover now, is he not?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I wish the gentleman would restate his remark.

Mr. ERVIN. I was just asking if the gentleman was not suffering nostalgia for Hoover's administration.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I have not said anything about anybody's administration, but I am just saying that as far as I am concerned I may be "a backwoodsman" but at least I know enough to catch on to the schemes of the New Deal and I think I know what it is trying to accomplish.

The Clerk read as follows:

Military assistance, Philippines: Any or all of the appropriations of the Military Establishment for the fiscal year 1947 shall be available, in a total amount of not to exceed $19,750,000, for all expenses necessary to enable the President through the War Department to carry out the provisions of the Republic of the Philippines Military Assistance Act.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the remainder of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the joint resolution back to the House with the recommendation that the joint resolution do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BONNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 390) making additional appropriations for the fiscal year 1947, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the resolution back to the House with the recommendation that the resolution do pass.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the resolution.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 251, nays 0, not voting 179, as follows:

TEMPORARY EXTENSION OF TIME FOR FILING APPLICATIONS FOR PATENTS, ETC.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk proceeded to read the statement.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5223) to extend temporarily the time for filing applications for patents, for taking action in the United States Patent Office with respect thereto, for preventing proof of acts abroad with respect to the making of an invention, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

Amendments Nos. 1, 6, 12, and 25: Each of these amendments strikes out the word "passage" contained in the House bill and inserts in lieu thereof the word "approval". The conference is agreed that the terms "approval of this Act" and "passage of this Act" have the same meaning, i. e., that they refer to a compliance with all forms necessary to make the bill a valid law. There are also other instances where the term "passage of this Act" is used in the House bill. The Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 2: The House bill provides that the rights of priority provided by section 4887 of the Revised Statutes for the filing of applications for patent (if such rights had not expired on September 8, 1939, or have arisen since September 8, 1939) shall be extended until the expiration of twelve months from the passage of the bill in favor of citizens of the United States and of certain aliens. This amendment provides that such rights shall be extended to bona fide residents of the United States. The Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 3: This amendment clarifies the language of the House bill. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 4: This amendment provides that the extension of the rights of priority referred to in amendment No. 2 shall not apply to any patent unless a written request therefor is supplemented by suitable proof of the foreign application supplied to the Commissioner of Patents.

The language of this amendment is intended as a substitute for the language of the House bill deleted by amendment No. 7. The Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 5: The House bill provided that the extension of the rights of priority referred to in amendment No. 2 shall not apply to any patent unless a written request was made for such extension during the pendency of the application for such patent in the United States Patent Office, or within 6 months after the passage of the bill. This amendment provides that the request may be made within 12 months after the passage of the bill. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 7: This amendment deletes from the House bill language requiring that a request for the extension of the rights of priority referred to in amendment No. 2 must be accompanied by a copy of the original foreign application and certain other documents. The House recedes with an amendment which restores the language of the House bill and adds thereto (1) a provision that if the original foreign application has been destroyed, other evidence satisfactory to the Commissioner of Patents pertaining thereto may be accepted in lieu of a copy of such original foreign application, and (2) a further provision which has the effect of permitting the applicant or patentee, if the foreign application was not made by the inventor himself, to submit an affidavit that such application was filed on behalf of the inventor.

Amendment No. 8: The House bill provides that no patent granted or validated by reason of the extension of the rights of priority referred to in amendment No. 2 shall furnish a basis for a claim against the United States. This amendment limits such immunity with respect to any such patent to claims (1) on account of the manufacture, use, or sale during the 12 months after the termination of World War II, of the invention covered by such patent by or for the United States, or by or for governments allied with the United States in such war, or (2) on account of the use or sale of articles embodying such invention so manufactured, and on hand at the end of 12 months after the termination of World War II. The Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 9: The House bill contains a provision to the effect that the extension of the rights of priority referred to in amendment No. 2 shall not affect the right of any citizen of the United States, or of any firm, association, etc., who, before the passage of the bill, was in possession of any rights in any patents or applications for patents conflicting with rights in patents granted or validated by such extension, to exercise, such rights. FRANK W. BOYKIN,
FRITZ G. LANHAM,
FRED A. HARTLEY, JR.,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. LANHAM (interrupting the reading of the statement). Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the statement has already been published in the daily RECORD, I ask unanimous consent that further reading be dispensed with.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the conference report?

Mr. LANHAM. Yes; I shall be pleased to do so.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is a counterpart of the Nolan bill that was passed after the last war and it is even more important legislation after this war than the Nolan bill was after the last one.

This is for the protection of the American industry and American ingenuity. Under the patent laws of the various countries there are certain limitations of time within which if a patent is perfected in one country there must be an application made for it in another country. Naturally, these American industries during the period of this war with reference to their applications for patents on their inventions and the patents that they had pending could not comply with the terms of the law because the transportation systems were such that they could not get the necessary papers to the appropriate places. This bill simply extends the time for a year as did the Nolan bill after the last war in which American industry can protect itself.

It is an agreed report by all the conferees, and it is very important from the standpoint of American business.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the statement may be considered as read.

There was no objection.

The conference report was agreed to. A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

HOSPITAL SURVEY AND CONSTRUCTION ACT

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (S. 191) to amend the Public Health Service Act to authorize grants to the States for surveying their hospitals and public-health centers and for planning construction of additional facilities, and to authorize grants to assist in such construction, and ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers on the part of the House be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

HOSPITAL SURVEY AND CONSTRUCTION ACT—CONFERENCE REPORT

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the statement of the managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I did not understand that the unanimous-consent request to read the statement in lieu of the conference report was granted.

The SPEAKER. The request was made before the point of order of no quorum was made. The Chair put the question at that time, and there was no objection.

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. I was under the impression that that had been withheld until after the call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the statement.

The Clerk proceeded to read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 191) to amend the Public Health Service Act to authorize grants to the States for surveying their hospitals and public health centers and for planning construction of additional facilities, and to authorize grants to assist in such construction, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following: "That this Act may be cited as the 'Hospital Survey and Construction Act.'

"SEC. 2. The Public Health Service Act (consisting of titles I to V, inclusive, of the Act of July 1, 1944, 58 Stat. 682) is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following new title:

"'TITLE VI—CONSTRUCTION OF HOSPITALS

"'PART A—DECLARATION OF PURPOSE

"'SEC. 601. The purpose of this title is to assist the several States—

"'(a) to inventory their existing hospitals (as defined in section 631 (e)), to survey the need for construction of hospitals, and to develop programs for construction of such public and other nonprofit hospitals as will, in conjunction with existing facilities, afford the necessary physical facilities for furnishing adequate hospital, clinic, and similar services to all their people; and

"'(b) to construct public and other nonprofit hospitals in accordance with such programs.

"'PART B—SURVEYS AND PLANNING

"'Authorization of appropriation

"'SEC. 611. In order to assist the States in carrying out the purposes of section 601 (a), there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $3,000,000, to remain available until expended. The sums appropriated under this section shall be used for making payments to States which have submitted, and had approved by the Surgeon General, State applications for funds for carrying out such purposes.

"'State applications

"'SEC. 612. (a) To be approved a State application for funds for carrying out the purposes of section 601 (a) must—

"'(1) designate a single State agency as the sole agency for carrying out such purposes: Provided, That after a State plan has been approved under section 623, any further survey or programing functions shall be carried out, pursuant to section 623 (a) (10), by the agency designated in accordance with section 623 (a) (1);

"'(2) provide for the designation of a State advisory council, which shall include representatives of nongovernment organizations or groups, and of State agencies, concerned with the operation, construction, or utilization of hospitals, including representatives of the consumers of hospital services selected from among persons familiar with the need for such services in urban or rural areas, to consult with the State agency in carrying out such purposes;

"'(3) provide for making an inventory and survey in accordance with section 601 (a) containing all information required by the Surgeon General, and for developing a program in accordance with section 601 (a) and with regulations prescribed under section 622; and

"'(4) provide that the State agency will make such reports, in such form and containing such information, as the Surgeon General may from time to time reasonably require, and give the Surgeon General, upon demand, access to the records on which such reports are based.

"'(b) The Surgeon General shall approve any application for funds which complies with the provisions of subsection (a).

"'Allotments to States

"'SEC. 613. (a) Each State for which a State application under section 612 has been approved shall be entitled to an allotment of such proportion of any appropriation made pursuant to section 611 as its population bears to the population of all the States, and within such allotment it shall be entitled to receive 33⅓ per centum of its expenditures in carrying out the purposes of section 601 (a) in accordance with its application: Provided, That no such allotment to any State shall be less than $10,000. The Surgeon General shall from time to time estimate the sum to which each State will be entitled under this section, during such ensuing period as he may determine, and shall thereupon certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the amount so estimated, reduced or increased, as the case may be, by any sum by which the Surgeon General finds that his estimate for any prior period was greater or less than the amount to which the State was entitled for such period. The Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon, prior to audit or settlement by the General Accounting Office, pay to the State, at the time or times fixed by the Surgeon General, the amount so certified.

"'(b) Any funds paid to a State under this section and not expended for the purposes for which paid shall be repaid to the Treasury of the United States.

"'PART C—CONSTRUCTION OF HOSPITALS AND RELATED FACILITIES

"'Authorization of appropriations

"'SEC. 621. In order to assist the States in carrying out the purposes of section 601 (b) there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for each of the four succeeding fiscal years, the sum of $75,000,000 for the construction of public and other nonprofit hospitals; and there are further authorized to be appropriated for such construction the sums provided in section 624. The sums appropriated pursuant to this section shall be used for making payments to States which have submitted, and had approved by the Surgeon General, State plans for carrying out the purposes of section 601 (b); and for making payments to political subdivisions of, and public or other nonprofit agencies in, such States.

"'General regulations

"'SEC. 622. Within six months after the enactment of this title, the Surgeon General, with the approval of the Federal Hospital Council and the Administrator, shall by general regulation prescribe—

"'(a) The number of general hospital beds required to provide adequate hospital services to the people residing in a State, and the general method or methods by which such beds shall be distributed among base areas, intermediate areas, and rural areas: Provided, That for the purposes of this title, the total of such beds for any State shall not exceed four and one-half per thousand population, except that in States having less than twelve and more than six persons per square mile the limit shall be five beds per thousand population, and in States having six persons or less per square mile the limit shall be five and one-half beds per thousand population; but if, in any area (as defined in the regulations) within the State, there are more beds than required by the standards prescribed by the Surgeon General, the excess over such standards may be eliminated in calculating this maximum allowance.

"'(b) The number of beds required to provide adequate hospital services for tuberculous patients, mental patients, and chronic-disease patients in a State, and the general method or methods by which such beds shall be distributed throughout the State: Provided, That for the purposes of this title the total number of beds for tuberculous patients shall not exceed two and one-half times the average annual deaths from tuberculosis in the State over the five-year period from 1940 to 1944, inclusive, the total number of beds for mental patients shall not exceed five per thousand population, and the total number of beds for chronic-disease patients shall not exceed two per thousand population.

"'(c) The number of public health centers and the general method of distribution of such centers throughout the State, which for the purposes of this title, shall not exceed one per thirty thousand population, except that in States having less than twelve persons per square mile, it shall not exceed one per twenty thousand population.

"'(d) The general manner in which the State agency shall determine the priority of projects based on the relative need of different sections of the population and of different areas lacking adequate hospital facilities, giving special consideration to hospitals serving rural communities and areas with relatively small financial resources.

"'(e) General standards of construction and equipment for hospitals of different classes and in different types of location.

"'(f) That the State plan shall provide for adequate hospital facilities for the people residing in a State, without discrimination on account of race, creed, or color, and shall provide for adequate hospital facilities for persons unable to pay therefor. Such regulation may require that before approval of any application for a hospital or addition to a hospital is recommended by a State agency, assurance shall be received by the State from the applicant that (1) such hospital or addition to a hospital will be made available to all persons residing in the territorial area of the applicant, without discrimination on account of race, creed, or color, but an exception shall be made in cases where separate hospital facilities are provided for separate population groups, if the plan makes equitable provision on the basis of need for facilities and services of like quality for each such group; and (2) there will be made available in each such hospital or addition to a hospital a reasonable volume of hospital services to persons unable to pay therefor, but an exception shall be made if such a requirement is not feasible from a financial standpoint.

"'(g) General methods of administration of the plan by the designated State agency, subject to the limitations set forth in section 623 (a) (6) and (8).

"'State plans

"'SEC. 623. (a) After such regulations have been issued, any State desiring to take advantage of this part may submit a State plan for carrying out the purposes of section 601 (b). Such State plan must—

"'(1) designate a single State agency as the sole agency for the administration of the plan, or designate such agency as the sole agency for supervising the administration of the plan;

"'(2) contain satisfactory evidence that the State agency designated in accordance with paragraph (1) hereof will have authority to carry out such plan in conformity with this part;

"'(3) provided for the designation of a State advisory council which shall include representatives of nongovernment organizations or groups, and of State agencies, concerned with the operation, construction, or utilization of hospitals, including representatives of the consumers of hospital services selected from among persons familiar with the need for such services in urban or rural areas, to consult with the State agency in carrying out such plans;

"'(4) set forth a hospital construction program (A) which is based on a State-wide inventory of existing hospitals and survey of need; (B) which conforms with the regulations prescribed by the Surgeon General under section 622 (a), (b), and (c); (C) which, in the case of a State which has developed a program under part B of this title, conforms to the program so developed except for any modification required in order to comply with regulations prescribed pursuant to section 622 (a), (b), and (c), and except for any modification recommended by the State agency designated pursuant to paragraph (1) of this subsection and approved by the Surgeon General; and (D) which meets the requirements as to lack of discrimination on account of race, creed, or color, and for furnishing needed hospital services to persons unable to pay therefor, required by regulations prescribed under section 622 (f);

"'(5) set forth the relative need determined in accordance with the regulations prescribed under section 622 (d) for the several projects included in such programs, and provide for the construction, insofar as financial resources available therefor and for maintenance and operation make possible, in the order of such relative need;

"'(6) provide such methods of administration of the State plan, including methods relating to the establishment and maintenance of personnel standards on a merit basis (except that the Surgeon General shall exercise no authority with respect to the selection, tenure of office, or compensation of any individual employed in accordance with such methods), as the Surgeon General prescribes by regulation under section 622 (g);

"'(7) provide minimum standards (to be fixed in the discretion of the State) for the maintenance and operation of hospitals which receive Federal aid under this part;

"'(8) provide for affording to every applicant for a construction project an opportunity for hearing before the State agency;

"'(9) provide that the State agency will make such reports in such form and containing such information as the Surgeon General may from time to time reasonably require, and give the Surgeon General, upon demand, access to the records upon which such information is based; and

"'(10) provide that the State agency will from time to time review its hospital construction program and submit to the Surgeon General any modifications thereof which it considers necessary.

"'(b) The Surgeon General shall approve any State plan and any modification thereof which complies with the provisions of subsection (a). If any such plan or modification thereof shall have been disapproved by the Surgeon General for failure to comply with subsection (a), the Federal Hospital Council shall, upon request of the State agency, afford it an opportunity for hearing. If such Council determines that the plan or modification complies with the provisions of such subsection, the Surgeon General shall thereupon approve such plan or modification.

"'(c) No changes in a State plan shall be required within two years after initial approval thereof, or within two years after any change thereafter required therein, by reason of any change in the regulations prescribed pursuant to section 622, except with the consent of the State, or in accordance with further action by the Congress.

"'(d) If any State, prior to July 1, 1948, has not enacted legislation providing that compliance with minimum standards of maintenance and operation shall be required in the case of hospitals which shall have received Federal aid under this title, such State shall not be entitled to any further allotments under section 624.

"'Allotments to States

"'SEC. 624. Each State for which a State plan has been approved prior to or during a fiscal year shall be entitled for such year to an allotment of a sum bearing the same ratio to the sums authorized to be appropriated pursuant to section 621 for such year as the product of (a) the population of such State and (b) the square of its allotment percentage (as defined in section 631 (a)) bears to the sum of the corresponding products for all of the States. The amount of the allotment to a State shall be available, in accordance with the provisions of this part, for payment of 40 per centum of the cost of approved projects within such State. The Surgeon General shall calculate the allotments to be made under this section and notify the Secretary of the Treasury of the amounts thereof. Sums allotted to a State for a fiscal year for construction and remaining unobligated at the end of such year shall remain available to such State for such purpose for the next fiscal year (and for such year only), in addition to the sums allotted for such State for such next fiscal year. Any amount of the sum authorized to be appropriated for a fiscal year which is not appropriated for such year, or which is not allotted in such year by reason of the failure of any State or States to have plans approved under this part, and any amount allotted to a State but remaining unobligated at the end of the period for which it is available to such State, is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the next fiscal year in addition to the sum otherwise authorized under section 621.

"'Approval of projects and payments for construction

"'Sec. 625. (a) For each project for construction pursuant to a State plan approved under this part, there shall be submitted to the Surgeon General through the State agency an application by the State or a political subdivision thereof or by a public or other nonprofit agency. Such application shall set forth (1) a description of the site for such project, (2) plans and specifications therefor in accordance with the regulations prescribed by the Surgeon General under section 622 (e), (3) reasonable assurance that title to such site is or will be vested solely in the applicant, (4) reasonable assurance that adequate financial support will be available for the construction of the project and for its maintenance and operation when completed, and (5) reasonable assurance that the rates of pay for laborers and mechanics engaged in construction of the project will be not less than the prevailing local wage rates for similar work as determined in accordance with Public Law 403 of the Seventy-fourth Congress, approved August 30, 1935, as amended. The Surgeon General shall approve such application if sufficient funds to pay 40 per centum of the cost of construction of such project are available from the allotment to the State, and if the Surgeon General finds (A) that the application contains such reasonable assurance as to title, financial support, and payment of prevailing rates of wages, (B) that the plans and specifications are in accord with the regulations prescribed pursuant to section 622, (C) that the application is in conformity with the State plan approved under section 623 and contains an assurance that the applicant will conform to the applicable requirements of the State plan and of the regulations prescribed pursuant to section 622 (f) regarding the provision of facilities without discrimination on account of race, creed, or color, and for furnishing needed hospital facilities for persons unable to pay therefor, and an assurance that the applicant will conform to State standards for operation and maintenance, and (D) that it has been approved and recommended by the State agency and is entitled to priority over other projects within the State in accordance with the regulations prescribed pursuant to section 622 (d). No application shall be disapproved until the Surgeon General has afforded the State agency an opportunity for a hearing.

"'(b) Upon approving an application under this section, the Surgeon General shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury an amount equal to 40 per centum of the estimated cost of construction of the project and designate the appropriation from which it is to be paid. Such certification shall provide for payment to the State, except that if the State is not authorized by law to make payments to the applicant the certification shall provide for payment direct to the applicant. Upon certification by the State agency, based upon inspection by it, that work has been performed upon a project, or purchases have been made, in accordance with the approved plans and specifications, and that payment of an installment is due to the applicant, the Surgeon General shall certify such installment for payment by the Secretary of the Treasury; except that if the Surgeon General, after investigation or otherwise, has ground to believe that a default has occurred requiring action pursuant to section 632 (a) he may, upon giving notice of hearing pursuant to such subsection, withhold certification pending action based on such hearing.

"'(c) Amendment of any approved application shall be subject to approval in the same manner as an original application. Certification under subsection (b) may be amended, either upon approval of an amendment of the application or upon revision of the estimated cost of a project. An amended certification may direct that any additional payment be made from the applicable allotment for the fiscal year in which such amended certification is made.

"'(d) The funds paid under this section for the construction of an approved project shall be used solely for carrying out such project as so approved.

"'(e) If any hospital for which funds have been paid under this section shall, at any time within twenty years after the completion of construction, (A) be sold or transferred to any person, agency, or organization, (1) which is not qualified to file an application under this section, or (2) which is not approved as a transferee by the State agency designated pursuant to section 623 (a) (1), or its successor, or (B) cease to be a nonprofit hospital as defined in section 631 (g), the United States shall be entitled to recover from either the transferor or the transferee (or, in the case of a hospital which has ceased to be a nonprofit hospital, from the owners thereof) 40 per centum of the then value of such hospital, as determined by agreement of the parties or by action brought in the district court of the United States for the district in which such hospital is situated.

Each appointed member shall hold office for a term of four years, except that any member appointed to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed shall be appointed for the remainder of such term, and the terms of office of the members first taking office shall expire, as designated by the Administrator at the time of appointment, two at the end of the first year, two at the end of the second year, two at the end of the third year, and two at the end of the fourth year after the date of appointment. An appointed member shall not be eligible to serve continuously for more than two terms but shall be eligible for reappointment if he has not served immediately preceding his reappointment. The Council is authorized to appoint such special advisory and technical committees as may be useful in carrying out its functions. Appointed Council members and members of advisory or technical committees, while serving on business of the Council, shall receive compensation at rates fixed by the Administrator, but not exceeding $25 per day, and shall also be entitled to receive an allowance for actual and necessary travel and subsistence expenses while so serving away from their places of residence. STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 191) to amend the Public Health Service Act to authorize grants to the States for surveying their hospitals and public-health centers and for planning construction of additional facilities, and to authorize grants to assist in such construction, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

In the following statement section references (except the reference to sec. 3) are to sections of the new title VI, which it is proposed by this legislation to add to the Public Health Service Act.

Surveys and planning: The Senate bill (in sec. 613 (a)) provided that the Federal funds allotted to a State for surveys and planning should be available to pay 50 percent of expenditures made by the State for such purposes; and authority was granted (sec. 613 (b)) to pay 100 percent of such expenditures if no State funds were available for the purpose, subject to a requirement, however, that in any such case an amount equal to 50 percent of the State's expenditures (less repayments made by the State) should be deducted from allotments to the State under section 624. The House amendment reduced to 33⅓ percent the share of the State's expenditures for the payment of which the allotted Federal funds would be available, and eliminated section 613 (b). On these points the conference substitute is the same as the House amendment.

The Senate bill (sec. 611) authorized, for assistance to the States for surveys and planning, the appropriation of $5,000,000 plus sums necessary to carry out the provisions of section 613 (b). The House amendment reduced this authorization to $3,000,000. On this point the conference substitute is the same as the House amendment.

Limitation on allotments: Section 623 (d) in the Senate bill provided that if any State, prior to July 1, 1947, has not enacted legislation providing that compliance with minimum standards of maintenance and operation shall be required in the case of hospitals receiving aid, then the State shall not be entitled to any further allotments under section 624. The House amendment changed the above date to July 1, 1948. The conference agreement accepts the House change.

Federal share in case of approved projects: The Senate bill provided, in the case of specific construction projects, that the amount of Federal funds to be made available should be a "Federal percentage" of the cost. The "Federal percentage" would have varied according to the State in which the project was located. In the case of any State, it would have been based on the State's per capita income as compared with the per capita income of the continental United States (excluding Alaska), and would have been not more than 75 percent and not less than 33⅓ percent. The "Federal percentage" in the case of Alaska and Hawaii would have been 50 percent, and in the case of Puerto Rico would have been 75 percent. By the House amendment these provisions were modified so as to provide that the Federal payment should be 33⅓ percent of the costs in all cases. The conference agreement accepts this House change, except that the Federal payment is increased to 40 percent.

Definition of "construction": Under section 631 (h) as contained in the Senate bill the term "construction" was defined to include construction of new buildings, expansion, remodeling, and alteration of existing buildings, initial equipment of any such buildings, and landscaping the site thereof; and was also defined to include architects' fees, legal counsel, and all other expenses incidental to construction; but excluded the cost of offsite improvements and, except with respect to public health centers, the cost of the acquisition of land. The House amendment modified this definition by excluding landscaping of sites and legal counsel, and also eliminated the words "and all other expenses incidental to construction." The conference agreement accepts these House changes.

Opportunity for hearing; judicial review: Section 625 (a) as contained in the Senate bill provided that no application for approval of a construction project should be disapproved until the Surgeon General had afforded the applicant and the State agency an opportunity for hearing. The House amendment modified this provision so that opportunity for hearing is required to be given only to the State agency through which the application was submitted. The conference substitute includes this House change.

By section 632 (b) in the Senate bill it was provided that if the Surgeon General refuses to approve any construction application under section 625 the applicant may appeal to the United States circuit court of appeals for the circuit in which the State is located, and the subsection specifies the jurisdiction which the court is to have. The House amendment modified this provision so that this right of appeal instead of being given to the application is given to the State agency through which the application was submitted. This House change is included in the conference substitute. The conference substitute also provides that the "State agency," rather than the "State," shall have the right of appeal from a withholding of certification by the Surgeon General under section 632 (a).

Federal Hospital Council: Section 633 (b) in the Senate bill, providing for a Federal Hospital Council, provided that such Council should consist of the Surgeon General, to serve as Chairman ex officio, and eight members appointed by the Administrator. It provided that five of the eight appointed members shall be persons who are outstanding in the fields pertaining to hospital and health activities, the other three to be appointed to represent the consumers of hospital services. The House amendment modified this provision so as to provide that four shall be persons who are outstanding in the fields pertaining to hospital and health activities, and that four shall be appointed to represent the consumers of hospital services. The conference substitute includes the Senate provisions on this point.

Additional officers in Regular Corps of Public Health Service: Section 3 of the House amendment amended section 208 (b), as amended, of the Public Health Service Act to authorize the appointment to grades in the Regular Corps of the Public Health Service above that of senior assistant, but not to a grade above that of director, of officers to assist in carrying out the purposes of the new title VI proposed to be added by this legislation, with the restriction that not more than 20 officers so appointed shall hold office at the same time. The bill as it passed the Senate contained no such provision. The conference agreement includes this provision.
